acquire by adverse possession the limited interest to which he was entitled at the mortgagor's death, namely that of a mortgagee. [p. 397, col. 1.]

The Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act makes no provision with reference to profits after the date of the institution of a redemption suit, and no presumption arises that the mortgagee is, apart from the provisions of the Act, not entitled to retain possession after the date of the institution of the suit. [p. 397, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Belgaum, in Appeal No. 223 of 1910, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Gokak, in Civil Suit No. 150 of 1909.

Messrs. Nilkarth Atmaram and J. G. Rele, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. R. Bakhle, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT—Two points have been argued in this appeal; first, that the mortgagee, who is sued for redemption under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act in respect of certain watan property, must be taken to have been in adverse possession, and to have acquired an absolute title by reason of the provisions of section 5 of the Watan Act, which render the mortgage invalid after the death of the original watandar-mortgagor. But the Indian Limitation Act cannot be invoked to enforce any such conclusion, for the presumption is that unless there is some definite indication on the part of the person in possession that he will, from a certain date, claim as absolute owner and not as mortgagee, he can only acquire by adverse possession the limited interest to which he was entitled at the mortgagor's death, namely, that of a mortgagee. He, therefore, remains a mortgagee for the purpose of the redemption suit, even assuming that he has been in possession for more than 12 years since the death of the original mortgagor.

The second point is that the learned Judge has decreed mesne profits, that is, the net receipts, from the property as from the date of suit against the mortgagee. It is to be observed in the first place that no such claim has, so far as the industry of the Pleaders has been able to discover, ever been allowed since the passing of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act in 1879. If allowed, it must be based on the assumption that the mortgagee has, from the date of suit, been in possession of property which he is not entitled to retain in his possession under the contract between the parties, for the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act itself makes no provision with reference to profits after the date of the institution of the suit. But the plaintiff, by filing a suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and claiming an account on the footing of section 13, which gives the go-by to the provisions of the mortgage contract, renders those provisions irrelevant and it is, therefore, impossible for the Court to discover whether the mortgagee would, if the contractual relations were preserved, be entitled to remain in possession between the date of suit and the date of the decree. Speaking generally, the enforcement of the provisions of section 13 places the mortgagor in a much more favourable position than he would be in if he relied upon the terms of the contract and no presumption arises that the mortgagee is, apart from the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, not entitled to retain possession after the date of the institution of the suit. It appears to us that this is a case in which we ought to apply the principle laid down by Sir Charles Sargent in Janoji v. Janoji (1), in which he says: "Remembering that the Act encroaches on existing legal rights, it should, on general principle, not be construed to extend beyond the particular object which the Legislature had in view in passing the Act, and which in the preamble is said in express terms to be to relieve the agriculturist in the Dekkhan from indebtedness. That object is effected when the agriculturist is enabled to discharge his debt and recover his land on far easier terms than those which he has contracted for..."

We, therefore, vary the decree of the lower Appellate Court by deleting the provisions with regard to the payment of mesne profits. The appellant has partly succeeded and partly failed; therefore, each party must bear his own costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Decree varied.

Letter Patent Appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1108 of 1908, against that of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 5th February 1908, reversing that of the Munsif of Ranchi, dated the 15th July 1907.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—The plaintiff purchased the disputed lands in execution of a decree against one Harihar in 1899 and took delivery of possession, but was resisted in the actual possession of the same by the defendants who claim the same under a zar-i-peshgi deed executed by one Kripal Narain in 1892. The defendants in their written statement pleaded that the lands were not the lands of Harihar and the plaintiff had, therefore, no right to the same. The main issues, therefore, were whether the disputed land formed part of the lands purchased by the plaintiff and whether the defendants held the same under a zar-i-peshgi from Kripal Narain. It appears that Kripal Narain with Harihar and others formed a joint family. Harihar brought a suit for partition in 1888 in which Kripal filed his written statement in 1889; pending the suit the zar-i-peshgi was executed by Kripal Narain, who was evidently the managing member of the family, before the partition suit which was decreed in 1893, the disputed lands falling to the share of Harihar. The Court of first instance held that the principle of lis pendens applied and the zar-i-peshgi being executed pending the suit for partition could not prevail against the ultimate decree. The defendants never pleaded that the zar-i-peshgi was executed by Kripal Narain as the karta of the family and even if they had taken such a plea it would be at once met by the fact that after the suit for partition Kripal could not be said to be the karta and in fact Kripal, so far from stating in the zar-i-peshgi deed that he was granting it as the karta, stated that he was entering into the transaction for his own necessity. The learned Judicial Commissioner, however, raised the plea in appeal and called upon the parties to adduce evidence as to the transaction being on behalf of the family for family necessity. Two previous zar-i-peshgi leases, one executed by Kripal, Anant and Birinchi for Rs. 100 and another executed by Kripal for Rs. 50, were put in and a co-sharer examined as a witness. As the defendant had been misled as to the existence of these documents when the case was in the first Court, the admission of these documents may have been competent and also the examination of any witness as to the formal proof of these documents. That would not have materially affected the case as originally made, but the learned Judge relies on the evidence of the co-sharer witness as proving that the debt was for meeting family necessity and in doing so I think he has gone beyond what the law authorises him to do. Section 568 of the Civil Procedure Code does authorise him to admit evidence in appeal when on hearing the case he thinks that such evidence is required to enable him to pronounce judgment; it does not authorise him to make a new case not justified by the pleadings. See Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsular Railway Company (1). The evidence of Beni Narain, therefore, so far as it goes beyond making out a formal proof of the new documents must be left out of consideration. Then the documents proved show that a part of the consideration was borrowed jointly by Kripal, Anant and Birinchi at a time when the family was admittedly joint. That alone, however, does not affect Harihar who was not a party to the same, and the very fact that Kripal took the whole debt upon himself after the partition suit shows that the debt was not treated as a joint family debt. Apart from the question of lis pendens, therefore, the zar-i-peshgi of 1892 could not bind the share of Harihar. Coming to the question of lis pendens it is contended on the authority of Khan Ali v. Pestonji Eduljee Guydar (2) that the principle is not attracted by a partition suit in which there is no dispute as to shares. This case has been distinguished in Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Birdhan (3) and Jogendra Chunder Ghose v. Fulkumari Dassi (4), and it may be distinguished here as limited to the facts of the case which related to a lease pending a partition suit in which the existence of the lease may have been taken into consideration in making the allotments. The present is a case of mortgage. In the case of Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdhry (5), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a person taking a mortgage from one co-sharer takes the security subject to the right of other sharers to enforce a partition and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. He would take the subject of the pledge in the new form which it had assumed (by the partition). The same principle was followed in the cases of Hem Chunder Ghose v. Thako Moni Debi (6), Lakshman v. Gopal (7), Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Birdhan (3). If that be the law in respect of mortgages before a partition suit is put in, there can be no doubt that a mortgage executed during a partition suit must be followed against the share allotted to the mortgagor and cannot affect the share of a non-mortgagor. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court, therefore, is set aside and the decree of the first Court restored with costs.

Babu Joges Chandra Dey and Mouli Nurdin Ahmed, for the Appellant.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole point in this case is a very simple one and it is whether the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was justified in admitting evidence which became relevant because of the discovery of two documents which had previously been out of the reach of defendant No. 2, who is the appellant before us. We can entertain no doubt that the Judge was entitled to admit the documents. Indeed that is conceded before us. The oral evidence that was admitted was a natural consequence of the admission of the documentary evidence, and we think there can be no legal objection to its admission. If that be so, it is conceded that the findings of the lower Appellate Court are conclusive.

We must, therefore, reverse the judgment of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee, and restore the decree of the Judicial Commissioner. The respondent before us must pay the costs of both appeals in the High Court.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 93—Attempt to enforce—Unsuccessful attempt to have lease recorded under Record of Rights, whether attempt to enforce—Recovery of rent under lease, whether attempt to enforce.

In August 1908, a landlord applied to the mamlatdar of his District for recording a lease under the Record of Rights. The lessee challenged the document as a forgery, and upon this the mamlatdar returned it to the applicant without recording it. The lessor then applied to the Collector who, in August 1909 ordered the lease to be recorded. On the strength of that record the landlord sued and recovered from the lessee a part of the rent due under the lease. Within three years of that recovery the lessee brought a suit to recover back the rent he had paid on the footing of the alleged lease being a forgery:

Held, that under Article 93 of the Limitation Act, the suit was within time, inasmuch as the words "attempt to enforce" in the Article were applicable to the attempt to recover rent under the lease and not to the unsuccessful attempt to have it recorded. [p. 400, col. 2.]

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY v. M. K. ROY.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Kanara, in Appeal No. 173 of 1913, reversing the decree passed by, and remanding the suit to, the Subordinate Judge at Kumta, in Civil Suit No. 144 of 1912.

Mr. S. M. Kaikini, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in this case, who is now the appellant, applied to the mamlatdar of the District in which the land in suit is situate for record, under the Record of Rights Act, of a lease under which he claimed to be entitled to a rent of 400 cocoanuts. That application was made in or about the beginning of August 1908, and upon notice being given to the respondent-plaintiff, who was the alleged lessee, the plaintiff complained that the document was a forgery. The mamlatdar, thereupon, declined to record it and returned it to the applicant. The applicant was not satisfied and applied to the Collector to have the document recorded. That application was not disposed of until the following year, and on the 11th of August 1909, the Collector ordered that the lease should be recorded, and from that date, it was recorded in the Record of Rights in effect that the defendant was the landlord of the plaintiff. On the strength of that record, the defendant sued in the Mamlatdar's Court for enforcement of the terms of the alleged lease and recovered on various occasions cocoanuts of the value of upwards Rs. 40. Within three years of the recovery of those cocoanuts the plaintiff brought this suit to recover back the value on the footing of the alleged lease being a forgery. It is contended that the suit is barred under Article 93 of the Indian Limitation Act, on the ground that it is filed more than three years after the date of an attempt to enforce it against the plaintiff. Now the attempt to enforce it for the purpose of recovering the rent under it was made well within three years. So the appellant is driven to the contention that an attempt took place at an earlier date.

The attempt to have it recorded under the Record of Rights which is relied upon was made in August 1908 and failed, and it is contended that although the plaintiff had nothing to fear for upwards of a year owing to the success of his contentions before the mamlatdar, he nevertheless ought to have sued to have that instrument declared to be a forgery. It appears to us that an attempt, such as that made by the defendant, to have the instrument recorded under the Record of Rights Act cannot be put higher than an attempt to have a document registered in a case in which registration is necessary and the particular attempt relied on in the present case cannot be put higher than an unsuccessful attempt to register. Now cases of registration of forged documents, or documents which, the plaintiff contends, are forged, are dealt with by Article 92, and limitation for the purpose of a suit to declare the forgery of the instrument runs from the date when the registration, not the attempted registration, becomes known to the plaintiff. We do not think that it can be contended that an attempt to register is an attempt to enforce, otherwise there would be no object in a special Article with reference to issue and registration as distinct from the Article relating to attempts to enforce, and if registration is not an attempt to enforce, it is clear, we think, that the attempt to record is not an attempt to enforce. In their ordinary and natural meaning the words "attempt to enforce" would be applicable to an attempt to recover rent under a lease, and the first attempt of that kind took place within three years of the institution of the suit. We are, therefore, of opinion that the suit is within time. We affirm the order of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 75—Passenger's luggage booked, loss of—Liability of Company.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. v. M. K. ROY.

The luggage of a passenger which is booked is a package within the meaning of section 75 of the Railways Act. If the luggage contains silver and silk as regards which the passenger does not make any declaration at the time of booking, the Railway Company is not liable for its loss. [p. 40, col 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the First Additional Judge of Aligarh.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent under the following circumstances:—The plaintiff travelled on the 3rd of July 1912 as a passenger from Howrah to Khurja by the up Umballa express train on the East Indian Railway. He had three parcels of luggage: two bundles and a steel trunk. These were weighed and delivered by him to the Railway administration and placed in the luggage van. Only two bundles were delivered at the end of his journey. The steel trunk was lost. He, therefore, sued the Railway for Rs. 461-8, the value of the box and its contents, plus Rs. 40 damages, total Rs. 501. At the time the luggage was booked he did not declare the nature of the contents. According to his plaint the trunk contained besides ordinary clothing some silk articles the value of which comes to over Rs. 300 and also some silver articles of the value of about Rs. 60. These are all articles which are mentioned in the second Schedule of the Railways Act. The Railway Company pleaded that as the plaintiff had not declared these articles, it, the Company, was not liable in view of the terms of section 75 of the Railways Act. The Courts below did not accept this plea and decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff. The Railway Company appeals and the same point is raised before us. The point is one which is covered by the rulings to be found in Muhammad Abdul Ghaffar v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) and Aiwaz v. Simla Kalka Railway Co. (2). The Court below has relied on a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Veleyat Hossein v. Bengal and North-Western Railway Company (3). In this case no question of the applicability of section 75 arose. The articles which were in dispute therein were durries, which do not come within the second Schedule of the Act. The Railway Company had sought to free itself of its liability in that case by pleading a certain rule made by itself which the Court held to be in conflict with the terms of section 72 of the Act and, therefore, of no force. However, even in that judgment there is a remark which is in favour of the appellant before us. At page 823 the judgment runs as follows:—"A rule made under the Act is not a provision of the Act, and the words have an obvious reference to section 73 relating to the carriage of animals, and to section 75 relating to the carriage of articles of special value, which are expressly framed to place certain restrictions on the full operation of section 74." It is clearly an expression of opinion that section 74 of the Act is governed by section 75. The argument on behalf of the respondent is that section 74 is the only section in the Act which governs the case of passengers' luggage, and that section 75 has nothing to do with luggage whatsoever. In our opinion there is no force in this contention. The steel trunk was no less a package or parcel because it was booked as luggage. The language of section 75 is general. It provides: "When any articles mentioned in the second Schedule are contained in any parcel or package delivered to a Railway administration for carriage by Railway, and the value of such articles in the parcel or package exceeds one hundred rupees, the Railway administration shall not be responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the parcel or package, unless the person sending or delivering the parcel or package to the administration caused its value and contents to be declared, or declared them at the time of the delivery of the parcel or package for carriage by Railway, etc." In the present case the plaintiff delivered a package to the Railway administration for carriage by railway. That package contained articles mentioned in the second Schedule of value over Rs. 100. The facts of the present case are clearly and distinctly within the meaning of the language of section 75, which is a section of general application to all classes of goods. In our opinion the appeal is well founded. The plaintiff having failed to declare the articles the value of which he seeks to recover, the Railway Company is not liable for the loss of the trunk and its contents. We allow the appeal and set aside the decrees of the Courts below. The plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27 (b) — Appellate Court, power of, to admit additional evidence—Test—“Any other substantial cause,” force of.

The test laid down in clause (b) rule 27 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code to enable an Appellate Court to admit additional evidence is not, whether any tribunal would be unable to pronounce any judgment without the production of the additional evidence in question, but, whether the mind of the Appellate Judge is in such a condition on the evidence on record that he requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable him to pronounce judgment. [p. 402, col. 2; p. 403, col. 1.]

Where an Appellate Court states explicitly that the additional evidence was required in order to enable the Court to pronounce its opinion on the merits of the contest between the parties:

Held, that the evidence was admissible under rule 27 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, inasmuch as a wide discretion is given to the trying Judge, when he feels a difficulty himself or when he considers it proper in the interests of justice, to admit evidence which as a matter of discipline between party and party might be rejected. [p. 403, col. 2.]

The words “any other substantial cause” in rule 27, Order XLI, of the Civil Procedure Code, give a wide, discretion to the Appellate Court to admit additional evidence when the ends of justice require it to be done. [p. 404, col. 1.]

The Hon'ble Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SUNDARA AIYAR, J.—In this case, there is no ground for interference in second appeal unless we are prepared to adopt the appellants' contention that the Subordinate Judge acted illegally in admitting certain additional documents in evidence in appeal. The appeal was first heard on the 14th September 1910. The Subordinate Judge then observed: “I think it is necessary to have the documents described as 1 and 2 in the list attached to the petition, and also the Will of the original mortgagee before the Court to enable it satisfactorily to pronounce its judgment.” On that ground, he allowed the additional evidence to be received. It is contended that in doing so he acted in excess of his powers. The Appellate Court's right to receive additional evidence in appeal is restricted by Order XLI, rule 27, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The rule is in substantially the same terms as section 568 of the repealed Civil Procedure Code. It runs as follows:—“The parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to produce additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, in the Appellate Court. But if [clause (b)] the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence to be produced, or document to be received or witness to be examined”. Considering the clause apart from the decided cases, it appears to me that the test laid down in clause (b), “if the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment,” is one relating to the state of mind of the Appellate Court and not an external standard. In other words, the test is not, whether any Tribunal would be unable to pronounce any judgment without the production of the additional evidence in question, but, whether the mind of the Appellate Judge is in such a condition on the evidence on record that he requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable him to pronounce judgment. The object appears to me to be to enable the Appellate Judge to satisfy his own mind, when he entertains a doubt; the test proposed is, therefore, not an external one, viz., whether some other mind or an average mind would require additional evidence to be produced in order to pronounce some judgment or other.

In this case the Subordinate Judge states explicitly that he wished to have the additional evidence in order to be able to pronounce his opinion on the merits of the contest between the parties. But it is argued for the appellant that there are authorities which we cannot disregard, which compel us to hold that the power to admit additional evidence does not exist in such a case. The most important decision is that delivered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsular Railway Company (1). In that case the application for the admission of additional evidence was made prior to the hearing of the appeal and so far as the report shows, the appeal had not been heard before permission was given for the admission. The Appellate Tribunal, therefore, did not feel it to be necessary to have additional evidence in order to enable it to pronounce judgment. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the additional evidence should not have been admitted. So far the case presents absolutely no analogy to the present one. It is the duty of the Appellate Court, according to the section, to give its reasons for admitting further evidence. No reasons had been stated in the judgment of the Bombay High Court, nor does it appear that any difficulty was felt by the Appellate Court in coming to a proper conclusion on the case without the help of the additional evidence admitted. Their Lordships lay stress on the fact that no reason was given for allowing further evidence to be adduced. They then go on to say that the Appellate Court was merely reviewing and reversing Tyabji, J.'s refusal of a review and they point out that further evidence was ordered, not after the appeal had been heard on the merits and the evidence as it stood had been examined, but on special and preliminary application. They then make the observation on which stress is laid: "The legitimate occasion for section 568 is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, not where a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it." I do not understand the expression 'defect' as meaning a defect which makes it impossible to come to any conclusion at all; but a defect which makes it difficult for the Appellate Judge to come to a conclusion satisfactory to his own mind. Nor do I think the expression 'lacuna' carries the case any further. The general principle applicable to a Court of Appeal having plenary jurisdiction over a cause is that it has got all the powers of the Court of first instance. See section 107 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Rule 27 of Order XLI is a restriction placed on the powers of the Court of first instance itself in admitting evidence at a late stage of the case. It appears to me that a wide discretion is given to the trying Judge; when he feels a difficulty himself or when he considers it proper in the interest of justice, to admit evidence which as a matter of discipline between party and party might be rejected. I think that rule 27 of Order XLI embodies no more than the same principle. I may observe, further, that in addition to a case where the Appellate Court feels a difficulty in coming to a satisfactory conclusion on the evidence on record, additional evidence may be admitted also "for any other substantial cause." In Subba Naidu v. Ethirajammal (2), Abdur Rahim, J., was inclined to hold that that phrase must be interpreted as meaning a cause of a nature similar to the classes of cases referred to in the preceding clause. I find it difficult to understand what a cause of the same kind as is referred to in the preceding clause would be. In my opinion, the object of adding "any other substantial cause" was to give a wide discretion to the Appellate Court to admit additional evidence when the ends of justice should require it to be done. In Krishnama Chariar v. Narasimha Chariar (3), no interpretation was put on "any other substantial cause." On the other hand in Andiappa Pillay v. Muthukumara Thevan (4), a more liberal interpretation was put on the powers of the Appellate Court to admit additional evidence. My learned brother Sadasiva Aiyar, J., referred there to the powers given to the Court of first instance in order to enable the Court to do justice. In my opinion similar powers are vested in the Court of Appeal although a restriction is placed, in the interests both of discipline and of preventing concoction of evidence, on the discretion vested in the Appellate Court. I am of opinion that there are no grounds for holding that the additional evidence was wrongly admitted in this case. I dismiss the second appeal with costs.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act (II of 1903 Local), ss. 3, 14, applicability of—Collector's sanction—Sale after mortgage—Pre-emption—Right of subsequent purchaser—Redemption.

Certain property situate in Bundelkhand was sold. The defendant brought a pre-emption suit and obtained a decree, but the sale was not sanctioned by the Collector as required by Act II of 1903 and the name of the pre-emptor was recorded as a usufructuary mortgagee for 20 years under section 14 of the Act. The mortgagors then sold the property to the plaintiff who sued to redeem it from the defendant who was in possession as a mortgagee:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the property. [p. 405, col. 2.]

Section 3 of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act applies to all "permanent alienations" even though the alienation is brought about by the exercise of a right of pre-emption. [p. 405, col. 2.]

The policy of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act is to prevent persons, who are not members of an agricultural tribe, acquiring property. [p. 405, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Jhansi, dated 29th January 1913.

FACTS of the case appear fully from the judgment.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant:—The provisions of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act apply to voluntary transfer and not when there is a decree of the Court. The Collector had no power to change the operation of the decree of the Civil Court. Sections 3, 5 and other sections of the Act clearly show that the permission of the Collector is not necessary for such alienations and his order changing the nature of the alienation is ultra vires.

[RICHARDS, C. J.—Under section 9, clause (3), reference to the Collector was necessary.] The Collector ordered that for 20 years the equity of redemption should be vested in Ramnath Kayastha.

In this view of the case the plaintiff has no right to sue for 20 years.

Moreover the original sale was to a member of the agricultural tribe and the mortgagors having sold the property, they had no right in it and could not convey any right to the plaintiff.

The statement of the mukhtar-i-am cannot constitute a transfer in favour of the plaintiff.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents:—The pre-emption decree had the effect of substituting Ram Nath for Jagannath. Jagan Nath's name was wiped off from the sale-deed and the sale would be considered as made to Ram Nath. The Collector had clearly the right not to sanction such an alienation in favour of a man not a member of the agricultural body.

RAM NATH v. HARAIN.

¶ The plaintiff has the right to sue. The transactions of sale to Jagan Nath together with the pre-emption decree having been converted into a mortgage, the original mortgagors had the right in the property and could transfer it. The Collector's order gave the defendant Ram Nath Kayastha the right to redeem the mortgage and the mortgagor could also redeem and hence the plaintiff has a right to sue.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant in reply:—The original sale was to a member of the agricultural tribe. This could not be interfered with by the Collector. His order had the effect of not recognizing the decree of the Civil Court which he could not disregard. If the Collector's order were disregarded, the plaintiff would have no right.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to redeem a mortgage, dated the 18th of February 1892. Ram Nath, the appellant, is one of the original mortgagees. He contends that the plaintiff has no right to maintain the suit. It appears that after the date of the mortgage the mortgagors sold their equity of redemption to one Jagan Nath Ahir. Ram Nath Kayastha (to whom we shall hereafter refer as "the pre-emptor") brought a suit for pre-emption against Jagan Nath Ahir, and obtained a decree which became final. When Ram Nath, the pre-emptor, applied to have his name recorded the Collector under the provisions of Act II of 1903 made an order in November 1910 refusing to sanction the permanent alienation in favour of the pre-emptor. By a later order he pointed out that all that he could do for the pre-emptor was to make him a usufructuary mortgagee for twenty years under the provisions of section 14 of the Act. But seeing that there was already a usufructuary mortgagee in possession, he pointed out that the only way in which the pre-emptor could get possession would be by redeeming the mortgage of the 18th of February 1892. On the 29th of January 1912 the representatives of the original mortgagors sold the property to the plaintiff. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit, which was met by the defence that the vendors of the plaintiff had no interest left of which they could make a transfer. It seems to us that this contention is not sound. The result of the pre-emption suit was that Jagan Nath Ahir ceased to have any interest in the property. The pre-emptor was substituted for him and the latter under the Collector's order was only a mortgagee. The consequence was that the ultimate right of redemption remained in the representatives of the original mortgagor. This right they were entitled to transfer to the plaintiff.

It is contended that having regard to the terms of the Collector's order the only person who could redeem the mortgage was Ram Nath, the pre-emptor. No doubt Ram Nath was given a right of redemption but that did not and could not take away the ultimate right of redemption which must have been left as we think in the representatives of the original mortgagors. The mortgage of the appellant is a mortgage which can be redeemed at any time. It is quite unnecessary for us in the present case to decide whether or not Ram Nath, the pre-emptor, could have insisted upon remaining in possession for the whole of the twenty years even if the representatives of the mortgagors were ready to redeem it, nor is it necessary for us to express any opinion as to the effect of the consent which appears to have been given in open Court by the pre-emptor to the redemption of the property by the plaintiffs.

It is lastly contended that section 3 does not apply to alienations by pre-emption. We think that the section applies to all "permanent alienations" even though the alienation is brought about by the exercise of a right of pre-emption. The policy of the Act is to prevent persons who were not members of an agricultural tribe acquiring property. This would apply just as much to a person who was acquiring a permanent title by pre-emption as by voluntary alienations. We dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

BASIR ALI v. NAZIR ALI.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT NO. 238 OF 1906.

April 30, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chaudhri.

BASIR ALI—PLAINTIFF

Hafiz NAZIR ALI—DEFENDANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1 cl. (d)—Receiver, what powers may be conferred on—Partition—Sale—Receiver, if can be authorised to convey properties.

Under Order XL, rule 1, clause (d), of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the Court may confer on a Receiver all such powers for the realization of properties and the execution of documents as the owner has. [p. 407, col. 1.]

Therefore, in a partition action in which a Receiver is authorized to sell properties he may be directed to convey the properties. [p. 407, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—Formerly it was the practice of this Court to grant sale certificates in respect of sales by Receivers under orders of the Court. In the case of Minatoonnessa Bibee v. Khatoonnessa Bibee (1), Salā, J., held after a careful consideration of the earlier cases that a sale by the Receiver was a sale by the Court. In Golam Hossein Cassim Arif v. Fatima Begum (2) Fletcher, J., disallowed an application for confirmation of such a sale and for sale certificate, drawing a distinction between "sales by the Court" and "sales under the Court." Owing to this decision great difficulties have arisen and sales effected by Receivers or Commissioners of Partition under orders of the Court have in many instances not yet been completed. The difficulty has been in purchasers obtaining proper conveyances. In this particular case by the decree in Appeal No. 56 of 1910, dated the 11th May 1911, it was amongst other things ordered that one Shaikh Mahboob Ali should be appointed Receiver of certain properties which included the premises No. 2, Royd Street, and he was directed as such Receiver to sell the said premises by private treaty or public auction at a price not less than the valuation which was directed to be made by a well-known firm of Engineers in Calcutta. Liberty was given to the parties to the suit other than Hafiz Nazir Ali to buy the said property. The Receiver had the property valued as directed and on the 2nd May 1913 at a meeting of the parties accepted the offer of the petitioner, who is the plaintiff in this case, to purchase the premises for Rs. 95,000. An agreement for sale was executed and a draft conveyance was prepared. Some of the parties to the suit being infants, a question arose as to who was to approve the draft conveyance on their behalf and execute the conveyance. An application was made to me on the 8th January last praying for an order that the Registrar of this Court do settle the draft conveyance and execute same on behalf of the infants-defendants. Following what I thought was the established practice of this Court I made the order. This was a partition action. An inquiry as to the parties interested was unnecessary, in view of the fact that the order for sale was made in their presence and there was no contest as to the share of the infant in respect of which there was a decree passed. The only question was who was to execute the conveyance on behalf of the infant. When the order came before the Registrar for settlement, a question was raised about the effect of a conveyance if executed by him on behalf of the infants, as to whether it would pass good title to the purchaser. The Registrar thereupon submitted a note to me. The following passage occurs in Trevelyan's Book on Minority, 3rd Edition, page 294 "when a sale is ordered by the Court, the Court may itself execute or may direct one of its officers to execute a transfer in the name of the minor." The authority for this is given as sections 261–262 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882 (Order XXI, rule 34 of the present Code). The Registrar correctly points out that that rule refers to a judgment-debtor who has been ordered to execute a document but has refused or neglected to do so. It was held by Kennedy, J., that the corresponding section (section 202) of the Code of 1859 did not apply to minors, and our present rule 28, Chapter 17, does not appear to be applicable. The Registrar also correctly points out that there is difficulty in applying the provisions of Chapter 28, rule 51, of our new rules. They refer to sales by the Registrar and not to sales by Receivers. In England when a sale is ordered in a partition action, for the purpose of effecting the sale, infants who are interested are declared trustees of their shares for the purchaser, within the meaning of the Trustees Act, 1893, and persons are appointed by the Court to convey their shares to the purchaser [see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 17, page 82, and Davis v. Ingram (3), where the next friend of the infant was appointed to convey]. Under the Indian Trustees Act by virtue of section 8 the High Court may make a vesting order having the effect of a conveyance with regard to property held by a minor trustee or mortgagee, and sections 20 and 32 may be used in the same way as similar sections in the English Act. The Indian Act, however, is only applicable to cases as governed by the English Law. There may be certainly cases as between Hindus or Muhammadans where the provisions of the Indian Act may be held not inapplicable, but a general order following the English practice in the case of Hindus and Muhammadans may lead to complications. Having regard to the decision of Mr. Justice Fletcher and the break in the practice in consequence, I have carefully considered the matter. I have also had the advantage of discussing the question with the learned Chief Justice with the assistance of the Registrar's note. I think that in a partition action in which a Receiver is authorised to sell properties, there can be no difficulty in directing him to convey the properties. Under Order XL, rule 1, clause (d), of the Code, the Court may confer on a Receiver all such powers for the realization of properties and the execution of documents as the owner has.

In England a sale under an order of Court includes a sale "with the approbation of the Judge" where it proceeds throughout under the directions of the Court, and also a sale "out of Court" in which case Order XLI, rule 1 (a), applies. Careful provision has been made in the English Judicature Act and the orders and rules thereunder relating to sales, conveyances and sale certificates, but our Code is silent except as to execution and mortgage sales. In the High Court, mortgage sales are held by the Registrar and sale certificates are granted. I have compared the form of such certificate with that which was used in respect of sales by the Receivers under orders of Court. It is practically the same form. I do not see why a certificate reciting the order of the Court authorising the Receiver to sell and stating that the sale has been effected thereunder and also reciting that the sale has subsequently been confirmed by the Court, when so confirmed, cannot be granted, when the purchaser applies for it and is content to take it as evidence of his title without asking for conveyance. It saves considerable costs and trouble, and I feel disposed to encourage it. One of the grounds for refusal in Golam Hossein Cassim Arif's case (2) was that in sales "under the Court" the Court does not guarantee any title to the purchaser. But a sale certificate merely records an already accomplished fact, and states what has been sold. In execution sales there is no warranty by the Court that the title is good. The quantity and nature of the right and interest existing in the debtor at the time of attachment and advertisement of sale, alone pass by the sale. In mortgage suits, the right, title and interest both of the mortgagor and the mortgagee pass. In all sales whether by the Court or under the Court or by direction of the Court out of Court, the purchaser is bound to satisfy himself of the value, quantity and title of the thing sold just as much as if he were purchasing the same under private contract. I do not see what the difference is. The sale certificate does not transfer the title. It is evidence of the transfer. But since the question is of some considerable importance, it is desirable to adopt a course which seems to me to be sanctioned by Statute, and not merely to follow a practice in which there has been a break as above stated, however recent. In this case I authorise the Receiver and direct him to execute the conveyance. I think that if this course is followed the difficulty which I have mentioned will be avoided. Cases may arise where it may be considered expedient to follow the English procedure and apply the Indian Trustees Act where it may not be inapplicable, but it is unnecessary to deal with the question on this application. I have referred to it as the point has been raised in the Registrar's note. Sales by Commissioners of Partition are eventually confirmed by the Court when the final decree is made and formal conveyances may not be at all necessary. To get a guardian of an infant's property first appointed authorising him to sell, in order to effectuate a sale in a partition action, is a dilatory and expensive procedure and should, in my opinion, be discouraged unless imperatively necessary.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant before us. He sued for a declaration that the judgment-debtor, the sixth defendant, was the owner of the plaint property and that the plaint property was, therefore, liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree which the plaintiff has obtained against the sixth defendant. The defendants Nos. 1 to 5 plead that the sixth defendant had lost his title to the plaint property by reason of the sixth defendant having orally transferred the plaint land, worth much more than Rs. 100, to one Arumuga Padayachi in 1900, the sixth defendant having obtained from the said Arumuga Padayachi Arumuga Padayachi's own land by way of exchange. The land which the sixth defendant so obtained in exchange had been conveyed by him to strangers in 1901 (see Exhibits I and III). The present suit was brought about ten years after the exchange transaction of 1900. The plaintiff contended that the oral exchange, by which the sixth defendant is alleged to have lost title to the plaint lands in favour of Arumuga Padayachi, did not validly transfer the sixth defendant's title to Arumuga Padayachi (whose brother's nephew and sons are the defendants Nos. 1 to 5). The plaintiff relied upon section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that a transfer of a property by way of exchange can be made only in the manner provided for the transfer of such property by sale in section 54, which section requires a registered instrument for sale of immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards. The defendants Nos. 1 to 5 tried to meet this objection of the plaintiff by contending that as the sixth defendant is unable now to give back the lands which he himself got by oral exchange from Arumuga Padayachi owing to the sixth defendant having conveyed them away to strangers under Exhibits I and III, the sixth defendant is estopped from pleading that the oral exchange is invalid; as the sixth defendant is so estopped, his decree-holder (the plaintiff) is, it is contended, similarly estopped. The Munsif decreed the plaintiff's suit, relying upon the Full Bench decision in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (1). That case decided that the provisions of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act are imperative and cannot be disregarded on grounds based upon mere equitable considerations. The Appellate Court (the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram), relying upon Ram Bakhsh v. Mughlani Khanam (2), Karalia Nanubhai v. Mansukhram (3), on section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act, section 91 of the Trusts Act section 120 of the Transfer of Property Act, and section 55, clause (b), of the Transfer of Property Act, held that the sixth defendant had no attachable interest in the property and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The contention in second appeal is that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in his view of the law. I think that Ram Bakhsh v. Mughlani Khanam (2) and Karalia Nanubhai v. Mansukhram (3) cannot be treated as good law in the Madras Presidency, having regard to the decision of the Full Bench case in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (1). Karalia Nanubhai v. Mansukhram (3) might also be distinguished on the ground that in that case the vendee, the person who had entered into a contract of purchase with the judgment-debtor, had not lost his right to enforce specific performance on the date of the attachment. The contract was then an existing contract in the words of section 91 of the Trusts Act.

As regards estoppel, no estoppel can be pleaded against the directions and prohibitions enacted by the Statute Law and against the rights accruing to any party by reason of such directions and prohibitions. As regards section 55, clause 6 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, it, no doubt, gives a charge for the purchase-money paid in favour of the purchaser under a contract of sale on the property contracted to be sold, if the sale goes off without default on the part of the purchaser. It is argued that as section 120 of the Transfer of Property Act gives to a party to an exchange transaction similar rights as if he was a seller or buyer in a sale transaction, the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 have a charge upon the plaintiff property to the extent of the price of that property at the time of the exchange transaction, and that if this suit is decreed in the plaintiff's favour, that is, if the plaintiff is declared to have the right to attach and bring the plaintiff property to sale in execution of the decree against the sixth defendant, it should be further declared in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 that they have got a charge upon the plaintiff property to the extent of the price of such property on the date of the exchange transaction in 1900.

In the first place, it seems to me that having regard to the definition of exchange in section 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, no question of money or purchase-money is involved in a transaction of exchange and hence the charge created for purchase-money under section 55, clause 6 (b), of the Transfer of Property Act cannot arise in the case of an exchange transaction.

In the next place, defendants Nos. 1 to 5 did not make any claim in their written statement to this alternative relief of a charge being declared in their favour if the exchange transaction be held invalid by the Courts, nor have they raised this point in the memorandum of appeal to the Subordinate Court.

In the third place, it is very doubtful whether they could be allowed now to amend their pleadings so as to raise that question of charge as their right to enforce the said charge is probably now barred by limitation, because if any legal charge which could be relied on was ever created it must have been created in 1900 and we are now in 1913.

Lastly, I am not sure that to a suit forejectment the defendant could plead a mere charge, and whether the defendant who has got a mere charge ought not to be relegated to his own suit to enforce the charge after paying proper Court-fees on his plaint instead of being allowed as defendant to impose conditions on the plaintiff as a preliminary to the plaintiff's being given a decree in ejectment. As regards the last point, however, I must admit that there are observations in the case of Mutta Venkatachalapathy v. Pyinda Venkatachalapathy (4) which are in the defendant's favour. However, on the grounds Nos. 1 to 3 which I have enunciated above, the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 cannot obtain a declaration in their favour of a charge for any money, that is, for the probable price (unsatisfactorily and roughly ascertained by evidence after ten years) on the date of the exchange in 1900. In the result the lower Appellate Court's decree will be set aside and the Munsif's decree restored. As this is a hard case for the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, I would make no order as to costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court.

SPENCER, J.—I agree with the conclusions of my learned brother. I have only to add that the decisions on which the lower Appellate Court relied can be distinguished from the present case. Ram Bakhsh v. Mughlani Khanam (2) was a case in which certain immoveable property was delivered in satisfaction of a Muhammadan widow's decree for dower. The Allahabad High Court has in several cases shown a reluctance to apply the provision of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act strictly to sales between Muhammadans, knowing that under Sunni Law payment of price accompanied by delivery of possession constituted a complete transfer without the execution of any document, vide section 820 of Gour's Law of Transfer in British India.

In Karalia Nanubhai v. Mansukhram (3) the Court treated the judgment-debtor as holding the property in trust for the person who had purchased from him. A conveyance was executed and registered under a decree for specific performance, thereby perfecting the purchaser's title before the suit for declaration of the judgment-creditor's right to attach was decided in the Court of first instance.

Section 55 of the Indian Transfer of Property Act being founded mainly on the provisions of the English Conveyancing Act of 1881, I doubt if clause 6 (b), which deals with the buyer's lien, can properly be applied to an exchange of immoveable property notwithstanding sections 119 and 120. In Volkart Brothers v. Vettivelu Nadan (5) a claim based on an agreement to exchange goods in the shape of cotton was allowed on the ground of trade usage, but usages and custom of trade are specially excepted by section 1 of the Indian Contract Act, and the property in dispute in that case being moveable was governed by Chapter VII of the Indian Contract Act, which deals with the sale of goods and corresponds with the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act in England.

Sale—Purchaser not put in possession—Suit for recovery of purchase-money—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 97, 116.

The plaintiffs purchased certain property on 17th November 1905 and got mutation of names effected in their favour on 7th February 1906. The sale-deed contained a recital that the vendor had placed the purchasers in possession and if the purchasers were disturbed or dispossessed by any person proving himself to be entitled to the property, they would be entitled to recover from the vendor the price paid by them for the property. But the purchasers did not obtain possession in fact of the property. In 1907, certain persons brought a suit against the vendor and the purchasers to have the sale set aside and obtained a decree which was finally upheld by the High Court on 28th May 1909. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit for the recovery of the purchase-money on 18th of April 1911:

Held, that the suit was not governed by Article 116 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act 1908 but was governed either by Article 62 or Article 97 of the Act, and was barred by time. [p. 411, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 3rd November 1913.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On November 17th, 1905, the respondents purchased a share in a zemindari village from the appellant. The sale-deed contained a recital that the vendor had placed the purchasers in possession of the property and an undertaking that the vendor would cause mutation of names to be effected in favour of the purchasers. It also contained a provision to the effect that if the purchasers were disturbed or dispossessed by any person proving himself to be entitled to the property, they would be entitled to recover from the vendor the price paid by them for the property. Mutation of names appears to have been effected in favour of the purchasers on February 7th, 1906. But it is clear that they did not obtain possession in fact of the share. In 1907 Mahbub Khan and others brought a suit against the vendor and the purchasers to have the sale-deed set aside and for a declaration of their title to the property. Their claim was decreed in July 1907. The present respondents appealed to the District Court. Their appeal was dismissed and they filed a second appeal in this Court which was dismissed on May 28th, 1909. The present suit was instituted on April 18th, 1911. The question for decision in this appeal is whether the suit was brought within time. The respondents' contention is that the suit is within time, (1) because it is governed by Article 116 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and (2) because if Article 97 be held to be applicable, time did not begin to run against them until their appeal to this Court was dismissed in May 1909, less than three years before the present suit was brought. It seems to us quite clear that Article 116 does not apply to the present suit. That Article provides for a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered. The respondents contend that the deed of sale contains a contract on the part of the vendor to put the purchasers in possession. The sale-deed, however, contains no such contract. As already stated it recites as a fact, though it was not a fact, that the vendor had placed the purchasers in possession. The other provision contained in the deed, to the effect that the purchasers would be entitled to recover the price paid by them, in case they were disturbed or dispossessed by persons proving themselves entitled to the property, does not apply because the purchasers never did get possession. The lower Appellate Court seems to have been of opinion that the purchasers might be regarded as having obtained possession of the property because mutation of names was effected in their favour. It relies upon section 201 of the Tenancy Act,

Local Act II of 1901, as showing that the respondents, as the recorded proprietors of the share purchased, could have sued for the profits of that share in the Revenue Court. It does not appear, however, that they ever brought a suit for profits. They certainly did not obtain a decree for profits of the share, and as a matter of fact Mahbub Khan and others who had been in possession of the property for many years prior to the sale in question retained possession and were content to bring a suit for declaration of their title. They were under no necessity to bring a suit for possession. It is, therefore, quite clear that the purchasers never did get possession of the share. We are, therefore, of opinion that Article 116 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act does not govern this case. The case appears to us to be governed either by Article 62 or Article 97 of the same Schedule. In all probability there, was a total failure of consideration from the very beginning. If so, the suit is barred by limitation under Article 62. But even if there was not an initial failure of consideration, the consideration must have failed very soon afterwards certainly more than three years before the present suit was brought. More than three years before the suit the respondents failed to get possession of the property and were sued by Mahbub Khan and others, who had been in possession for many years. In our opinion whether Article 62 or Article 97 applies, the suit is barred by limitation. The purchase was clearly a speculative purchase of property for the purpose of endeavouring to oust persons who had been in possession of the property for many years. We allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the suit of the respondents with costs in all three Courts. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Rent suit—Commutation—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 40—Revenue Courts, competence of, if can be questioned by Civil Courts—Jurisdiction—Presumption.

Per Jenkins, C. J.—The Civil Courts can consider the competence of the Revenue Courts in commutation proceedings, where a suit is brought for recovery of arrears of rent as determined by these proceedings. [p. 413, col. 1.]

Kali Krishna v. Ram Chandra, 29 Ind. Cas. 896; 21 C. L. J. 487; 19 C. W. N. 823, followed.

Per N. Chatterjea, J.—The exercise of jurisdiction by a Revenue Court presupposes that the raiyat is an occupancy raiyat and the rent is payable in kind as indicated in section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 413, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the following decision of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Roy, dated the 8th August 1913, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2102 of 1911, against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Backergunge, dated the 24th April 1911, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif of Barisal, dated the 22nd December 1910.

Roy, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent. The defence was that the rent payable had been commuted by the Revenue Officer under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the plaintiff could recover only at the rate fixed by the Revenue Officer. Both the lower Courts have held that the Civil Court is not competent to go against the decision of the Revenue Officer in proceedings under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In second appeal it has been urged that the decision is not binding upon the plaintiff. It is said that the plaintiff is competent to have it determined in the Civil Court that the proceeding was without jurisdiction. The points on which the want of jurisdiction is urged are the points which the Revenue Officer had to decide. And if it were possible to raise the same question in a Civil Court, then the result would be, as was observed in the case of Lalla Saligram Singh v. Mohunt Amir (1): "The plaintiff would practically make the Civil Courts Courts of Appeal. This was certainly not intended.' I agree with the judgment in the case referred to and in holding that the scope of the section clearly indicates exclusive jurisdiction in the Revenue Officer.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is a suit for rent; and the plea advanced by the defendants is that there has been a commutation under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As regards the years 1315 and 1316, if that plea is good it furnishes an answer. But the plaintiffs take exception to the commutation proceedings or at any rate to their finality; for he says under section 40 there can be no commutation unless the tenant is an occupancy raiyat and unless he pays for the holding rent in kind, or on the estimated value of a portion of the crop or at rates varying with the crop, partly in one of those ways and partly in another, or partly in any of those ways and partly in cash. The plaintiffs say that this question must be decided in this suit and that it is open to the Civil Court to question the jurisdiction of the Revenue Authority.

The judgments of the Munsif as also of the Subordinate Judge and of Mr Justice Roy are all against the plaintiffs. The judgment of the Munsif is to the effect that the tenant was an occupancy raiyat and that the rent was payable in kind, so that the learned Judge affirmed the competence of the Revenue Court's proceedings. The other two Courts, however, did not follow this procedure but treated the matter as concluded by the decision of the Revenue Court and on that ground have upheld the defendants' plea.

I do not wish to say that there is nothing to be said in support of that view. But whether it be right or whether it be wrong, I consider we are bound by a decision of an Appellate Bench of this Court in Kali Krishna v. Ram Chandra (2) which directly decides the point in discussion before us, and determines that Civil Courts can consider the competence of the Revenue Courts in commutation proceedings where a suit is brought for recovery of arrears of rent as determined by these proceedings. I, therefore, accept that decision as binding on me. In view of that decision it is manifest that the judgment of Mr. Justice Hari Nath Roy cannot stand, nor can that of the lower Appellate Court. We must, therefore, in deference to the decision I have cited, vary the judgment of Mr. Justice Roy so far as it relates to the rent for the years 1315 and 1316 and also set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge as regards these two years and send back the case in order that it may be determined whether the commutation proceedings were competent. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court for the determination on the record as it stands, and the costs of the litigation hitherto incurred will be dealt with in the lower Appellate Court and the Judge will in this connection have regard to the extent to which the plaintiffs' claim is conceded.

(1) 29 Ind. Cas. 896; 21 C. L. J. 487; 19 C. W. N. 823.

BATTIE v. BROWN.

N. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree with the view taken in Kali Krishna v. Ram Chandra (2). I think the exercise of jurisdiction by a Revenue Court presupposes that the *raiya*t is an occupancy *raiya*t and the rent is payable in kind, as indicated in section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

BATTIE—RESPONDENT.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 19, 57—Divorce—Decree absolute, marriage within six months of, if valid—Previous marriage how long in force—Jurisdiction to declare marriage null and void.

Section 57 of the Indian Divorce Act does not completely dissolve the tie of marriage until the lapse of six months after the decree absolute [p. 414, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a new marriage was solemnized within six months of a decree absolute for divorce of a party:

Held, that the marriage was not only void on the date when it was solemnized but also that the previous marriage was still in force within the meaning of section 19 (4) of the Divorce Act so as to give jurisdiction to a Court under section 19 of the Act to pronounce a decree of nullity [p. 414, col. 2.]

Mr. D. Chamier, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case of a very unusual character, in which the petitioner seeks a declaration of the nullity of the marriage which he contracted with the respondent in the year 1891, on the ground that the marriage was null and void as having been contracted within six months of the date on which a decree absolute had been passed dissolving the earlier marriage of the respondent. Now I may observe that this marriage was performed by "license." I do not know if the authorities issuing the license were aware that the previous marriage of the respondent had been so recently dissolved, but if they were so aware, clearly the license ought not to have been issued, and this case illustrates the necessity that the licensing authority, when it is brought to its notice that the marriage of one of the parties has been dissolved, should satisfy itself, before issuing the license, that the marriage had been dissolved by a decree absolute six months before the celebration of the new marriage; and it is, of course, equally incumbent on ministers of religion and others who solemnize such marriages so to satisfy themselves. The present suit is unopposed and, therefore, may be taken to be really by consent. But it is easy to conceive what serious and lamentable results might follow from carelessness of this kind. However, in the present case the only thing I have to do is to see whether the petitioner has made out a case for the declaration of nullity which he prays for. Now the prohibition in section 57 of the Divorce Act against re-marriage within six months of the making of the decree absolute, or the determination of an appeal if one has been preferred, is express and differs very little from the similar statutory provision of the English law. The English section has been held to render a marriage contracted in defiance of its provisions void as in Chichester v. Mure (1) cited by Mr. Chamier, and the Indian section has been construed in the same way by Sir James Hannen in Warter v. Warter (2). The question there was as to the validity of a Will and not as to declaration of nullity. But there is an exactly similar decision to this of Chamier, J., in Jackson v. Jackson (3). The only difficulty I felt in regard to this case is not as to the nullity of the marriage which is forbidden in the plainest terms by section 57, but as to the jurisdiction of this Court to pronounce a decree of nullity, because section 19 which deals with the grounds upon which decrees of nullity may be pronounced gives, as one of the grounds, "that the former husband or wife of either party was living at the time of the marriage, and marriage with such former husband or wife was then in force." It strikes one, at first, as strange to talk of a marriage being "in force" after it has been dissolved by a decree absolute; but as was pointed out in the case, by the earlier law as administered in the Ecclesiastical Courts marriage was indissoluble, and when marriages were dissolved by Act of Parliament, it was considered necessary to insert a special power of re-marriage, so that, as Sir James Hannen said, the result of pronouncing a decree absolute was not completely to dissolve a marriage. "The Indian Law," he says in a passage cited by Chamier, J., "like our own, does not completely dissolve the tie of marriage until the lapse of a specified time after the decree." In other words the former marriage is to be considered still in force at any rate to the extent of preventing a subsequent marriage during the life-time of the other party to such marriage until the prohibition resulting from the survival of such other party is removed by virtue of the section. Now the prohibition is not removed by virtue of the section till the lapse of six months, or the happening of the other event therein mentioned. Consequently, I hold that not only was this marriage void on the date when it was solemnized, but also that the previous marriage was still "in force" within the meaning of section 19 (4), so as to give me jurisdiction under section 19 to pronounce a decree of nullity. I accordingly make the decree prayed for.

Order accordingly.

SAFARUDDI v. FAZAL HUQ.

Letters Patent Appeals against the following decision of Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee, dated the 16th August 1912, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2552 of 1910, against that of the Special Judge of Backergunge, dated the 22nd April 1910, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of Backergunge, dated the 24th July 1909.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—The defendants owned an occupancy holding. The interest of the landlord passed to two persons in two moiety shares. Each of the new owners of land in suit took separate kabuliats from the defendants in respect of his share of the holding. These kabuliats, however, are not in respect of equal areas but of areas differing slightly in quantity, the reason assigned being that one of the landlords had made a measurement according to which the land was a little more than that for which rent had been originally paid. In any case there were these two kabuliats and by each kabuliat the defendants agreed to pay separate rent to their new landlords and to allow them to treat them as separate tenants in respect of measurement and other proceedings. During the cadastral survey under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act each of these two landlords made an application under section 105 for the settlement of fair rent in respect of his eight-anna share covered by the kabuliats of the defendants. An objection was taken that the application could not be made separately. Upon that the two landlords applied that if their applications could not be dealt with separately, they might be dealt with together and assessment of fair rent might be made. The Settlement Officer, however, treated the two applications as separate applications and made assessment of fair rent separately in respect of the lands covered by the two kabuliats. There was an appeal to the Special Judge and he has reversed the order of the Settlement Officer on the ground that the application could not be entertained under section 105 by reason of the provisions of section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In order to determine whether this view of the learned Judge is right I have to look to the provisions of section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section provides that a landlord or a tenant may make an application within a certain time for settlement of rent and upon such application the Settlement Officer is to settle a fair and equitable rent of the lands held by the tenants. The question is whether each of the two landlords can be said to be a landlord in respect of the lands covered by the kabuliat executed in his favour. The point was before the Court in other connections and it has been held that when a tenant of a co-sharer landlord has executed a kabuliat in favour of that landlord in respect of his share of the lands in his holding and enters into a separate agreement with him for the purpose of a tenancy, such co-sharer landlord is not to be considered as joint landlord with his co-sharer in respect of the tenancy under the kabuliat but as a separate landlord. That has been decided in the case of Panchanan Banerji v. Raj Kumar Guha (1); Gobind Chandra Pal v. Hamidulla Bhuiyan (2); Sailendra Nath Mitter v. Karali Charan Singh (3) and also in other cases. It is contended, however, that those cases apply to suits under contracts and not to proceedings under section 105. I do not see, however, any reason to distinguish the cases on this ground in so far as they decide that the execution of the kabuliat creates a separate tenancy in favour of the co-sharer landlord.

The next question that arises is, whether the share of the land covered by each kabuliat can be said to be the land held by the tenant. It has been held in respect of holdings that a share of an undivided holding cannot be called a holding: See Hurry Churn Bose v. Raja Runjit Singh (4). The word 'holding' does not occur in section 105. The word occurring there is 'land held by the tenant.' The word 'land' has not been defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act. I do not see any reason why the share of the land held under a particular landlord should not come within the purview of the word 'land' used in the section. In this view of the case I think that section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is no bar to the maintenance of this application.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This case has been decided favourably to the plaintiffs by Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee on the footing that there were separate tenancies, and we think that if there were separate tenancies then in the circumstances of this case there was a compliance with the provisions of section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Even if there had not been separate tenancies, we think it a possible view in the peculiar circumstances of this case that there was a sufficient application by the landlords, but it is not necessary for us to go into that point. In our opinion the judgment of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee should be upheld.

We must, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where subsequent to the Permanent Settlement the occupants of certain jirayati lands were granted by the zemindar a darmilla inam for personal service in the shape of a reduction of the kist which they were liable to pay but for such grant:

Held, on zemindar's suit for resumption of the service inam lands,

(1) that the onus lay on the plaintiff to show that he had a right to evict the occupants; [p. 416, col. 2.]

(2) that though the plaintiff had a right to resume the grant, he was not entitled to evict the occupants from the lands, inasmuch as resumption did not imply dispossession from the lands but meant only a taking back of that which was once given. [p. 417, col. 2.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court of Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suits Nos. 302, 304, 303 and 358 of 1913, preferred against those of the Court of the District Munsif of Parvatipur, in Original Suits Nos. 10, 12, 11 and 9 of 1913.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Narasimha Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals relate to certain "gadaba tirastu" lands held by tenants for discharging personal services, such as carrying the zemindar's palanquin on condition of paying an annual kattubadi or favourable rent of Rs. 10. The 1st plaintiff is the zemindar of Sangamvalasa and the relief claimed in the plaints was a declaration that these service inam lands are resumable and a decree for possession, with mesne profits for 1912 and costs and subsequent profits till delivery of possession. The District Munsif granted the plaintiff's decrees accordingly and the District Judge confirmed them on appeal. The question is whether they were right in doing so. Accepting the findings of both the lower Courts that these inams are "darmil a" inams, in other words, inams granted subsequent to the Permanent Settlement and that they were granted for doing personal service to the zemindar in lieu of wages, which, being findings of fact, are binding on us in second appeal, the question still remains whether the plaintiffs can do more than impose the full assessment on the lands.

The plaintiffs having come into Court with a prayer to be put in possession of the lands which have been in defendants' occupation for a number of years, the onus lay on them to establish that they had a right to evict the occupants. Vide Yeddampudi Lakshmi Narsimha Row v. Repalli Sitaramaswami (1).

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 440; 24 M. L. J. 289; (1913) M. W. N. 282.

IDUBILLY SIYYADI GARU v. VISWASWARA NISSANKA.

Resumption means no more than a taking back of that which was once given, and, therefore, the plaintiffs cannot succeed in evicting the defendants unless they are able to show that what was originally granted was not merely a slice of the melvaram or landlord's share of the produce but the land itself. The plaintiffs in these suits negative any presumption in plaintiff's favour on this point. It is stated therein that the lands concerned in these suits were "taken out of the class of jirayati" lands and a kattubadi of Rs. 10 was fixed on them in lieu of the cist of Rs. 125 which they were capable of paying. In other words, the difference between Rs. 10 and Rs. 125 represented what was granted to the holders of the inam as a recompense for the services to be rendered by them. In their written statements the defendants pleaded that, even though plaintiffs had a right to resume the plaintiff lands, they had no right whatever to claim the kudivaram or ryot's share. We have not been referred to anything in the evidence tending to show that any right was reserved at the time when the inams were granted beyond the right of resuming the grant. The District Munsif referred to the acquiescence of the defendants in the enhancement of the kattubadi. This implied no more than a readiness on the part of the inamdars to accept a lower rate of remuneration for their services than they had been receiving originally. He refers to certain authorities for the proposition that tenants holding lands on service tenure cannot acquire occupancy rights. This point was not decided in Hurrogobind Raha v. Ramrutro Dey (2), quoted by the District Munsif, but it is unnecessary to go beyond section 3, clause 16 (c) of Madras Act I of 1908, which is referred to by the District Judge to show that land held on service-tenure is not included in the definition of 'ryoti' land in the Act so long as the service-tenure continues. This is immaterial for the purpose of these suits. The defendants' case is not so much that they have acquired occupancy rights under the Act, as that they possessed such rights when the inams were granted and that they have never lost them since. The plaintiffs brought these suits in a Civil Court to establish and enforce the general rights belonging to them by virtue of the contract subsisting between them and the defendants as to the terms on which the lands were held. If they had sued to eject their ryots on any of the grounds for which ejectment is allowed in the Madras Estates Land Act, they would have been under the necessity of launching their suits in a Revenue Court. In similar cases relating to the resumption of "darmilla" inams Ayling and Tyabji, JJ., in Karupamaya Ananga Bheema v. Sondi Prahaladha Bissoyi Ratno (3) held that the zemindar of Peddakimidi was not entitled to eject the grantees from the lands as a result of such resumption.

There the lands were waste and covered with jungle when granted, yet the learned Judges applied the ordinary presumption as to occupancy right which was recognised before the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act in the leading case of Cheekati Zemindar v. Ranasooru Dhora (4). If there was proof that the lands at the time of the grant were already in occupation of the tenant or their predecessors-in-title as ordinary jirayati ryots, the correctness of the decision would have been in the opinion of the learned Judges self-evident. Here there is an admission that the lands were once ordinary jirayati lands and a total absence of proof that the character of the enjoyment, which the then occupants had in the lands, was at any time lost or altered in the course of its devolution to the present occupants.

We cannot, therefore, accept the contention of the respondents' Pleader that the case of Karupamaya Ananga Bheema v. Sondi Prahaladha Bissoyi Ratno (3) was wrongly decided, nor can we regard the decisions in Sanniyasi Razu v. Zemindar of Salur (5), in Visweswara Nissanka v. Gorla Budaradu (6) and in Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (7) as authorities for the view that resumption implied dispossession from the land, as the point was not expressly raised and decided in those cases and even if it had been raised, it is obvious that the question must depend on what was the contract between the landholder and his tenant in each particular case. In Vadisapu Appandora v. Vyricherla Veerabhadraraju (8) and in Second Appeal No. 2103 of 1913 (unreported), there was a denial by the tenant of his landlord's title, which altered the case.

We allow the appeal and direct in modification of the decree of the Court of first instance that the plaintiff in each case be granted a declaration as prayed for and a decree for payment of Rs. 40; being the difference between kattubadi of Rs. 10 and Rs. 50, the cist found by the District Munsif to be payable in the event of the lands being fully assessed, and that the prayer for possession and subsequent profits be rejected. The parties will give and receive proportionate costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are co-sharers in a certain revenue-paying estate. On the 23rd Chaitra 1292, Annada Sundari Dasya, the mother of defendant No. 4, executed what is headed as a "kobala or out-and-out sale of land" in favour of the plaintiffs. These lands were khamar lands and they were specified by the vendor, who described herself as owner in possession with power and right to make gift or sale of a certain fractional share in the mahal within which the khamar lands were included. Towards the end of the conveyance, there is a stipulation that the vendees would pay annually $5\frac{1}{4}$ annas as rajashya, Government revenue, of the land conveyed into the vendor's sarkar; in other words, the vendees would pay a certain sum of money which the vendor would be bound to remit to the Collector as revenue payable in respect of the land so conveyed. The plaintiffs were not registered as proprietors of the lands in question. Thereafter, a partition was effected under the provisions of Act V of 1897 (B.C.) the proceedings ending in the year 1901. The plaintiffs did not secure their kobala lands in those partition proceedings, nor any land equivalent to those kobala lands. In fact, they were allotted to the share of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The plaintiffs brought their present suit to obtain either those identical lands or, in lieu of them, the lands which had been allotted to defendant No. 4.

The first Court decreed the suit, giving the plaintiffs the lands which had been given to defendant No. 4 in lieu of the kobala lands. Various questions of fact were decided by the Munsif but on appeal to the Subordinate Judge, the case turned on a simple issue, whether the kobala was or was not an out-and-out sale, and in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, the conveyance being of that description, the plaintiffs' suit failed.

BROJONATH SAHA v. DINES CHANDRA NÈOGI.

In second appeal, the substantial argument of the learned Vakīl on behalf of the plaintiffs is that on general principles the defendant No. 4 cannot be allowed to retain a two-fold benefit and that in any case, the Munsif's decision is one which is in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience.

We have read the kobala of the 23rd Chaitra 1292, and, in our opinion, though it is an out-and-out conveyance, it is impossible to ignore the peculiar condition for the payment of Government revenue by the vendees to the vendor. As a result of that stipulation the plaintiffs (vendees) were unable to represent themselves as proprietors of the land purchased. They were proprietors, but they were not registered proprietors. That being so, the butwara authorities could not take notice of the interest they claimed in the land conveyed (section 4 of Act V of 1897, B. C.). Our attention has been called to section 99 of the Act. It runs thus:—"If any proprietor of an estate held in common tenancy and brought under partition in accordance with this Act has given his share or a portion thereof in putni or other tenure or on lease, or has created any other encumbrance thereon, such tenure, lease or encumbrance shall hold good as regards the land finally allotted to the share of such proprietor and only as to such lands." It will be observed that the kobala of the 23rd Chaitra 1292 was not a conveyance of a share. It was in respect of certain specified lands. But, in some respects, the burden imposed upon the share of the vendor was an encumbrance. It is not necessary to discuss the cases which have been decided on some cognate questions under section 37 of Act XI of 1859. We may, however, mention the case of Thakoor Dass Roy Chowdhry v. Nubeen Kishen Ghose (1). In Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Birdhan (2), an application was made in accordance with the equitable principles originally recognised and given effect to by the Privy Council in the case of Rajynath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdhry (3). We may usefully quote a passage in the judgment of the Judicial Committee where their Lordships said:—"It is, therefore, clear that the mortgagor had power to pledge his own undivided share in these villages; but it is also clear that he could not, by so doing, affect the interest of the other sharers in them, and that the persons who took the security took it subject to the right of those sharers to enforce a partition, and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty."

But, as we have already said, this case is not one of an encumbrance strictly so called; it is rather a case of an anomalous burden imposed by the widow on her share, in that she allotted certain khamar lands to the plaintiffs and pledged herself to pay Government revenue on receipt of a sum from the plaintiffs. For the purposes of the partition proceedings, the widow represented her vendees, and, although it might be difficult to describe her position as being that of a trustee for the vendees, that would be the practical result of the attitude adopted by her in consequence of the conveyance.

Under these circumstances, we are unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge in altogether dismissing the plaintiffs' action. We must apply those general principles of equity that always govern cases which are not precisely covered by a particular section of a particular Statute.

There remain, however, questions which must be gone into by the lower Appellate Court. The first of these is whether the interest of the widow, Annada Sundari, was an absolute interest, as she described it. The plaintiffs' suit was based on the existence of such an absolute interest. If she had any absolute interest, we think the plaintiffs are entitled to follow the lands allotted to defendant No. 4 in lieu of, and corresponding to the lands conveyed under the kobala of the 23rd Chaitra 1292. If, however, Annada Sundari held a mere Hindu widow's estate, the question would arise as to whether there was any legal necessity for raising Rs. 300, the purchase-money mentioned in the conveyance. The first Court observed that no issue had been raised as to legal necessity in this case, and that the defendants did not say, in their defence, that there was no legal necessity for creating the kobala. But on reference to the written statement of defendant No. 4 (paragraph 9), we find that various pleas were raised going to the root of the matter, and it was said that any act done by Annada Sundari without any authority is not binding upon the defendant No. 4. It will be necessary to frame an issue as to this. Of course, if Annada Sundari was under no legal necessity to raise the money, her conveyance to the plaintiffs would not operate after the death of the Hindu widow.

The only other question remaining in the case is as to the tenancy of defendant No. 11, Ram Chandra Bose. As to this also, there must be a distinct finding by the lower Appellate Court.

With these observations, we allow this appeal and direct that the case be sent down to the lower Appellate Court for a decision of the points indicated by us.

If the evidence, as recorded, is not sufficient to enable the lower Appellate Court to arrive at findings on the further points indicated, it will be at liberty to require both parties to adduce additional evidence. Such evidence may be taken by the lower Appellate Court or by the first Court.

Costs will abide the result.

The defendant No. 1 respondent is entitled to his costs of this appeal.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for declaration of title to land and for ejectment of the defendants therefrom. The case for the plaintiffs is that the disputed lands were included in a revenue-paying estate owned by themselves and by their co-sharers and that the defendants held them as a tenure under the co-sharers, to whose exclusive share they had been assigned by private partition. Thereafter, on a partition of the entire estate by the Collector under the Estates Partition Act, these lands were allotted to the plaintiffs, but they were unable to obtain possession thereof, as the defendants set up their right to hold them as their tenure. The plaintiffs accordingly instituted this suit to establish their title and to eject the defendants on the ground that their tenure was operative, not upon the lands assigned to the plaintiffs, but upon those assigned to their grantors. The defendants denied the truth of the allegation of a prior private partition amongst the proprietors, and asserted that as their tenure was held under all the co-sharers, the plaintiffs were not competent to avoid it. On these pleadings, the issue was raised, whether there was a private settlement among the proprietors as regards the possession of the lands of the original estate as stated in the plaint. The trial Court found on the evidence that there was a private settlement among the co-sharers of the estate whereby each of them came to be in separate possession of distinct parcels of land. The Court also found that the tenure was held not under the entire body of co-sharers but under some of them only and that of the share owned by the plaintiffs, one twelfth had been derived from the grantor of the tenure. The Court thereupon held that the plaintiffs were entitled to eject the defendants from the remaining share of the lands. On appeal by the defendants, the Subordinate Judge affirmed the finding of the first Court that there was a private division of the lands to which all the joint proprietors had agreed and upon which they had all acted. In this view, the Subordinate Judge held that the partition by the Collector had not affected the tenure, as the defendants were not and could not be parties to the partition proceedings, and that the plaintiffs had taken the lands allotted to them subject to the tenure held by the defendants. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court against the decree of dismissal made by the Subordinate Judge, and have contended that under section 99 of Act V of 1897 B. C., the lands in their hands are not subject to the tenure set up by the defendants. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision in Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Birdhan (1).

Section 99 of the Estates Partition Act is in these terms: "If any proprietor of an estate held in common tenancy and brought under partition in accordance with this Act has given his share or a portion thereof in putni or other tenure or on lease or has created any other encumbrance thereon, such tenure, lease or encumbrance shall hold good as regards the lands finally allotted to the share of such proprietor and only as to such lands." It is hence essential, to make the section applicable, that the estate should be held in common tenancy. On behalf of the appellants, it has been contended that an estate must be deemed held in common tenancy so long as any incident thereof, for example, the liability to pay Government revenue, continues joint, although the lands may have been divided and are held in severalty. This contention is opposed to the decision in Abdul Latif v. Amanaddi (2); there it was held that the words "estate held in common tenancy" are used in contradiction to an estate held in severalty among the proprietors themselves by private arrangement, as is clear from an examination of sections 5, 7, 63, 76 and 79 of the Estates Partition Act. This decision is in conformity with the earlier case of Hridoy Nath v. Mohobutnessa Bibee (3) which interpreted the corresponding section of an earlier Statute (section 128 of Act VIII of 1876, B. C.). An examination of the decision in Hridoy Nath v. Mohobutnessa Bibee (3), shows, again, that the view there taken was in accord with a long line of authorities decided under the corresponding provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814: Ahmedullah v. Ashruff Hossein (4); Obhoy Churn v. Huri Nath Roy (5); Juggessur Doyal Singh v. Bissessur Pershad (6). The position, therefore, is that under the Estates Partition Act, 1876, this Court, on an elaborate review of the previous state of law, came to the conclusion in Hridoy Nath v. Mohobutnessa Bibee (3) that the principle embodied in section 128 was applicable only where the lands of the estate were not held in severalty. The Legislature, in 1897, proceeded, presumably with full knowledge of the judicial interpretation of section 128, to reproduce its provision without any variation as section 99 of Act V of 1897. The inference seems irresistible that the judicial interpretation of section 128, to which we have referred, correctly represented the intention of the Legislature; for it is a well-settled principle of construction that the Legislature is presumed to know, not only the general principles of law, but the construction which the Courts have put upon particular Statutes. In the words of Lord Campbell, C. J., in Mansell v. Reg. (7) and James, L. J., in Ex-parte Campbell, In re Cathcart (8), "Where a section of an Act, which has received a judicial construction, is re enacted in the same words, such re-enactment must be treated as a legislative recognition of that construction." The inference is, therefore, perfectly legitimate that the Legislature has, in the new Act of 1897, adopted the settled judicial construction, which is thereby sanctioned and intended to be continued in force: Jogendra Chundra Roy v. Syam Das (9). We hold accordingly, on the authority of the decision in Hridoy Nath v. Mohobutnessa Bibee (3) which has been accepted as good law applicable to Act V of 1897 in Aimanaddi Patari v. Nabin Chandra Cope (10) and Abdul Latif v. Amanaddi (2), that section 99 applies only where the lands are held jointly by the proprietors, and not in severalty in pursuance of a private arrangement between the parties. This view is not opposed to the decision in Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Birdhan (1), where the lands were held not in severalty but in common tenancy. In these circumstances, it was ruled, on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Byjnath Lall v. Ramooddeen Chowdhry (11), that when on partition by the Collector, any land of an undivided joint estate, which had been encumbered by any co-sharer, was allotted to any other co-sharer, the latter took it free from the encumbrance so created. But we may observe that the decision in Ahmedullah v. Ashruff Hossein (4), which was followed in Hridoy Nath v. Mohobutnessa Bibee (3), is not, as is assumed in Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Birdhan (1), inconsistent with, and has not consequently been overruled in effect by, the decision of the Judicial Committee in Byjnath Lall v. Ramooddeen Chowdhry (11). As explained in Hridoy Nath v. Mohobutnessa Bibee (3), which was not brought to the notice of the Court in Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Birdhan (1), the lands in Ahmedullah v. Ashruff Hossein (4) were held in severalty; while the lands in Byjnath Lall v. Ramooddeen Chowdhry (11) were held in common tenancy. This distinction explains cases of Venkatarama Iyer v. Esumsa Rowthen (12), Shaikh Nura v. Baikuntha Nath Ray (13), Brojonath Saha v. Dines Chandra Neogi (14) and Tarini Kanta v. Ishur Chandra (15), where the decision in Joy Sankari Gupta v. Bharat Chandra Birdhan (1) was followed. In the case before us, the Courts below have concurrently held that the lands were, under private arrangement, held in severalty and not in tenancy in common; consequently section 99 of Act V of 1897 has no application. The inference follows that the plaintiffs have taken the disputed lands subject to the tenure of the defendants and are not entitled to eject them.

It has finally been argued that the defendants should not be allowed to defeat the claim of the plaintiffs, when it has been found that their allegation is untrue on the facts. In our opinion there is no force in this contention. No doubt, as was laid down in the cases of Shibkrishna v. Abdool Hakeem (16), Ramdoyal v. Junmenjoy (17) and Balmukund Kesurdas v. Bhagwandas Kesurdas (18), a plaintiff cannot be allowed to abandon his own case, adopt that of the defendant and claim relief on that footing. Here, however, what has happened is that each party failed to realise the legal effect of the facts alleged by him; the parties went to trial on the substantial issue in the case, namely, whether or not there had been a private partition of the lands prior to the partition by the Revenue Authorities and whether the tenure of the defendants was created by the entire body of landlords or by some alone of the shareholders in respect of specific lands allotted to them. This question has been answered against the defendants and in favour of the plaintiffs but that does not prevent the defendants from contending that even on the facts found the claims for ejectment cannot be sustained.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Decree-holder prevented from executing decrees by fraud or force of one judgment-debtor—Decree time-barred—Extension of time, if against all judgment-debtors—Construction of Statute.

Where a decree-holder is prevented from executing his decree by the fraud or force of one of several judgment-debtors within limitation, he can get an extension of the 12 years' period provided for execution of the decree by section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, only as against that judgment-debtor but not as against other judgment-debtors who have not been guilty of fraud or force. [p. 424, col. 2.]

When there is on one side what is said to be the general policy of an Act and, on the other, the express words of a section dealing with a specific matter, the express words ought to prevail. [p. 424, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

WHITE, C. J.—The only statement of fact which is necessary for the purpose of dealing with the question of law as to the construction of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code which has been raised in this appeal is, I think, this. A creditor has obtained a joint and several decree against two judgment-debtors, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The first defendant has, by force or fraud, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application to execute the decree. The second defendant has not. I think it is reasonably clear that, if we give to the words of sub-section 2 (a) in section 48 their natural meaning and construe the paragraph as meaning what it says, the construction adopted by Sundara Aiyar, J., is the right construction. The sub-section is as follows:—"Nothing in this section shall be deemed to preclude the Court from ordering the execution of a decree upon an application presented after the expiration of the said term of twelve years, where the judgment-debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application." Now the words are "the judgment-debtor." No doubt the expression "the judgment-debtor" in the singular includes the plural. But as it seems to me it includes the plural in this sense: "where the judgment-debtor has, or if there are two or more judgment-debtors the judgment-debtors have, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree, etc." That construction of the section is in accordance with the literal meaning of the words and with the well-known principle of construction, which is now embodied in the Statute, that the singular includes the plural. I express no opinion as to whether, when there are two or more joint judgment-debtors, the judgment-creditor can only ask for the extension of the period of limitation when all the judgment-debtors have by force or fraud prevented the execution of the decree. That question was not argued. The contention, on the one hand, was that the judgment-creditor could only pray in aid the benefit of the enactment as against the judgment-debtor who had by force or fraud prevented the execution of the decree and on the other hand, that in a case where a joint judgment-debtor has by fraud or force prevented the execution of the decree, etc., the judgment-creditor is not only entitled to the benefit of the enactment as against that judgment-debtor but also as against any judgment-debtor who has not by fraud or force prevented the execution of the decree. It seems to me that the only way in which we could make it clear that the intention of the Legislature was as Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar has contended, would be to add to the sub-section a definition clause to this effect, "for the purposes of this section judgment-debtor means the judgmentdebtor who has by fraud or force prevented the execution of the decree or any joint judgment-debtor of that debtor." That would be reading into the section a great deal which is not there and, as it seems to me, would be doing violence to the express language of the section. The other construction, in my opinion, is in accordance with the natural meaning of the words used. Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar has suggested that the policy of the Limitation Act is that where a decree is alive against one of several joint debtors, it is alive against all the joint debtors. I am not sure that I am prepared to accept that as a statement of the general policy of the Act; but even if it be so, when we have on the one side what is said to be the general policy of the Act and, on the other, the express words of a section dealing with a specific matter, I think that the express words ought to prevail.

Reliance has also been placed, in support of the contention against the view adopted by Sundara Aiyar, J., on Article 182 of the Limitation Act. Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar has pointed out that under paragraph 5 the time was from the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, and that Explanation I says that where the decree or order has been passed jointly against more persons than one, the application, if made against any one or more of them, shall take effect against them all. That seems to me to be a very different matter from the matter which we are dealing with in this appeal. The principle, I take it, is that if the judgment-creditor does something which keeps alive a joint decree as against one of his joint judgment-debtors, the decree is to be regarded as alive as against all the joint judgment-debtors and if it is alive, it is, of course, capable of execution. That is a very different matter from the present case, which is not the case of a judgment-creditor having done something, but of the judgment-debtor having done something which, as regards him, no doubt entitled the judgment-creditor to say "my time has been extended." So far as I can see, there is no reason or principle why the judgment-creditor should be entitled to say that, as regards the men who had not prevented by fraud or force, etc., he should also have the benefit of the enactment. I cannot see there is any equity which the judgment-creditor can set up in this case, although it may be that in the cases which are referred to in Article 182 of the Limitation Act there is an equity arising by the fact that he had done something for the purpose of realizing the fruits of his judgment. Here the creditor does nothing but relies upon something which one of his joint judgment-debtors has been doing. An argument was based on paragraph 2, in the third column of Article 182, a suit (sic) is kept alive by the fact that an appeal has been brought and it is reasonable enough that time should begin to run in favour of a party who does not appeal, not from the date of the decree of the Court of first instance, but from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court. It seems to me that there is not only no equity in favour of the judgment-creditor but that it would be inequitable that a judgment-debtor should be deprived of the benefit of the prescribed limitation by reason of acts done by his joint judgment-debtor, over whom he has presumably no control and for whose action he is not responsible. I may refer to the principle which is embodied in the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, and that is in accordance with the principle which I think is applicable here. Before the Mercantile Law Amendment Act of 1856, the English Law was that where one or more of several joint debtors were beyond the seas when the causes of action arose, the time did not begin to run either in favour of those abroad or those at home until the return of the former. Section 11 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act provided that, where the cause of action lay against two or more joint debtors, the person who was entitled to the same should not be entitled to any time within which to commence and sue against any one or more of such joint debtors who shall not be beyond the seas at the time such cause of action or suit accrued, by reason only that some other one or more of such joint debtors was or were at the time such cause of action accrued beyond the seas.

In my opinion, Sundara Aiyar, J., was right and the plaintiff's application is barred as against the second defendant so far as the prayer for attachment of immoveables

RESPONDENT.

Under-proprietary right, prima facie proof of—Naqsha tasfia lagan, entry in, weight of—Shankalapdar haq adna, heading of, name appearing under, effect of—Rent of under-proprietary holding, slight change in, effect of.

An entry in a naqsha tasfia lagan giving a person's name under the heading 'shankalapdar haq adna', is a sufficient prima facie proof of a shankalap under-proprietary right.

The mere fact that there has been a slight change in the rent of certain of the plots held by an under-proprietor, does not affect his under-proprietary rights.

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 10th August 1914, upholding the order of the Assistant Collector, Fayzbad, dated the 1st June 1914.

FACTS.—The facts of the case were that the plaintiff contested the notice of ejectment issued against him by the defendant, on the ground that he was not a mere tenant but an under-proprietor of the plots entered in the notice; and the sole question for determination was whether he had established a prima facie claim to under-proprietary rights in respect of the plots in question.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Respondent.

VENKATASUBBIAH v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

JUDGMENT.—The Officiating Commissioner has made a mistake, I think, by not looking at the naqsha tasfia lagan himself. The words 'shankalapdar haq adna' are in the heading and not recorded after the name of Persan Goshain, the appellant's predecessor. The mere fact that there was a change in the rent of certain of the plots in 1279 Fashi, which was about the time of Settlement, is in no way against appellant's claim. He has held the plots included in the 33 bighas entered as shankalap in the naqsha tasfia lagan upto the present time without any material change in rent, though some 9 bighas seem to have been added to them. There is a previous judgment of Sir Duncan Baillie's on Petition No. 39 of 1908-9, dated the 8th March 1910, in which he considered that a similar entry in the naqsha tasfia lagan was sufficient prima facie proof of a shankalap under-proprietory right.

I would, therefore, admit the appeal as regards the plots in suit which are shown in the naqsha tasfia lagan as shankalap and modify the order of the lower Courts by cancelling the notice with regard to Nos. noted below* amounting to 28 bighas 4 biswas in area. As appellant has made an exaggerated claim he should bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal partly allowed.

VENKATASUBBIAH v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

Where for some consideration or other or without consideration, a grant is made by the Government of a particular quantity of water or a certain definite fraction of the water of a tank to a person irrespective of the use he might make of it, the proper presumption is that it is a free grant without claim to any kind of payment for the water. Second appeal against the decrees of the District Judge of Nellore, in Appeals Nos. 122, 128 and 136 of 1909, preferred against those of the District Munsif of Nellore, in Original Suits Nos. 1369 of 1908, No. 80 of 1909 and No. 435 of 1908.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar (Acting Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We observe that in the judgment of the District Munsif reference is made to the judgments in Original Suit No. 211 of 1894 and in the appeal therefrom as furnishing important evidence that the plaintiffs are entitled to a fourth of the water in the Anumakonda tank. In that suit the plaintiffs claimed certain reliefs on the basis of their right to a fourth of the water of the Anumakonda tank. The Secretary of State for India in Council was the first defendant in the suit. The reliefs were claimed against him and the second defendant therein. The Secretary of State for India in Council admitted that the plaintiffs and their co-sharers were entitled to the use of a fourth of the water flowing into the Brahmanakraka Anumakonda tank. He denied the right to the reliefs claimed in that suit, on the ground that the admitted right of the plaintiffs had not been infringed. The plaintiffs in the suit obtained a decree. The right to the use of the one-fourth of the water was the basis of the judgment in that case. If the effect of that judgment be that the plaintiffs were absolutely entitled to the use of a fourth of the water of the tank, irrespective of the use they made of it, it is possible that that judgment may make the question, raised in the present suit, of the plaintiffs' absolute right to one-fourth of the water res judicata. We do not wish to decide this matter now, as no issue was framed on the question apparently because the plaintiffs did not put forward that judgment as constituting the matter in dispute here res judicata. We think it desirable that an issue should be framed to try the question. We accordingly frame the following issue:—"Is the question of the plaintiffs' absolute right to one-fourth of the water of the Anumakonda tank without liability to pay any water-cess res judicata in consequence of the judgment of the District Munsif's Court of Kavali in Original Suit No. 211 of 1894 and of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Nellore in Appeal No. 171 of 1896 (Exhibits C, Q and E)."

Both parties may adduce any evidence they may be advised to on this issue. The finding should be submitted within two months from the date of receipt of this order in the lower Court.

Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

The second appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SUNDARA AIYAR, J.—The District Judge has found that in Original Suit No. 211 of 1894 the plaintiffs' right to one-fourth of the water flowing through Yellareddi Kalva into the Anumakondapallem Tank was established; but he has held that the question of the plaintiffs' liability for the payment of the water-tax complained of in this suit is not barred as res judicata. He is, no doubt, right in saying that in Original Suit No. 211 of 1894 the liability of the plaintiffs to pay water-cess was not in question. But their exemption from liability must be held to follow from the right that was established in their favour in that suit. Their claim there was that they were absolutely entitled to a fourth of the water irrespective of the use that they made of it, and not merely to water necessary for irrigating any particular lands belonging to them. They complained of the opening of a vent which affected their right to a fourth of the water of the tank. The Government admitted their right to the use of one-fourth of the water. It was expressly found in that case that the right claimed by the plaintiffs was established, as the plaintiffs proved their immemorial enjoyment of a fourth of the water. A legal origin must be presumed for the exercise of the right claimed by the plaintiffs. The proper presumption is that there was some grant or contract entitling the plaintiffs to a fourth of the water. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar contends on behalf of the Government that, even if the plaintiffs' ownership to a fourth of the water be held to be proved, that circumstance would not be sufficient to entitle them to claim exemption from the payment of water-cess under Act VII of 1865 as amended. He argues that an engagement between the Government and the plaintiffs entitling them to the exemption must be proved. But if there was a contract or grant by virtue of which the plaintiffs became entitled to a fourth of the water, it would be unreasonable to suppose that the Government would still be entitled to levy a cess as remuneration for the water, the right to which had already become vested in the plaintiffs before the enactment of the Water-cess Act. The cess imposed under Act VII of 1865 was intended to compensate the Government for the use by holders of land of water belonging to it, or conserved by works constructed by it by empowering them to levy a remuneration from those using the water for irrigation; where such remuneration is otherwise paid by the landholder, that would be sufficient to establish an engagement of the kind referred to in the proviso to section 1 of the Act. Thus, where land in the possession of an owner is classified as wet and wet assessment is levied from him, it is taken that the wet assessment itself includes all payment due to Government for the use of the water required to irrigate the land, and this constitutes an engagement which would exempt the owner from the further payment of any cess under Act VII of 1865.

There can be no doubt that, when for some consideration or other, or it may be without consideration, grant is made by the Government of a particular quantity of water or a certain definite fraction of the water of a tank to a person, irrespective of the use he might make of it, the proper presumption is that it is a free grant without claim to any kind of payment for the water. This was the principle adopted in Maria Susai Mulaliar v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1). In Secretary of State for India v. Swami Nautheswarar (2), the learned Judges who decided the case held that a grant of water by Government must be taken to mean a grant without any claim for future payment for the water granted. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar urges that the actual decision in the last case is in his favour. But this argument cannot be accepted. There it was held that, when a portion of a taruwa belonging to a proprietor received water from a Government source, the mere fact that he was entitled to all the water that flowed to his portion of the taruwa after it reached it without obstruction by any one would not entitle him to exemption from the payment of cess for the water which was found to have been derived from a Government source. There was no grant of the water which flowed into his portion of the taruwa. His right was merely to the free flow of water to the taruwa without obstruction. It must, therefore, be held that the plaintiffs' right to a fourth of the water established in the previous litigation entitles the plaintiffs to exemption from payment of water-cess. The decree of the District Judge must be reversed and that of the District Munsif restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court. The Government will make the payment directed under this decree within four months from this date. Second Appeals Nos. 507 and 538 follow. The memoranda of objections are dismissed.

SADASIYA AIYAR, J.—From a perusal of the order of remand, I am of opinion that it was assumed on that occasion that, if the judgment in Original Suit No. 211 of 1894 decided that the plaintiffs were entitled absolutely to the use of a fourth of the water of the plaint tank of Anumakonda, it carried with it an exemption from liability to pay any water-cess to Government for the use of that water. The order contains the following sentences: "If the effect of that judgment" (i.e., the judgment in Original Suit No. 211 of 1894) "be that the plaintiffs were absolutely entitled to the use of a fourth of the water of the tank, irrespective of the use they made of it, is possible that that judgment may make the question, raised in the present suit, of the plaintiff's absolute right to one-fourth of the water res judicata. We do not wish to decide this matter now, as no issue was framed on the question apparently because the plaintiffs did not put forward that judgment as constituting the matter in dispute here res judicata. We think it desirable that an issue should be framed to try the question. We accordingly frame the following issue :— 'Is the question of the plaintiff's absolute right to one-fourth of the water of the Anumakonda tank without liability to pay any water-cess res judicata in consequence of the judgment of the District Munsif's Court of Kavali in Original Suit No. 211 of 1894 and of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Nellore in Appeal Suit No. 171 of 1896 (Exhibits C, Q and E).'" I am, holding the above view as to what we intended in the order of remand, inclined to hold that Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar is not entitled to argue that, even if the former judgment established the absolute right of the plaintiffs to the ownership of a fourth of the water, it did not also establish any right to exemption from liability to pay water-cess for that one-fourth of the water. Assuming, however, that he is entitled to argue that question, my mind is clear that the Government is not entitled to charge water-cess for the use of the water which does not belong to it. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar, however, with his usual subtlety of argument, contended that the decision in Secretary of State for India v. Swami Nautheswarar (2) and the words of section 1 of Act VII of 1865 gave the Government the right to charge water-cess even for the use of the water which belongs to the plaintiffs. I do not mean to deny that the Government by Act VII of 1865 in its amended form took the power to charge water-cess in some instances for water which, according to the ordinary principles of jurisprudence, might be held to belong to a landowner or ryot, provided it had belonged to the Government and it became the landowner's water only through a technical rule of law. When water of one land percolates or overflows into another land, the water so collected becomes (according to the technical rules of law) the property of the owner of the land into which it has so percolated or over which it has flowed. The Government thought that, when their water so percolated or overflowed, it was hard upon Government to lose the right to tax the use of such water, simply because they were unable owing to natural difficulties to retain their water or regulate the distribution of their water as they wished. It was considered that, as the ownership in such water had passed to the ryot or landholder (into whose land the water had percolated) through no fault of Government, it was inequitable to deprive Government of the right to collect the cess for the use of such water by the lucky man into whose land it had gone. But to extend this extraordinary power of taxing another man's water to cases where the water admittedly belongs to the landowner, not on account of its having been Government water which percolated or overflowed against the will of the Government into the land of the ryot, but belongs to him absolutely by grant, or agreement or engagement (express or implied) is not only patently inequitable but, I think, is against the clear intention of the Legislature and of the Government; and I do not think that the words of the Act constrain us to hold that the Government is entitled to levy such an inequitable assessment.

As regards Secretary of State for India v. Swami Nautheswarar (2), I find after looking through the printed papers that in that case the water of the taruvai (swampish water spread) which was in question, was not intended for irrigation purposes at all. The sheet of water in that case was formed of drainage surplus waters and the right of fishery in that tank belonged in the proportion of three-fifths and two-fifths to the Government and the landholder respectively. In such a case, the water belonged to Government, as the whole of it first flowed over the three-fifths area belonging to the Government and only then passed on to the landholder's two-fifths area and even though a portion of the water afterwards so spread over the two-fifths of the area which belonged to the inamdar and would have become his property according to the ordinary principles of jurisprudence, the right of the Government to levy a cess for the use of that water which came upon the inamdar's land after passing through Government land was preserved or rather created by the Statute; and it was held that that right could not be taken away by the mere fact that Government water (consisting of extraordinary flood water flowing through a Government channel) had so afterwards come upon the land of the inamdar or landholder or become mixed up with the water that belonged to him. Without questioning the correctness of the decision in Secretary of State for India v. Swami Nahteswarar (2), I must say that I am not prepared to go one inch beyond the rule laid down in that case, as I am of opinion that it is impossible to give a wider right to Government on the most favourable construction which can be placed on the words of the Act in favour of the Government.

In the present case one-fourth of the water of the tank absolutely belongs to the landholder by reason of the finding in the former suit and such one-fourth share is not proved to have ever belonged to Government, and I, therefore, hold that water could not be taxed under the provisions of Act VII of 1865 unless it had belonged to Government and had ceased to belong to it owing to its having percolated or overflowed into the land of the landholder. In other words, the water must have been the water of the Government before it ceased to be such through the percolation or overflowing or through its discharge into the landholder's land or tank, etc. I, therefore, agree with the decree that is proposed to be passed by my learned brother.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Revision—Limitation—Wrong decision—Limitation Act (IX of 1903), Sch. I, Art. 68—Punjab Loans Limitation Act (I of 1904).

The defendants executed an agreement in which they acknowledged the receipt of an advance to deliver certain goods within a fixed period and further agreed that on a breach of their contract they would pay damages to the plaintiff and return the amount paid in advance to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued and it was pleaded that his suit was barred by limitation. The agreement contained a clause to the effect that if any delivery were made the fact should be entered on the agreement itself or separate receipt be obtained. No such entry was made and no receipt was obtained and the evidence produced by the defendants as to delivery was found to be worthless. The Small Causes Court decreed the claim holding on the point of limitation that Article 68 of the Limitation Act read with Act I of 1904 applied.

Held, that the decision as to the question of limitation was wrong, but that as it appeared that substantial justice had been done by the decree of the Small Cause Court, there was no ground for interference. [p. 428, col. 2; p. 429, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Lahore, dated the 20th day of November 1913, decreeing the claim.

Mirza Asghar Beg, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On 17th March 1908, the defendants executed an agreement in which they acknowledged the receipt of an advance of Rs. 97 and agreed to deliver five maunds of rope to the plaintiff within 20 days at the rate of Rs. 20 per maund. They further agreed that on a breach of their contract they would pay damages at the rate of Rs. 3 per maund; that the plaintiff could recover the amount of his advance and damages from their persons and property, and also that they would be liable under Act XIII of 1859.

In July 1913 the plaintiff laid a complaint, which failed, under Act XIII of 1859. He then instituted the present suit on 4th October 1913 in the Small Cause Court for the recovery of Rs. 112 and has obtained a decree. The defendants have filed an application for revision. The Judge of the Small Cause Court held that the agreement was a bond subject to a condition and it was, therefore, within time under Article 68 of the Limitation Act read with Act I of 1904. There is, I think, no doubt that this decision was wrong. The agreement which was for the performance of a specified act and in the event of non-performance to pay a sum of money by way of damages, does not amount to a bond and does not come within the provisions of Article 68, cf. Seth Eduljee Byramji v. Arjan Das (1); Gisborne & Co. v. Subal Bowri (2).

Conceding, however, that there has been an erroneous decision on the point of limitation, it has been held in Ghasita

v. Sultan (3) that the Chief Court will not in the exercise of its discretionary powers of revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act interfere, where the judgment of the lower Court does substantial justice between the parties. In this case it appears to me that substantial justice has been done. The defence was that the rope had been delivered, but the agreement contains a clause to the effect that if any delivery were made the fact should be entered on the agreement itself or a separate receipt be obtained. No such entry was made and no receipt was obtained. The evidence produced by the defendants as to the delivery of the rope is clearly worthless. I accordingly reject the petition with costs.

Appeal rejected.

A Munsif was promoted as a Subordinate Judge and his successor finished the remaining portion of a trial begun by him and delivered judgment. An appeal preferred against the decision in that case came before the former Munsif who was Subordinate Judge. He heard the appeal without any objection on the part of the parties and decided the appeal:

Held, that the decision of the appeal was not invalid inasmuch as there was no statutory disqualification for a Judge to hear an appeal in a case in which he himself did not pass the order or decree appealed against though he might have partly tried the suit or proceeding in which the order or decree was afterwards passed by another Judge. [p. 431, col. 2.]

Where there is no Statutory or Common Law disqualification in the Judge of a Court an Appellate Court should not set aside the judgment of that Court on the mere ground that it might have been swayed by bias or prejudice. [p. 431, col. 2.]

Semble.—Mere bias or prejudice on the part of a Judge does not disqualify him in the absence of a statutory provision. [p. 431, col. 1.]

The appropriate course in such cases is for the party to apply to the proper superior Court to have the case transferred to another Court. [p. 431, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in Appeal No. 158 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Vellore, in Original Suit No. 350 of 1909.

Mr. Narayanamurthi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Ibrahim Sahib, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the legal point we have to decide arises on the following facts. The District Munsif handed over charge to a successor without completing the trial of the suit, having been promoted as a Subordinate Judge. His successor finished the remaining portion of the trial, heard arguments and delivered judgment. Against the said decision there was an appeal and the former Munsif, who was promoted as Subordinate Judge, heard the appeal without any objection on the part of the appellant or respondent and decided the appeal confirming the judgment of his successor.

On second appeal the only ground which was seriously argued was that the Subordinate Judge was disqualified to hear and dispose of the appeal because he had, as Munsif, taken cognizance of the suit and had presided over its trial, though he had not heard the arguments or decided the case finally. Two other grounds Nos. 4 and 6 were feebly argued, but there is nothing in them as the slight mistake, probably a clerical mistake, as to the year of the alleged gift to the defendants is unimportant and no affidavit was filed in support of the sixth ground. We think that the legal contention is not valid. No case directly in point decided by any Indian High Court has been cited before us to support the appellant's contention. Section 17 of the Madras Civil Courts Act says: "No District Judge, Subordinate Judge, or District Munsif shall try any suit to or in which he is a party or personally interested, or shall adjudicate upon any proceeding connected with, or arising out of such suit.

"No District Judge or Subordinate Judge shall try any appeal against a decree or order passed by himself in another capacity."

As regards the first sentence quoted above, even without this statutory provision a Judicial Officer is, under the Common Law, disqualified from trying a suit to or in which he is a party or personally interested. It is, however, not clear that under such general principles, the disqualification is absolute. The interest which disqualifies a Judge must be pecuniary interest or one which involves some individual right or privilege or it must be an interest arising out of the near relationship of the Judge to a party to the cause. It has been held in numerous cases in the American Courts that in the absence of a Statute positively prohibiting a Judge from exercising jurisdiction over a cause to try which he is disqualified not by having had a pecuniary interest or by having been a party to or Counsel in the suit, but on account of some other cause such as bias or prejudice or relationship to a party, or by having presided over a former trial in the same suit, the general rule is that his decision in such a suit is only voidable and not void. That the interest must be a direct pecuniary interest or interest as a real party to the suit or interest by near relationship to a substantial party to the suit, has been held in several cases. Simply because a legal question is involved in a suit which might affect the Judge's pecuniary interest in connection with some other matter, the Judge is not disqualified. If he was merely a nominal party to a suit it has been held in some American cases that he is not disqualified from trying that suit, though section 17 of the Civil Courts Act does not make any such distinction between the Judge being a nominal party or a really interested party. Mere bias or prejudice on the part of a Judge does not disqualify him in the absence of statutory provision. Even as regards relationship to a party to the cause a Judge was not under the common law disqualified by such relationship and it is only by Statute Law such a disqualification by reason of near relationship could be imposed upon a Judge (see on this question of disqualification of Judges, Cyclopædia of Law and Procedure, Volume 23, pages 575 to 601).

We shall now consider the disqualification of a Judge to sit in an Appellate Court over his own decision. Under the Common Law, there is no disqualification imposed on a Judge to sit in his own Court in review of his own decision (it is so under the Statute Law also) or even to review it on appeal in the Appellate Court, if he becomes an Appellate Judge having appellate jurisdiction over the Tribunal in which he decided the cause as original Judge (see page 588 clause H, Cyclopædia of Law and Procedure). Section 17 of the Civil Courts Act, however, does introduce such a statutory disqualification as regards District and Subordinate Judges, but it is confined to the case where the appeal to be heard in the Appellate Court is against the decree or order passed by the District Judge or Subordinate Judge in another capacity. There is no such statutory disqualification where he has not himself passed the order or decree appealed against, though he might have partly tried the suit or proceeding in which the order or decree was afterwards passed by another Judge.

Where there is no Statutory or Common Law disqualification in the Judge of the Court below, an Appellate Court should not set aside the judgment of the lower Court on the mere ground that it might have been swayed by bias or prejudice. In other words, unless it is proved that circumstances existed which raised a reasonable presumption that the Judge of the lower Court was biassed, the Appellate Court should not interfere. Even in such a case unless objection was taken before the Judge of the lower Court itself at or during the trial of the cause to his hearing the suit or appeal (as the right to rely on the disqualification of a Judge by Common Law may be waived by consent in many cases), the Appellate Court should not interfere except in a strong or clear case of failure of justice in the lower Court through such bias or prejudice.

The appropriate course in such cases was for the party to have applied to the proper superior Court to have the case transferred to another Court. The unsuccessful litigant in the lower Court who took his chance should not be allowed to take the objection for the first time in appeal.

In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 19, at page 552, it is said:—"If, however, the fact that a Justice is interested in the subject-matter of a case is known to the parties, and objection to his acting is waived, the proceedings are not rendered void; and where the objection is thus waived at the hearing, it cannot afterwards be raised."

If this is so in the case of personal or pecuniary interest in the Judge, it must be much more so where the alleged disqualification is based merely on a probable bias in the Judge.

In the result the second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), s. 1—Debt certain—Debt expressed in measures of grain payable at specified time—Interest, if allowed.

A debt which is expressly expressed in measures of grain and payable at a specified time should be regarded as a debt certain within the meaning of section 1 of Act XXXII of 1839 although the commutation rate at the time of payment or suit may have to be determined.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, in Appeals Nos. 302 and 317 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Manjeri, in Original Suit No. 584 of 1909.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the 1st Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge's findings of fact as to the plaintiff's right to redeem cannot be said not to be based on evidence and must be accepted.

The appellants' Vakil argues, relying on Narayan Ramchandra Bhatta v. Manager Nagappa (1), that the award of interest on a debt payable in kind is not authorised by Act XXXII of 1839. With great respect to the opinion of the learned Judges who were parties to the decision above quoted, we are unable to agree with their view.

We fail to see why a debt which is specifically expressed in measures of grain and payable at a specified time should not be regarded as a debt certain (assuming the latter adjective in section 1 of the Act to qualify the word "debt" as well as "sum") merely because the commutation rate at the time of payment or suit may have to be subsequently determined. We do not find anything in the other case quoted by the appellants' Vakil, Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund (2) to conflict with this view. In our opinion the award of interest on the porappad in the present case was justified.

The rate of interest is, however, very high (20 per cent.) and it runs for a period of 40 years and more. Accepting the finding of the Subordinate Judge that this is the usual rate in Malabar, the Act authorises the award of interest at a rate "not exceeding the current rate" and we consider that, in the present case, the Court would have exercised its discretion wisely in reducing the rate to 6 per cent. The decree will be amended accordingly.

We see no reason why the interest awarded should not be set off against the sums due for kanom amount and improvements.

The appellants will pay half the respondent's costs in this Court. The time for redemption is extended to six months from this date.

The Subordinate Judge's decree with the modification above directed is confirmed.

Application against the order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 2nd January 1915, upholding that of the Deputy Magistrate, Bara Banki, dated the 24th October 1914.

Babu Rajeshwari Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. E. Manuel, for the Complainant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Musammât Kailasa obtained an order against the applicant, Raghubar, for the maintenance of an illegitimate child. The applicant subsequently filed a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that he was not the father of the child, and obtained a decree which was confirmed by this Court on the 8th July 1914.* The present proceeding has arisen out of an application by Musammât Kailasa to enforce the original order for maintenancee dated the 11th May 1912. The Courts below held that the decree of the Civil Court did not affect the order of the Magistrate or entitle Raghubar to demand that the Magistrate should refuse to enforce his previous order. Section 488, clause (5), and section 489 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provide for cases where subsequent events alter the situation of affairs, rendering a revocation or modification of the original order necessary. Section 490 empowers a Magistrate to consider any objections that may be raised to the enforcement of an order and declares that no such order shall be enforced unless the Magistrate is satisfied as to the identity of the parties and the non-payment of the allowance due. The grounds on which an enforcement might be refused are not therein stated, and the question is whether the cessation of the conjugal relationship by reason of a subsequent divorce or the decision of a competent Court on the question of marital or filial relationship in question can justify a refusal. The jurisdiction conferred on a Magistrate to settle the maintenance is, as pointed out in Ghana Kanta Mohanta v. Gerehli (1) and Deraje Malinga Naika v. Marati Kaveri (2), only auxiliary to that possessed by the Civil Courts, and a Magistrate ought to take the judgment of a competent Civil Court into consideration, if it settles the question of relationship and finally places the matter out of the pale of discussion. In Nawab Zulfikar Khan v. Musammât Zainab Begam (3), Chamier, A. J. C., in dealing with a case in which a party against whom an order for maintenance was passed under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure obtained a decree from the Civil Court that the person who had obtained the order was not his wife, observed: "Courts exercising jurisdiction under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must often decide questions of marriage, divorce, paternity and so forth, but their decisions are not binding upon the parties in other litigation in Civil Courts; they are merely incidental to the main object of the proceedings, namely, the grant or refusal of an order for maintenance. On the other hand if a competent Civil Court has decided that A is not and never has been the wife of B, then a Magistrate cannot in proceedings under section 488 hold that A is the wife of B and order B to maintain her. If the principle on which the High Courts have acted in holding that in proceedings under section 490, Magistrates must attend to a divorce effected after the order for maintenance; is correct, as I think it is, it seems to follow that Magistrates must in such proceedings attend to a decree such as was obtained by Zulfiqar Khan in the present case." Scott, J. C., concurred in that view. In Nur Muhammad v. Ayesha Bibi (4) and Bulakidas In re (5), a decree of a Civil Court was held to supersede any previous order of a Magistrate for maintenance, and in Mahomed Abid Ali Kumar Kadar v. Ludden Sahiba (6) and Emperor v. Musar-mat Jadi (7) a subsequent divorce of his wife by the husband was held to produce a similar effect. Section 490 replaced the word "shall" used in the corresponding section of Act X of 1882 by the word "may", and the object of the Legislature in making the above alteration obviously was to enable the Magistrate to consider any reasons that may be urged against the enforcement of the order than those for which separate provision is made by section 488, clause (5), and section 489 of the Code. It is open, moreover, to this Court to set aside in revision the order for maintenance passed on the 11th May 1912 in view of the decree of the Civil Court above referred to.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the order fixing maintenance above referred to will be treated as discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 228—Interruption to Court, what acts constitute—Mere noise, if sufficient—Actions, when to be taken.

An audible remark by a person is not intentionally offering interruption to the Court so as to constitute an offence under section 228 of the Penal Code.

Action should be taken by Court under section 228 of the Penal Code only in exceptional cases as the Court in such cases is both a prosecutor and a Judge.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate of Coimbatore, in his letter, dated the 7th June 1915, (Criminal Revision Case No. 17 of 1915).

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.—I am wholly unable to understand how on the facts stated by the Magistrate any offence was committed under section 228, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate says that the proceedings in his Court were interrupted by the audible remark made by the accused. That is not enough to convict the accused. The Court has to be satisfied that the accused intentionally offered interruption to the Court. There are no materials on which a Magistrate could have come to the conclusion that the accused intended to insult him, or to interrupt his proceedings. Courts who take action under section 228 ought not to give room for the belief that they are unduly sensitive about their dignity. In cases coming under the section, the Court is both prosecutor and Judge; and it is, therefore, necessary to see that the powers are used only in exceptional cases. This is not the first instance in which the Magistrate took action under this section. Constant proceedings of this character will have a tendency to interfere with the proper administration of justice, as they would put the parties in fear of a possible summary punishment for acts which may be innocently committed. I set aside the conviction and direct the fine to be refunded.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 75, 392—Conviction under sections 75, 392, whether for distinct offences—Separate sentences for each offence, if legal—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 35, 106, applicability of.

A person convicted under sections 392 and 75 of the Penal Code is not convicted of distinct offences within the meaning of section 35 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies only when a person is convicted of an offence involving a breach of the peace.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate of Tinnevely, in his letter, dated the 20th May 1915, R. O. C. No. 597, Magisterial.

ORDER.—The Joint Magistrate, Sermadevi, sentenced the third accused to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment for the offence of robbery (section 392, Indian Penal Code) and to six months' additional rigorous imprisonment under section 75 as he was an old offender. This was not a legal sentence. A person convicted under sections 392 and 75 of the Penal Code is not convicted of distinct offences within the meaning of section 35 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The two sentences passed by the Magistrate are hereby quashed, and in lieu of them, I direct that the third accused be rigorously imprisoned for a period of two years on a single sentence under section 392 and 75, Indian Penal Code.

The Magistrate further directed all the three accused to execute a bond to keep the peace for two years and on their failing to find security he referred the matter under section 123 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the orders of the Sessions Court.

The provisions of section 106, Code of Criminal Procedure, are not applicable to the circumstances of this case, as they related to cases in which persons are accused and convicted of offences involving a breach of the peace. Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 299, 300—Charge of murder—Provocation—Insufficient—Reduction of sentence—Statement of accused pleading guilty, value of.

A provocation though insufficient to bring a charge of murder within the exception to section 300 may yet be sufficient for the reduction of the sentence.

A statement of an accused pleading guilty if probable and consistent should be given weight to and acted on in preference to the prosecution evidence.

Trial referred by the Court of the Additional Agency Sessions Judge, Ganjam, for confirmation of the sentence of death upon the said prisoner in Case No. 4 of the Calendar for 1914.

JUDGMENT.—Appellant pleaded guilty to the charge of murder in the Sessions Court; and we cannot accept his story put forward for the first time in his appeal petition to the effect that death was caused accidentally. The offence undoubtedly amounts to murder.

The only question is that of sentence. The Additional Agency Sessions Judge has not discussed it or given any reasons, but has imposed a sentence of death. Appellant undoubtedly suffered some provocation before the offence and it has to be considered whether this provocation, though insufficient to come under exception to section 300, Indian Penal Code, would justify the remission of the death sentence.

The prosecution evidence, as recorded by the Committing Magistrate, affords such an altogether inadequate motive for the crime, that we cannot believe it represents all that took place. Accused's version as contained in Exhibit A is much more probable, and seems to have been given to the Inspector at an early stage of the inquiry. In our opinion it probably represents the real sequence of events: and if this be so, we do not think the case is one which, looking to the primitive nature of the parties, calls for a death sentence.

We confirm the conviction, but reduce the sentence to transportation for life.

Confession, retracted—Identification of dead body on articles of clothing—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 288—Transfer of statements, value of.

A confession made by an accused before the Committing Magistrate, which he retracts both before and after commitment, is of no value as a piece of evidence against him. [p. 437, col. 1.]

A conviction cannot be based upon statements of witnesses transferred to the record of the Sessions Court under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, when they came forward after the accused confessed and gave only circumstantial evidence insufficient to connect the accused with the commission of the crime. [p. 437, col. 2.]

It is not safe to rely upon the articles of clothing when the body itself is not identifiable on account of being in an advanced stage of decomposition. [p. 437, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Multan Division, dated the 25th August 1913, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Bevan Felman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Gauhar or Ghanwara, an Awan of Mauza Thalli, Tahsil Lodhran, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Multan, of having murdered his wife, Musammât Karim Khatun, sometime in the month of May 1913, and has been sentenced to transportation for life.

There are no eye-witnesses of the alleged murder; and the conviction of the appellant is based upon his confession before the Committing Magistrate on the 28th June and upon circumstantial evidence. On the 2nd June 1913 one Chimna (P. W. No. 13) saw the body of a woman tied up in a cloth floating down the Rajapur Minor, and he reported the matter to the lambardar of Mauza Thatta close by. The chaukidar of the village went and made a report at Thana Lodhran; and the Sub-Inspector Mohan Singh (P. W. No. 15) went to the spot and had the body taken out of the canal. On the corpse were found four articles of clothing viz., ghagra, chunni, cholar and bhochan (Exhibits P1 to P4). The dead body was sent to the Civil Surgeon for post mortem examination: the examination was held on the 4th June, but owing to decomposition being far advanced it was impossible to discover the cause of death. The flesh from the face having been eaten away the body was not in an identifiable condition.

The Police sent intimation to neighbouring villages of the discovery of the dead body from the canal, but for some time no clue to the identity of the deceased was discovered. On the 21st June, Nur Muhammad, lambadar of Mouza Thalli, (P. W. No. 7) went to Thana Karor in company with Musammât Siani (P. W. No. 2), Ghazi (P. W. No. 6) and the appellant, Gauhar, and there reported that Musammât Karim Khatun, wife of Gauhar, had been missing for some time, and that Gauhar on being questioned about her disappearance could not give a satisfactory explanation. Musammât Siani, mother of Musammât Karim Khatun and mother-in-law of Gauhar, appellant, had her suspicions aroused against the appellant, and it was she who had reported the matter to Nur Muhammad, lambardar, who in his turn had taken Musammât Siani and appellant and his maternal uncle, Ghazi, to Thana Karor. The Sub-Inspector of Thana Karor sent for the clothes that had been found on the corpse (Exhibits P1 to P4) from Thana Lodhran. These were shown to Musammât Siani, and she is said to have identified them as those of her daughter, Musammât Karim Khatun.

The Police investigation was completed on the 27th June, and the case was challaned on the same date. On the 28th the Committing Magistrate, Sardar Arjan Das, took down the evidence of two witnesses for the prosecution, Musammât Siani and Nur Muhammad, lambardar; and thereafter he recorded the statement of the appellant. In answer to the Magistrate's question, "Did you kill the deceased?" the appellant made a detailed statement in the course of which he said that he had strangled his wife as she was bad character and thereafter he had thrown the dead body into the Sardarwali canal. After the appellant's statement had been taken down the Magistrate proceeded to record the evidence of Musammât Walayat, maternal grandmother of appellant, Musammât Jannat, aunt of appellant and, Ghazi, uncle of appellant; and the case was then adjourned to the 16th July for the examination of other witnesses. After two further adjournments the case was heard on the 4th and 5th August by Diwan Kanhya Lal, who had meanwhile succeeded Sardar Arjan Das, and on his examining the appellant on the said dates the appellant retracted his confession of 28th June and stated that he had made that confession in consequence of pressure from the Police. In the Court of Session the appellant adhered to his statements of the 4th and 5th August and denied all knowledge of how his wife was killed, if she was killed at all.

As some stress has been laid by the Government Advocate on the confession of the appellant before the Committing Magistrate on the 28th June, we may say at once that we attach no importance whatever to that confession. In our judgment in Firoze v. Emperor (1) decided to-day, we have already considered the question whether a confession made by an accused person to a Committing Magistrate under circumstances similar to those of the present case can have any value as a piece of evidence against him. For reasons given in that judgment, we hold that the appellant's confession, dated the 28th June, is even of less value than the confession of the accused in the case cited; and we must accordingly leave this confession out of consideration.

As regards the circumstantial evidence against the appellant reliance has been placed on the statements of Musammât Walayat (P. W. No. 4), Musammât Jannat (P. W. No. 5) and Ghazi (P. W. No. 6), as showing that on the last day that Musammât Karim Khatun had disappeared the appellant had come and taken her away from their well, where she was picking berries in the company of Musammât Walayat and Musammât Jannat; and that five days after that the appellant had returned to the village and said that he had left his wife at her mother's house. The statements of these witnesses which are relied upon by the prosecution were made in the Committing Magistrate's Court after the appellant had made his confession on the 33rd June; but they were all retracted in the Sessions Court; and the Sessions Judge has transferred the previous statements of the three witnesses concerned to his own record under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code. In view of the circumstances connected with the proceedings in the Committing Magistrate's Court, we must hold that the statements in question are of no evidential value at all; and it follows that the so-called circumstantial evidence relied upon by the prosecution must be rejected.

The Assessors were unanimously of opinion that it was not proved that the dead body found in the canal was that of Musammât Karim Khatun; and considering that the corpse was not in a recognizable condition and that the alleged identification of it was based simply upon the identification of the four articles of clothing (Exhibits P1 to P4), we are disposed to agree with the Assessors that the identity of the dead body with Musammât Karim Khatun has not been satisfactorily proved. But assuming that the body was that of Musammât Karim Khatun, we agree with the Assessors that it has not been proved by reliable evidence that the appellant had murdered the woman.

We accordingly accept this appeal and setting aside the appellant's conviction and sentence we acquit him.

Appeal accepted.

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Trichinopoly Division, in Case No. 12 of the Calendar for 1915.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—We see no reason to doubt the substantial truth of the prosecution story as to the dacoity, the manner in which deceased Karuppa Goundan met his death, or the complicity of appellants.

We do not, however, think that the act of the accused Nos. 1 and 2 amounts to murder. It seems clear that they stuffed a cloth into deceased's mouth in order to silence him, not with any idea of killing him, and the most that can be said is that they must be presumed to have known that they were likely in so doing to cause his death: (Vide last clause of section 299, Indian Penal Code). We alter the sections under which appellants have been convicted from sections 302 and 396, Indian Penal Code, to sections 304 and 395, Indian Penal Code. We reduce the sentences on accused Nos. 1 and 2 to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and confirm the sentences on the other appellants.

Security for good behaviour can, at the longest, be demanded for only one year except in very bad cases. Security for two years cannot be demanded, even if the accused is guilty of different offences in different places. [p. 439, col. 1.]

In such cases, a Magistrate should direct detention in prison, and not commit the accused to prison until the orders of the High Court are obtained. [p. 439, col. 1.]

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 123, clause (2), of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, in his letter, dated the 28th April 1915, (Reference on Calendar Case No. 7746 of 1915.)

FACTS.—Case referred by the Chief Presidency Magistrate. One Shakur Sait of Bangalore had been bound over in Rs. 500 with two sureties for good behaviour for two years, in default to suffer two years' rigorous imprisonment. The accused was unable to furnish the security required, and the sentence came up to the High Court for confirmation. It transpired in the course of the inquiry that the accused had been carrying on a series of frauds connected with the sale of electric rings, alleging that he was the agent of a Bombay firm under the name of Modi and Co., obtained advances from various persons, and then either failed to despatch any electric ring or despatched a smaller number than he had received money for. In one case he received Rs. 60 from a Vakild of the Cochin Chief Court representing that he was related to the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Haji Ismail Sait, and subsequently he sent to the Vakild a V. P. parcel for Rs. 447, requesting him to take delivery of it, but not to open it until he arrived. The Vakild suspected something wrong and placed the matter in the hands of the Criminal Investigation Department, when the various other frauds came to light. It was also in evidence that the electric rings were utterly useless.

ORDER.—I think that the accused need not have been asked to give security for more than one year, which is contemplated by the Legislature as the longest limit to be adopted except in very bad cases.

I, therefore, reduce such period to one year and the period to be mentioned in the consequent order of imprisonment on default to one year.

The error of the Magistrate in committing the accused to prison pending this Court's orders instead of directing his detention in prison is noted. The period for which the accused has already been in prison will be treated as having been spent in prison, though the order of committal passed just now.

Messrs. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar and K. R. Subramania Sastri, for the Prisoners.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants have been convicted of offences under sections 326 and 397, Indian Penal Code. They are said to have waylaid a Revenue Inspector, Prosecution Witness No. 1, and to have wounded and robbed him of his property, causing injuries amounting to grievous hurt. The main offence is, of course, under section 397, Indian Penal Code.

The grievous hurt which constitutes the offence under section 326, is an integral part of the offence under section 397, Indian Penal Code, and need not have been made the subject of a separate charge. The first clause of section 71, Indian Penal Code, precludes the imposition of separate sentences for the two offences and if we were able to uphold the conviction, we should have to consider what reduction should be made in the joint sentences which the Sessions Judge has imposed for the two offences.

We are, however, unable to uphold the conviction. On the one hand, the procedure of the learned Sessions Judge is illegal as regards the evidence of an important witness (Prosecution Witness No. 11) and on the other, his direction to the Jury appears to us to be materially defective and calculated to prejudice the defence.

Prosecution Witness No. 11 is or should be a very important witness. He was a peon in attendance on the Revenue Inspector at the time of the alleged offence, and was himself beaten and driven away. Before the committing Magistrate he gave a deposition supporting the Revenue Inspector as to the commission of the offences but expressing inability to identify his assailants. In the Sessions Court he was simply tendered for cross-examination while at the same time his deposition in the Magistrate's Court was put in and marked as Exhibit J. Admittedly the only section which could be cited to cover, this procedure is section 288 Criminal Procedure Code, and this is inapplicable for the simple reason that the witness was not "produced and examined" as required therein. The same point has been ex.

In re VICTOR D. SOUZA.

haustively dealt with by a Bench of this Court in Subba v. Queen-Empress (1) Kernan, Officiating Chief Justice, says: "The provision is not that the evidence before the Magistrate may be put in as the evidence of the witness if he is tendered for cross-examination, but it is that such evidence before the Magistrate may be treated as evidence in the case, if the witness is examined; that is, examined as a witness, not if he is cross-examined or tendered for cross-examination." The course adopted by the Sessions Judge in that case was taken at the instance of the defence: but the learned Chief Justice proceeds to say that had it not been so (and it is not the case here) he would have felt it his duty, apparently on this ground alone, to set aside the conviction.

In our opinion the Sessions Judge should have caused Prosecution Witness No. 11 to be examined before him under section 286, Criminal Procedure Code; and his admission of Exhibit J was illegal.

As regards the charge to the Jury, we think the learned Sessions Judge has erred in his presentation of the evidence regarding the discovery of the "knife stick", on which he lays stress as corroboration of prosecution 1st witness' evidence (vide paragraph 7 of the charge). The Judge says, "you have the second fact that the weapon which, Syfuddin (Prosecution Witness No. 1) says, was used to cause the injuries on his head, was found in the house of the 1st accused's father." The house in which the article was found was not that of the 1st accused but of his father. The 1st accused says he lives, not there, but in the house of his mother-in-law and has adduced some evidence to prove this. If this be so, no inference adverse to the 1st accused can be drawn from the discovery, at any rate, none worthy of consideration. The Sessions Judge has made no reference to this: nor has he directed the attention of the Jury to the common nature of the article or to the extreme difficulty, not to say impossibility, of Prosecution Witness No. 1 being able to identify the weapon used. On the other hand, he has commented on the fact that the weapon was stained with mammalian (not necessarily human) blood; and has instructed the Jury that it was the duty of the defence to explain how mammalian blood came there. In view of the circumstances alluded to above, we certainly do not think that the defence was under any obligation to adduce evidence on the point: and we think that the Sessions Judge's presentment of this portion of the evidence can hardly have failed to prejudice the appellants.

In contrast to the stress laid on the circumstances, the Sessions Judge has not referred to the failure of the prosecution to trace the dagger (the principal weapon employed) and the property named in Exhibit II; and has not properly left it to the Jury to draw what inference they would from the failure of the prosecution to examine a number of witnesses originally named in the charge-sheet (vide paragraph 12 of his charge).

We must set aside the convictions and sentences and direct the re-trial of the appellants. The re-trial will take place before the Sessions Judge of Chingleput.

Conviction and sentence set aside.

ORDER.—The marriage between P. W. No. 2 is sufficiently proved, and is not in dispute. The facts found do not amount in law to connivance. It is argued that accused should have been asked if he were an European British subject under section 454 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, but having regard to section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, this, even if correct, is not a sufficient ground for interference.

No other point is argued.

The accused presented before the Registrar a certain document for registration, the execution of which was denied by the complainant but the Registrar directed it to be registered. Thereafter as the result of a civil suit instituted by the complainant, the document was found by the Court to be a forged one. A complaint was then presented before the Sub-Divisional Officer under sections 467, 471, Indian Penal Code, and process was issued under section 467, Indian Penal Code:

Held, that the Magistrate could proceed under section 471, Indian Penal Code, without obtaining the sanction of the Civil Court, but that so far as the proceedings founded on the offence under section 467, Indian Penal Code, were concerned he could not proceed without the previous sanction of the Civil Court. JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the proceedings should not be quashed on the ground that there was no such sanction as was requisite under section 195, clause (c), of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The accused presented before the Registrar a certain document for registration. The complainant denied the execution of the document, but the Registrar directed it to be registered. Thereupon a civil suit was instituted by the complainant before the Munsif to have it declared that the document was a forgery and the Munsif declared it to be a forgery. A complaint was then presented before the learned Sub-Divisional Officer under sections, amongst others, 467, 471, Indian Penal Code, and the Magistrate issued process under section 467, Indian Penal Code. The present petitioner, that is the accused, thereupon applied for and obtained the present Rule. The point that has been argued in this case is solely as to whether sanction is required for prosecution on a charge under section 467, Indian Penal Code. The point, so far as we are concerned, is covered by the decision of this Court in the case of Teni Shah v. Bolahi Shah (1). It is not necessary for us to state whether we concur in that decision or not because, in our view, the Magistrate could and can proceed under section 471, Indian Penal Code, without obtaining the sanction of the Munsif. The punishment that the Court can inflict for an offence under section 471, Indian Penal Code, if it is proved, is the same as that under section 467, Indian Penal Code. It has been decided by the High Court at Bombay in the case of Noor Mahomed Cassum v. Kaikhosru Maneckjee (2) that where an offence punishable under section 471, Indian Penal Code, is made out in a complaint, the use complained of being prior in date to the use of the document in question in evidence in a Civil Court, the sanction of such Court is not necessary under section 195 (1) (c), Code of the Criminal Procedure, before a Criminal Court can take cognizance of such offence. The decision seems to us to be correct and founded on good sense, namely, that sanction of the Civil Court is not necessary in the case of an offence that was committed by a prior use of the forged document outside the Court. If the story as told by the complainant in the present case be true, namely, that the forged document was used before the Registrar, then in the case of a prosecution for that offence, namely, for the use before the Registrar sanction of the Munsif would not be necessary. But so far as the proceedings founded on the offence under section 467, Indian Penal Code, are concerned, having regard to the decision of Teni Shah v. Bolahi Shah (1), referred to above, they cannot proceed without the previous sanction of the Munsif. The present Rule must, therefore, be made absolute to the extent we have mentioned.

Rule made absolute.

EMPEROR v. DURGA HALWAI.

"The law is that when a person is found in possession of stolen property very soon after the theft, he may be presumed to be the thief if there is no evidence to the contrary." Of course, this should be "unless he can account for his possession" and if the Judge meant (or the Jury were likely to understand him to mean) that they were to pay no attention to any explanation which accused might put forward in the absence of evidence to support it, then we should have to interfere. But a perusal of other passages in the charge convinces us that this was not his meaning, and that the Jury could not have so understood. The Judge reminded them that accused had claimed the property as his own, and then, after mentioning the absence of defence evidence, went on to discuss the probability of the story.

We do not think the passage referred to, though somewhat carelessly worded, could have misled the Jury: and we see no reason to interfere. The sentence is not excessive.

The conviction and sentence are confirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, in the matter of six persons, Durga Halwai, Mohendra Karmakar, Jai Gopal Das, Ganga Bissen, Dwarka Sukul and Sham Lal, who have been ordered to furnish security for good behaviour, the first four for three years, and the last two for two years, respectively, under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and who have all failed to furnish such security. The case made against them is that they are all by habit house-breakers and thieves, and form part of a gang who have been operating in Calcutta during the past three years or thereabouts. On behalf of Mohendra Karmakar and Jai Gopal Das it was argued that the Presidency Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take proceedings against them under section 110, because they were not within the local limits of his jurisdiction. There appears to be no force in this contention. Mohendra Karmakar may be a native of Midnapur, but it is proved that he was residing in Calcutta down to Agrahan last. He attempted (but without success) to show that he was carrying on a shop for the manufacture and sale of iron chests in a remote village in the Midnapur District. About December 1914 he disappeared. He was arrested in January in the Midnapur District in connection with a burglary committed at Serampore in December 1914. He was brought under arrest from Serampore to be placed before the Magistrate in this case. Jai Gopal was arrested in Calcutta at the shop of Kedar Bania. For him it was said that he lived at Sinthi near Dum Dum. It appears that he used to go there to the house of his mother-in-law and that he used a bicycle to come and go. It was argued that "within the local limits of his jurisdiction" must be read as "residing within the local limits etc.," and the case of Ketaboi v. Queen-Empress (1) was cited. The remarks in that judgment must be read in connection with the particular facts of that case, which were entirely different from those before us. In none of the sections 107 to 110 does the word "residing" occur, and to read it into those sections would involve a complete alteration of their scope and effect.

It was undoubtedly within the local limits of the Presidency Magistrate's jurisdiction that the habits of all these six persons, which are now complained of, were practised, and their evil reputation, if any, acquired. Of the merits of the case very little need be said. There is abundant and cogent evidence that all these six persons are habitual house-breakers and thieves. They have all been in jail, some of them once and once again, for similar offences. They all last emerged from jail at various dates from October 1911 to July 1912. Since then they have been associating in Calcutta with Parmessari and Sitanath, other offenders of the same class, and have formed a regular gang for the commission of house-breaking and theft. There is evidence of no less than 14 burglaries from 1912 down to 1914 in respect of which suspicion has fallen upon them. Their reputation as thieves is firmly established by the evidence of a number of witnesses including those called for the defence. It would be difficult to imagine a case in which the application of section 110 was more necessary or proper. We accordingly confirm the order of the Presidency Magistrate and direct that Durga Halwai, Mohendra Karmakar, Jai Gopal Das and Ganga Bissen be detained in prison for three years each, and Dwarka Sukul and Sham Lal for two years each, or until within such periods they respectively give the security to the Magistrate as ordered by him. The imprisonment will in each case be rigorous.

Electricity Act (IX of 1910), s. 33—"Every person" meaning of—Application of section.

In section 33 of the Electricity Act the term "every person" is not confined to persons who are licensed under parts II and III of the Act, nor is the section confined to cases in which the accident actually results in personal injury or death.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 432 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the fourth Presidency Magistrate, Madras, in his letter, dated the 11th June 1915, Reference No. 12453 of 1915.

FACTS.—The Electrical Engineer, Madras, prosecuted Mr. Hawkins, the Manager of the Indian Aluminium Factory, Triplicane, for failure to report an accident under section 33 of the Electricity Act. The shafts of one of the engines attached to the factory broke at a time when all the men were at the work. This accident was not reported. The fourth Presidency Magistrate before whom the complaint was made inquired into the case, and it was contended that the section applied only to persons who are license-holders under the Act, and that the only person to whom the accident should have been reported was the person appointed under the Factories Act. The Presidency Magistrate felt some doubt about the applicability of the Act to persons like the accused who are not licensees, and made, therefore, the present reference to the High Court.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Government.

Messrs. King and Partridge, for the Accused.

ORDER.—In making the reference the Presidency Magistrate should have distinctly formulated the questions of law which he referred for our opinion.

So far as we can deduce them from his letter of reference, they are two in number.

(1) Whether the term 'every person' in section 33 of Act IX of 1910 is confined to persons licensed under Parts II and III of the Act?

(2) Whether section 33 is confined to cases in which the accident actually results in personal injury or death?

Our answer to both questions is "No." As regards the second we may add that the wording of the section is perfectly clear and specifies cases likely to have resulted in loss of life or personal injury as well as those which actually so resulted. Whether such a result was likely in any case in which it did not actually ensue is a question of fact to be determined with reference to the surrounding circumstances.

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the criminal proceedings instituted against the petitioners should not be quashed on the ground that the facts alleged do not constitute an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. The learned District Magistrate has forwarded a very long explanation from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, which I do not think we need go into. The facts relating to the present case are as follows; at any rate, these are the allegations, because nothing stated in this judgment must be deemed to be facts proved against the accused, but they are facts which will be assumed for the purposes of the present Rule. There are 12 accused in the present case who are all related to one another. The first three accused are the petitioners before us. As long ago as the year 1900, there was a civil suit instituted by the accused or some of them against one Purna Chandra Som, who is the father of the present complainant. That suit was compromised on the 18th February 1902 and by the terms of the compromise, which was signed by, amongst others, the three petitioners, it was declared that a certain piece of land was the property of Purna Chandra Som. The three petitioners on the 25th August 1914 instituted criminal proceedings against Lolit Mohan Som, i.e., the present complainant, charging him with mischief under section 426, Indian Penal Code, and, during those proceedings, the complainant and his father discovered, so the allegation is, that a kobala, dated the 12th February 1914, and two pattas had been executed. They obtained certified copies of those documents and thereupon the present petitioners abandoned the prosecution of Lolit Mohan Som under section 426. The petitioners stated that they would bring a civil suit. That was on the 12th September 1914. On the 21st September 1914, Lolit applied for summons against all the accused for having committed an offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. Apparently, five prosecutions were instituted on the ground that the documents had been presented for registration on five different dates. The only question we have got to consider in this case is whether any case has been disclosed upon the complaint which would bring the case within the meaning of section 192 of the Indian Penal Code. The kobala, which is one of the documents on which the present prosecution is founded, must be taken in the present case to have included, in the description of the land conveyed, a portion of the property which was given to the complainant's father by the compromise of the 18th February 1902. If that be so, it seems to me that the document will fall within the definition of 'fabrication of false evidence' as given in section 192. The decisions of the High Courts in India, at any rate some of them, would seem to show that section 192 is limited to such cases as those in which the fabricated evidence is, in fact, admissible under the terms of the law of evidence. Speaking for myself, I have gravest doubt whether those decisions are correct. I think the words of the section will show that it is the intention that creates the criminal offence and not the fact as to whether, under the terms of the law, the document is admissible in evidence. The view expressed in the cases mentioned might raise a considerable difficulty in cases where the Judge has improperly admitted in evidence a document not admissible under the terms of the law. However, we have not got to consider that in this case, because the kobala in this case seems to me to be clearly admissible under section 13 of the Evidence Act. If it is admissible under section 13, then the accused who are the petitioners before us asserted a right to convey the property which, we must take for the present purpose, includes a portion of the property of the complainant's father. If they did that with criminal intent, it seems to me that that would be a fabrication of false evidence, within the meaning of section 192 of the Indian Penal Code, and if the facts are proved, the accused—the petitioners before us—could be convicted of an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. I do not wish to express any opinion one way or the other as to whether this document does, in fact, do so. That is a matter to be argued at the trial. This is a document in Bengali, which language I do not know. I have had only extracts read to me by one of the learned gentlemen who appear to show cause, from which I cannot say at the present moment that the statements asserted in this kobala would not, if a criminal intent is proved, render the petitioners before us liable to conviction under section 193. I think, therefore, that the present Rule ought to be discharged.

BEACHOROFF, J.—I agree. I think the document would be admissible in evidence. But, in my view, the question of admissibility is not all important, the real question is the intention of the accused.

The primary requisite for the obligation to give notice to the Police under section 8 of the Explosive Substances Act is not "serious injury to property" but an accidental explosion. If the explosion was designed, the obligation to give notice does not arise even if the explosion may have been attended with "serious injury to property". [p. 447, col. 1.]

The word "occupier" in section 8 of the Act refers to some one on the spot at the time of the explosion who must necessarily have become aware of the explosion. [p. 447, col. 1.]

Unless the omission to give notice is intentional, section 176, Indian Penal Code, does not apply. [p. 447, col. 2.]

Review of the order of the second Class Township Magistrate of Zilin, dated the 14th of November 1914, passed in Criminal Trial No. 77 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.—The accused in the case was the manager of a quarry in which dynamite was used for blasting. The quarry is in the Kyaikto Sub-Division of the Thaton District. On a day on which he was in Rangoon a large piece of stone crashed through the roof of a villager's house, which is on the other side of a public road a short distance from the quarry, and did considerable damage to the house. The stone was thrown out of the quarry by the force of an explosion of dynamite. No report of what had happened was made to the Police by any of those concerned in the quarrying. When the accused returned to the quarry the authorities had the matter already under investigation. He made no report of it in consequence, he says, of the Police already knowing about it. He was prosecuted for an offence punishable under section 176 of the Indian Penal Code, in that being legally bound to give notice to a public servant he intentionally omitted to give the notice.

Section 8 of the Explosives Act contains the provision, which, it is said, bound the accused to give notice to the officer in charge of the nearest Police station. Eliminating what is not applicable to the accused's case, the section says that whenever there occurs in or about or in connection with any place in which an explosive is used any accident by explosion attended with serious injury to property, the occupier of the place shall forthwith give notice thereof to the officer in charge of the nearest Police station.

The first question that arises in the case is whether there was "any accident by explosion." There is no evidence that dynamite exploded accidentally for all that appears, a charge of dynamite inserted into rock may have been exploded designedly at the time it was designed to explode. This explosion may have been attended with serious injury to property; but serious injury to property is not the preliminary requisite for the obligation to give notice. The primary requisite is an accidental explosion. The records sent up with the case go to show that the occurrence and injury to the complainant's house were due to rash use of dynamite for blasting rock in the near vicinity of houses and a public road rather than to any accidental explosion. If they were not due to the latter the obligation imposed by section 8 of the Explosives Act did not apply.

The next question is whether the accused was the occupier of the place at the time any accidental explosion occurred. The section imposes on the occupier the duty of forthwith giving notice of the accidental explosion. This necessarily means that the occupier must be some one on the spot at the time, who must necessarily have become aware of the explosion.

The whole object of the section is to ensure that the Police shall be at once informed of an accidental explosion attended with serious consequences. In case of such an explosion when explosives are being carried in a vessel or in any sort of carriage it is not the owner of the vessel or carriage who is made liable to give notice, but the master of the vessel or person in charge of the carriage. In the cases of such persons the provision of the section requires no impossibility: they can and must forthwith give notice. The word 'forthwith' cannot be read in their case as meaning "as soon as they hear of the accident" nor, in my opinion, can it be so read in the case of an "occupier". When using this last word the Legislature must be taken to refer to an occupier in whose power it is to comply with the obligation of forthwith giving notice after the accidental explosion, and no one but an actual occupant of the place at the time of the explosion could comply with such obligation. The accused in this case, having been away from the place when the so-called accident occurred, was not liable to be convicted for not having given notice of it. Even if he were the question would remain whether he intentionally omitted to give notice. It shall have been obvious that he did not do so, and that he was not liable to punishment under section 176 of the Penal Code. The peculiar reasoning by which the Township Court and the District Magistrate avoided dealing directly with the necessary question of whether the accused had intentionally omitted to give notice is not creditable to either of them, and displays an undue inclination to apply the Penal Law in a manner in which it was not applicable.

The prosecution appears to me to have been entirely misconceived. If a punishable offence was committed by any one it was of an entirely different nature, which the records sent with the case show, that the District Magistrate was aware of.

The conviction and sentence are set aside. The accused is acquitted. The fine paid will be refunded.

Dr. Swaminadhan, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Sydney Smith, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—There was no evidence before the Sessions Court against accused Nos. 2, 6 and 7 other than their own admissions in the Court below and the Sessions Court itself. The admissions in the Court below were made in answer to an invitation from the Committing Magistrate to say what they had to say. At the time when these statements were made in the Court of the Committing Magistrate the prosecution had given no evidence at all involving any one of these accused, as appears from an examination of the record of the evidence given in that Court. Section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure only gives the Magistrate the right to question the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. We think that where no evidence has been given implicating the accused, the Magistrate has no right under the Statute to put questions to the accused or invite him to make a statement. We further think that if a statement is made by the accused in such circumstances, it is not admissible evidence against the accused on his subsequent trial. This is in agreement with the decision of White, C. J., in Mohideen Abdul Kadir v. Emperor (1) and the same principle was applied by Erle, J., in Reg. v. Berriman (2) to a statement elicited from a prisoner improperly questioned by an examining Magistrate in England. The same objection applies to the answers elicited from the accused by the learned Judge at the trial; and we feel constrained to say that the learned Judge subjected the accused to a cross-examination which far outstripped anything enjoined or permitted by section 342 of the Code. We set aside the convictions of accused Nos. 2, 6 and 7.

(1) 27 M. 238; 2 Weir 408; 1 Cr. L. J. 566.

(2) 6 Cox. C. C. 388.

With regard to the 4th accused, there is some evidence against him, but it is practically the word of Prosecution Witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 against that of the 4th accused. The surrounding circumstances throw no light on the probabilities of the matter and we do not think it would be safe to convict on the evidence of two interested persons. We set aside this conviction and sentence also.

Appeal allowed.

[p. 450, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated the 4th May 1915.

Mr. St. George Jackson, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Ajudhi, has been convicted on a charge of murdering his wife by the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi and sentenced to transportation for life.

It appears from the evidence of Rajjab, the chaukidar of the village, that the deceased was living with the accused from six or seven years, and that for 12 or 18 months, preceding the murder, the accused had been complaining to him of an intrigue between his wife and a man named Raghunath and had asked him to remonstrate with Raghunath in the matter. Raghunath states that about a year and a half ago he had an intrigue with the wife of the accused, and had a serious quarrel with him about it, of which a report was made by him to the Police. On the morning of the 29th March 1915 the accused went as usual to his fields to work, and on returning at about 4 gharis after dawn with a bundle of grass, found Raghunath, it is stated, outside his house. The house of Raghunath is close to the house of the accused, there being only a passage or small piece of open ground between the two.

The story for the prosecution is that the accused got angry at finding Raghunath opposite his door and bringing a lathi from inside his house, abused him and struck him twice on his legs with his lathi. Raghunath warded off the blows with his stick, which broke in consequence, and fled and entered the house of some other person to save himself. The wife of the accused, who is said to have been pounding barley at the time, shut herself up meanwhile in a room, the doors of which she closed from inside. The accused battered at the doors with a hatchet, and on his wife coming out and trying to escape he seized her and killed her. The fact of the killing is admitted by the accused. His version is that he killed her because he saw her on a cot with Raghunath inside the house, committing adultery.

The evidence adduced to support the story of the prosecution consists of Raghunath, Ram Lal and Ibrahim Beg. Raghunath is naturally interested in minimising any part he might have taken in the affair which led to the murder. Ram Lal is a neighbour and professes to have seen Raghunath outside the house of the accused when he was attacked, and to have witnessed the murder from the roof of his house. But, as stated by the learned Sessions Judge, Ram Lal has had a considerable motive for hostility towards the accused in connection with the property of one of his relations, which the accused had seized. There was also a quarrel and a fight between the accused and Ram Lal in connection with it. The learned Sessions Judge considered that Ram Lal had lied in his endeavour to conceal that hostility and in that state of circumstances it is difficult to place any reliance on his statement. Ibrahim Beg states that on hearing the alarm he went to the house of the accused and found it chained from inside, that he went to the house of Ram Lal, and finding no access to the roof there came back to the door of the accused and found its chain undone, and that when he entered, the murder was being committed. He does not, however, profess to have seen Ram Lal on his roof, and if as stated by Chajju Singh and Ibrahim Beg there is no access or stairway leading to the roof of Ram Lal, the statement of Ram Lal that he was present at the time when Raghunath was attacked and saw the murder from his roof, becomes open to question. The prosecution evidence cannot be trusted.

VENKATACHALAM CHETTY v. CHAIRMAN, MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

Re KOSA KUMARAN.

If Raghunath was seen merely standing outside the house of the accused, which is close to his own door, there was little reason for the accused to have taken exception at his presence, and still less reason for him to have attacked his wife or for the wife to have shut herself up in one of the rooms of her house.

The story told by the accused, namely that Raghunath was found with his wife inside his house on a cot, is, therefore, more probable, and whether they were committing adultery at the time or not, the provocation caused by their being found lying together on a cot in view of the previous intrigue, was sufficiently grave and sudden to disturb the equanimity of the accused. The case is, therefore, one falling within the exception contained in section 300 of the Indian Penal Code.

I alter the conviction accordingly into one under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code and considering the circumstances, sentence the accused to rigorous imprisonment for two years.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by the District Magistrate of Coimbatore, in his letter, dated the 27th June 1915, R. O. C. No. 500 (a) Miscellaneous Petition of 1915.

The Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The Sub-Divisional Magistrate says he ordered the transfer “for the ends of justice” but he has recorded no reasons, and as the District Magistrate has made this reference, we presume we are right in inferring that he does not agree with the Sub-Divisional Magistrate as to the expediency of the order. It would have been better if he had expressed his opinion clearly on this point.

As, however, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate’s order of transfer is, on the face of it, in conflict with section 528 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, we hereby set it aside.

ORDER.—We think that no person should be bound over to be of good behaviour under both sections 109 and 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The sections contemplate different classes of cases and if a man is amenable under section 109 he can hardly be amenable under section 110, and vice versa. In this case evidence shows the prisoner was properly bound over under section 110, and we see no evidence to justify his being bound over under section 109. JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—It is clearly proved that the accused in this case backed deceased Dinni to death with a tangi. The lower Court convicted him of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Against this conviction he appeals, and at the same time the case has been taken up by this Court in revision and the accused has been called on to show cause why the conviction should not be altered to one under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and the sentence enhanced.

I have no hesitation whatever in rejecting the appeal, as the evidence leaves no doubt that the deceased was killed by the accused and by no one else.

As regards the nature of the offence it seems to me that it certainly amounts to murder. The nature of the wounds and of the weapon used are such that a sober man would undoubtedly be presumed to know that the wounds were likely to prove fatal. Section 86 of the Indian Penal Code makes it clear that ordinary drunkenness (appellant is said to have been drunk) makes no difference to the knowledge with which a man is credited. If the accused knew what the natural consequences of his act were, he must be presumed to have intended to cause them. The offence, therefore, comes within the substantive portion of section 300 of the Indian Penal Code. It is pleaded on behalf of the accused that it also comes within exception 4 to the same section. This is for him to show. It may be conceded that the offence was committed "without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel," but the accused has also to show that he took no undue advantage and did not act in a cruel or unusual manner. The evidence makes it perfectly clear that the deceased had only a small stick like a cane, while the accused fell upon him with a tangi, a sort of battle-axe ordinarily carried by these hill-men. To my mind it is clear that in so doing the accused did take an undue advantage and acted in a cruel and unusual manner, and that he is precluded from availing himself of this exception. My learned brother, however, takes a different view: and while I myself with great deference think that the accused should have been charged with and convicted of murder, I am not sure that the case is one in which the interests of justice imperatively require the interference of this Court in revision.

I would, therefore, simply confirm the conviction and the sentence passed by the lower Court and dismiss the appeal.

TYABJI, J.—The accused was charged under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code of having committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts proved, at the trial, were that the accused and the deceased were drunk, and quarrelled. Then the accused struck the deceased 11 times with his tangi which severed the arteries, and caused the death of the deceased. The Sessions Judge found the accused guilty, and sentenced him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment.

I agree with my learned brother that the appeal should be dismissed for the reasons mentioned by him.

With reference to the revisional proceedings, the question is whether the accused was guilty not only of culpable homicide

but of murder, and whether we ought to convict him under section 302 instead of section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, enhancing the sentence.

It is true that section 86 of the Indian Penal Code lays down that in certain cases an intoxicated person shall be liable to be dealt with "as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated." But it does not provide that the intoxicated person shall be dealt with as if he had the same intent. It seems to me that the word "intent" was advisedly omitted, as "knowledge" and "intent" are both referred to in the earlier portion of the section. On the other hand, it must be noted that section 86 expressly deals with "cases where an act [is] done with a particular knowledge or intent." It may, therefore, be (as was contended by the Public Prosecutor) that section 86 implies that intent should be inferred from knowledge, though knowledge alone is expressly imputed to the intoxicated person. The section should, in my opinion, be construed strictly. But it is unnecessary to express any final opinion on this aspect of the case and on the effect of the necessary inferences to be drawn from the knowledge which section 86 imputes to an accused person. For even taking the restricted interpretation of section 86 that is contended for as being the correct one on behalf of the accused, he comes within the "fourthly" mentioned case in section 300.

The question then is whether the facts entitle the accused to the benefit of the fourth exception to section 300. It is clear on the facts, as they appear from the evidence, that the case does come within the exception unless it is shown that the offender took undue advantage or acted in a cruel or unusual manner. It is in this connection that the Public Prosecutor has not satisfied my doubts. The accused was not put to his trial under this section. He would, therefore, not be concerned with proving that which would make exception 4 to section 300 available to him. The question, therefore, of the onus of proof as laid down in section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act cannot in fairness be pressed against the accused. Apart from it, I am not satisfied on the facts, as they now appear on the evidence, that the accused took any undue advantage, or acted in a cruel or unusual manner. For in this connection, I do not think that section 86 requires us to disregard the fact that accused was intoxicated; section 86 is a section which creates an artificial rule for the effect of evidence and the significance of facts. The section must be read as it is. It does not provide that in all criminal matters, and for deciding all questions under the Indian Penal Code "a person who is intoxicated shall be dealt with in the same way as if he had not been intoxicated, unless the thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge or against his will." I, therefore, think that it is very doubtful, even if the charge had been under section 302, and the case had to be decided on the materials before us, whether the accused should not be considered to have come under exception 4 to section 300. But remembering that the trial was under section 304 and not under section 302, I feel no doubt in giving expression to the opinion that the conviction ought not now to be altered to one under section 302 and that the sentence ought not to be enhanced.

My learned brother's view is different from mine on the question involved in the revision case; and I need hardly say that I cannot feel entire confidence in the correctness of my opinion on learning of his views. But whether my views are right or wrong I feel no doubt as to them. I am clearly of opinion that we should not interfere in revision and that the sentence should be confirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIYA AIYAR, J.—In the absence of the Police Sub-Inspector's report of the 22nd June 1913, on the basis of which the Salem Town Sub-Magistrate passed his order of the 27th June 1913, I cannot see my way to hold that the said order passed under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code was an order passed without jurisdiction. The said report of the Sub-Inspector of Police is not part of the record sent to us and before we could send for it, the two months during which the order is to remain in force would expire and there would be no use in revising the order after it is spent. I would, therefore, dismiss this petition, but I do not think it inappropriate to make some observations with reference to the proceedings of the lower Courts.

The Sub-Magistrate's proceedings of the 15th July 1913 lend some justification to the argument addressed to us by the petitioners' learned Vakil that the Sub-Magistrate considered himself legally bound by the "District Magistrate's order which prohibits the procession," evidently in perpetuity. The Sub-Magistrate, while he ought to give due and very great respect to the advice of the District Magistrate, ought to have used his own judicial mind on the Sub-Inspector's report and have come to his own conclusion whether a temporary and emergent order under section 144 ought to have been passed. The general "instructions" of the District Magistrate are not legally binding on the Sub-Magistrate in particular cases. Again there is some force in the petitioners' learned Vakil's contention that the Magistracy at Salem are, under the shelter of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code (which relates to the passing of provisional orders to tide over temporary emergencies and in cases where "immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable"), the Magistracy are under the shelter of that section trying to clutch at a much more extensive jurisdiction, namely, a jurisdiction to prohibit the petitioners by a permanent injunction from taking processions throughout an indefinite future period along the streets of Salem. I have no doubt that under section 15 of the Charter Act, we are entitled to prevent such indirect evasion by the Magistracy of the law as laid down in section 144 [see Remjit Singh v. Luchman Prasad (1), Satish Chandra Roy v. Emperor (2), Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Ohowdhrami (3) and Queen-Empress v. Pratap Chunder Ghose (4), (the observations in which cases indicate that the arm of the law is long enough to prevent such evasion of the Code by arbitrary and successive renewals of orders passed under section 144 and that the powers given to the High Court under clause 15 of the Charter Act are sufficient to prevent such evasion)].

The District Magistrate's order of the 23rd July 1913, refusing to set aside the Sub-Magistrate's order of the 22nd June 1913, does not state that there was again a temporary emergency and a continuing or existing insufficiency of the Police force to protect the petitioners in exercise of their rights. Unless such a ground is expressly mentioned and is prima facie established in any future order passed in connection with this question, the presumption would, in my opinion, be very strong that the order was passed merely in order to evade the provisions of section 144 and that the Magistracy are attempting to give themselves a much more extended jurisdiction than is covered by section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

With these observations I would dismiss this revision petition.

MILLER, J.—I agree in the order proposed, and entirely concur in my learned colleague's observations as to the attempt which, there seems reason to fear, the District Magistrate of Salem is making, to obtain a jurisdiction wider than that given him by section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners appear to have been unfairly dealt with. They were in possession of an area, formerly included in the Gujrat District but transferred under the operation of section 101A, Land Revenue Act, to Gujranwala District.

The land appears to be fit for cultivation but the Collector apparently, at the time of transferring the area, failed to pass an order of suspension, under section 101B, though such an order appears to have been passed at a much later date.

Consequently the transfer of this land to Gujranwala did not affect the proprietary rights of the petitioners, and they were entitled to retain possession even after the transfer.

Further, even if the transfer had caused a forfeiture of their proprietary rights it would not have justified their ejection otherwise than in the manner prescribed by

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1893), ss. 337, 338—Pardon—Penal statutes, interpretation of.

All that sections 337 and 338, Criminal Procedure Code, require is that there should be an offence that is triable exclusively by the Court of Session under inquiry or trial. The fact that there may be other offences alleged or charged which are not so triable will not invalidate the grant of any pardon. [p. 457, col. 1.]

The paramount object, in construing penal as well as other Statute, is to ascertain the Legislative intent, and the strict rule of construction is not violated by permitting the words to have their full meaning, or the more extensive of two meanings, when best effectuating the intention. [p. 457, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Larkana.

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for the Appellant.

Mr. E. Raymond (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—The appellant, Harumal, was Post Master in charge of a branch post office at Naundero, a village about 10 miles from Larkana. On or about the 17th or 18th April 1913 he received a money order which had been sent from Sukkur for payment of Rs. 15-1-0 to one Keshavdas Utamchand, a resident of Sukkur. The money order had been addressed to Naundero owing to a mistake. The prosecution case is that the appellant on the 19th April 1913 induced one Bindumal to forge Keshavadas' signature as payee and another person, by name Ramchand, to sign the money order as a witness of the payment after which he misappropriated the amount of the order, which he returned as having been duly paid. He has been convicted by the Sessions Court of abetment of forgery under sections 467 and 114, Indian Penal Code, and of criminal breach of trust as a public servant under section 409, Indian Penal Code.

The main evidence against him consists of the depositions of Bindumal and Ramchand. The latter two were originally 'challaned' by the Police as co-accused, but the enquiring Magistrate at the request of the prosecution tendered a pardon to Ramchand under section 337, Criminal Procedure Code, and he was examined as a witness both in the Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court. Bindumal was committed for trial with the appellant, Harumal, on charges under sections 467 and 409/114, Indian Penal Code, but on the second day of the trial in the Sessions Court he was tendered and accepted a pardon under section 338, Criminal Procedure Code. He was then ordered to be examined as a witness for the prosecution, which was done.

Mr. Lalchand, for appellant, contends that both these pardons were illegally granted, and that the evidence of these two witnesses must, therefore, be excluded from consideration as inadmissible. His contention is that a strict interpretation must be put on sections 337 and 338, which only authorise the tender of a pardon "in the case of any offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session or High Court," and that as the offence under section 409, Indian Penal Code, was not so exclusively triable, the condition precedent to the grant of pardon under those sections was not fulfilled.

In the present case the alleged offence under section 467, Indian Penal Code, was triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, and the question is whether the fact that there was an additional offence charged against the accused, which was not so triable, prevents the application of the provisions of sections 337 and 338. I think the Legislature clearly shows that this is not intended. In the first place, the grant of a pardon under those sections extends not only to the particular offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered to the approver, but also as indicated by section 339, sub-section (1), to "any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter." This is clearly shown to be so by Straight, J., in Queen-Empress v. Ganga Charan (1). If a pardon is intended to be restricted to cases where no other offence was charged, but one exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, then the Legislature would scarcely have inserted in section 339 (1) the words "or for any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter." This supposition is strengthened (1) 11 A. 79 at pp. 87, 89; A. W. N. (1888) 280; 13 Ind. Jur. 193.

HARUMAL PARMANAND V. EMPEROR.

thened by the condition on which the Legislature authorises the tender of a pardon, namely, that the approver shall make "a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to such offence." If those circumstances afford ground for the joinder of a charge of an offence not exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, then it can scarcely be supposed that the Legislature would intend that this should be prohibited in the case in which a pardon is tendered under section 337 or section 338, in spite of the general provisions of sections 233 and 235, Criminal Procedure Code, to the contrary. If there had been any such intention, an exception to section 335 would presumably have been made accordingly. Sub-section (4) of section 337 also clearly implies that there may be an offence triable by a Magistrate in addition to the offence in respect of which the pardon is tendered. Nor can it reasonably be supposed that the Legislature intended that a Court should be precluded in such cases from exercising the general powers, conferred upon it by section 227, of adding a charge at any time before judgment is pronounced, etc. And if a Court may subsequently add a charge of an offence not triable exclusively by a Sessions Court, why should the fact of there being such an additional charge framed already prevent the tender of a pardon in cases where there is an offence exclusively triable by a Sessions Court actually under inquiry or trial? In my opinion all that sections 337 and 338 require is that there should be an offence that is triable exclusively by the Sessions Court under inquiry or trial; and the fact that there may be other offences alleged or charged, which are not so triable, is immaterial. In such cases the offence triable exclusively by the Sessions Court is obviously the main offence charged, being generally punishable with heavier punishment and treated by the Legislature as more serious than others not so triable; and the condition that a pardon should be tendered only when there is such an offence under inquiry or trial is clearly due to a desire to limit the power of pardon to cases where the seriousness of the main crime alleged may justify such an exercise of the prerogative of the Crown, which is delegated to the Courts under these sections. This view is strengthened by the history of section 337. In the corresponding section 209 of the Code of 1861 [cited in Reg. v. Remedios (2)], as also in section 347 of the Code of 1872, the Magistrate mentioned therein was authorised "to tender a pardon to any one or more of the persons supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to any offence... triable (exclusively) by the Court of Session," and the present sub-section (1) of section 337 (which reproduces similar provisions in the Code of 1882) contains nothing to justify the view that any alteration of the law was intended. Similarly the fact that Mr. Lalchand admits he cannot adduce any authority in support of his proposition goes against his contention. Thus, as the Public Prosecutor points out, in the case of Queen-Empress v. Mulua (3) a pardon was tendered to a person charged under section 392, Indian Penal Code, an offence not exclusively triable by a Sessions Court, as well as under section 302, Indian Penal Code, yet no objection to the validity of the pardon was taken on that ground. It is clear that the Courts have not construed sections 337 and 338 in the narrow manner Mr. Lalchand would have us do, and in my opinion there is no good ground for any such narrow construction. As pointed out in Maxwell's "Interpretation of Statutes," 3rd Edition, pages 385, 398*: "The paramount object, in construing penal as well as other Statutes, is to ascertain the Legislative intent; and the rule of strict construction is not violated by permitting the words to have their full meaning, or the more extensive of two meanings, when best effectuating the intention."

For similar reasons I think it is clear that when an accused person is tendered and accepts a pardon under section 337 or section 338, he ceases to be an accused person to whom the provisions of section 342 are applicable. This is clear from the provisions of sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 337. It is quite unnecessary in such a case for the prosecution to be withdrawn against him under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, and if the remarks in Banu Singh v. Emperor (4) are intended to lay down the contrary,

UDA v. EMPEROR.

I respectfully dissent from them. There is also no good ground for the suggestion that the words "any person" in section 338 do not cover an accused person before the Sessions Judge. Section 343 shows the contrary and it is difficult to see any other case to which the section would apply. In my opinion, therefore, the evidence of Bindumal and Ramchand is admissible against the appellant.

On the merits, I can see no good ground for differing from the conclusions of the learned Sessions Judge. It is most improbable that Keshavdas would deny the signature purporting to be his on the money order, if he had really signed it, and the surrounding circumstances are entirely against any probability of his going to Naundero and receiving payment there on the 19th April. The theory that his denial is a false one made at the instigation of the Police Inspector or Postal Inspector, who enquired into the case, has nothing substantial to support it.

The two approvers have, no doubt, made previous contradictory statements, but, as the Sessions Judge points out, this is natural having regard to the fact that they were then in the position of accused persons. No doubt Ramchand's first confessional statement of 12th August 1913 was probably made under hope of pardon, but this is immaterial, as he was subsequently pardoned when Ramchand was subsequently examined by the Police Inspector on October 28th and resiled from the former statement, he, no doubt, did so because he thought that the Police inquiry would result in proceedings against him. Also it is not natural that in his first confessional statement he should merely say that the amount of Rs. 15-1 was paid to Bindumal and not given the further details as to his getting re-payment of a loan of Rs. 10 out of this amount, which appear in the subsequent statements to the Magistrates and the Sessions Court. I can see no reason to disbelieve Ramchand's deposition because of his previous statements. As regards Bindumal he appears to have merely denied his guilt, as was natural, until he was examined after accepting his conditional pardon.

The evidence against the appellant of these two approvers is corroborated by the fact of the money not being paid to the right payee Keshavdas and the circumstances under which the money order reached the accused, and gave him, more than any one else, an opportunity to commit a fraud of the kind alleged. It is further corroborated by the accused's own statements, which are inconsistent on the point whether Keshavdas was really paid or some one unknown to the accused who represented himself as Keshavdas and as the Sessions Judge shows the denial in his second statement that he knew Bindumal before, is clearly an afterthought and false. The circumstances, in which Bindumal's name was first elicited, also point to the truth of his participation in the affair. And it is almost impossible that he or Ramchand could have taken part in the forgery without the appellant's connivance. The evidence of Ramchand as to the loan of Rs. 10 supplies a good reason for his being taken into the conspiracy; and, no doubt, the appellant thought that, as there might be enquiries regarding the payment, it was desirable to have a second person who could support the payment.

The evidence of the two approvers is consistent and to my mind bears the stamp of truth. It is also, I think, sufficiently corroborated to justify its being used as the basis of appellant's conviction. In my opinion there is no reasonable doubt as to his guilt; and I would confirm the convictions and sentences and dismiss the appeal.

PRATT, J. C.—I concur.

BY THE COURT.—The appellant, who is on bail, must be taken into custody and re-committed to jail to serve the remainder of this imprisonment.

Appeal dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 392, 395—When robbery is dacoity—Approver's testimony—First report, name of culprit not mentioned in, effect of—Value of evidence of identification and production of stolen property.

An offence of robbery cannot be converted into an offence of dacoity where there is a simple allegation but not adequate proof on behalf of the prosecution that five or more persons have taken part in committing or attempting to commit the crime. [p. 460, col. 2.]

UDA v. EMPEROR.

An approver's testimony is not sufficiently corroborated so as to base a conviction thereon by

(a) the accused's producing stolen property from a place not in his possession as such an evidence can be easily fabricated; [p. 460, col. 2.]

(b) the evidence of the witnesses alleging to have recognized the culprit at the time of committing the crime where his name does not find a place in the first report to the Police made by a person who had ample time before doing so to discuss the matter with them (witnesses.) [p. 460, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, with section 30 powers, Kaithal, District Karnal, dated the 23rd December 1914, convicting the appellants.

Mr. Morrison, for the Appellants.

Mr. Herbert, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 24th November 1914 Parbu, a money-lender of the village of Hibana in the Karnal District, had gone to the village of Kasan in order to settle his accounts with Surta, son of Mughla, who owed him a large amount of money. For this purpose he had brought with him his account books, which contained the records of his debts of Uda and Nanak also. He had had conversation with Surta, son of Mughla, during the day and his story is, that after he had gone to bed in the shop of his friend, Mathra Das, at some time before midnight, Surta, son of Mughla, together with Uda and Bhola came to the shop, and knocking him up asked him for some water. Having lit a lamp he opened the door and let them come in. As soon as the door was opened, Surta, son of Mughla, seized him while Bhola and Uda broke open the chest belonging to Mathra Das in which Parbu was keeping his account books. This chest contained also a number of ornaments and other articles which were the property of Mathra Das.

Having emptied the box the thieves made off with the account books and other property, but the story is that in addition to these three there were two others, namely, Surta, son of Bhola, and Nanak, who were waiting in the lane outside, having come there with the object of assisting in the robbery.

All five persons are said to have been identified not only by Parbu, but also by Mathra Das and four other witnesses for the prosecution.

Surta, son of Mughla, was granted a pardon by the District Magistrate, not so much because it was thought that no conviction could be obtained without his assistance, but in order that the stolen property might be recovered. In addition to his statement there is also further evidence that part of the stolen property was produced not only by the approver himself, who produced the bulk of it, but also by Surta, son of Bhola, Bhola and Nanak Uda produced nothing.

This is the story which has been believed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, exercising powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, who sentenced Uda, Bhola, Surta son of Bhola, and Nanak to transportation for seven years each.

All the convicts have now preferred appeal to this Court.

The fact of the robbery cannot be denied.

There appears to be no doubt that Bhola and Uda participated in it. Both were mentioned along with the approver in the first report made by Parbu and it is obvious that he could easily have indentified them. There is no doubt that there was genuine recovery of the stolen ornaments and clothes from Bhola's house and though nothing was recovered from Uda, there does not appear to be any reason why he should have been falsely accused. The fact that he had none of the stolen property in his possession is explained by the approver by saying that he ran away early. This statement is borne out by what is to be found in the Police diary, and I think it is true.

The case of the other appellants, however, stands on a different footing. The Magistrate has stated in his judgment that in his first report Parbu specifically incriminated all five thieves. This statement is incorrect.

The first report which was made at the thana the next day at midday mentions the presence of no one beyond Surta, son of Mughla, Uda and Bhola. The next day, i. e., the 26th of November, when the Police investigation had begun in the village of Kasan, Parbu stated that there had been several people standing outside the shop but still gave no names, and Mathra Das when examined mentioned four but not five thieves and included Nanak but not Surta, son of Bhola.

Seeing that the thana is only nine kos distance from Mauza Kasan and it took at least 12 hours to make the first report, it is obvious that Parbu cannot have set off in any great hurry and before he started, he had ample time to discuss the matter with those persons who now appear as prosecution witnesses and state that they saw all five thieves on the occasion of the robbery.

If, then, Nanak and Surta, son of Bhola, had really been identified at the time, their names would naturally have found a place in the first report.

As regards the possibility of their identification, the Magistrate remarks that the night was not dark and there was moon shining. The time of the robbery is now put at about 10-30 P. M. All that was stated in the first report was that it occurred before midnight, but even if 10-30 P. M. is correct, it seems more than doubtful whether the thieves could have been identified by the light of the moon which had not yet reached its first quarter.

There are, moreover, strong indications in the diaries that Nanak and Surta, son of Bhola were ultimately accused not because they had been actually seen, but for the reason that they had made themselves prominent in an earlier visit to the shop of Mathra Das during the day time. Nanak accused was in debt to Parbu and Surta and Bhola to Mathra Das and Parbu. They appear to have understood perfectly well that there were plenty of people who would be very glad if the books of the latter were made away with. The story of the prosecution witnesses that these accused took an active part in preventing them from coming to the assistance of Parbu is a later invention and although it is quite possible that in addition to the three men who entered the shop, there may have been others standing in the lane, I am very far from being satisfied that anyone else was then identified.

As regards these two appellants, the only remaining corroboration of the statement of the approver is their alleged production of certain ornaments. Surta is supposed to have produced a few ornaments from a pile of dung cakes inside the fenced enclosure belonging to one Sewa Ram. Nanak is supposed to have produced other ornaments from the same place. There is also a story that as the result of a statement by Nanak a stolen ring was recovered from his brother. The alleged discovery of this ring is later than the Police diaries which make no mention of it.

I am afraid I do not trust any of this evidence. It is of a kind which it is extremely easy to fabricate and it is not even adequate proof of the possession of the appellants. Keeping in view, therefore, the fact that these two appellants were not named until a comparatively late stage in the case, whereas if the prosecution story were true they would have been named immediately, I am not disposed to regard this alleged production as sufficient corroboration of the story told by the approver, and I hold that it is not adequately shown that there were more than three persons engaged in the robbery. This being so, I am unable to maintain the conviction of Bhola and Uda of dacoity and I convict them instead under section 392, Indian Penal Code.

There can, of course, be no doubt that the main offender in this case was Surta, son of Mughla, who has received a free pardon. Bhola was not interested, at least in the theft of Parbu's books. Uda was so interested, but to a much less extent than Surta, son of Mughla, and concerning him the evidence of the approver is that he joined reluctantly in the robbery and bolted before the proceeds were carried off. There can be no doubt that Parbu was put in fear of instant hurt but no actual injury was caused to him; and having regard to all the circumstances I think that the punishment awarded is unnecessarily severe. I sentence Bhola to five and Uda to three years' rigorous imprisonment. The order relating to them under section 545, Criminal Procedure Code, will hold good. Nanak and Surta, son of Bhola, are acquitted, their convictions and sentences being set aside.

Appeal partly accepted.

Criminal proceedings, stay of, pending disposal of civil proceedings.

Where a document presented for registration was impugned as a forgery, and on the refusal of the Registration Officer to register it, one party appealed to the District Registrar and filed a suit to compel registration, while the other party rushed into a Criminal Court with a charge of forgery against the attesting witnesses and the obligee:

Held, that this was a fit case in which criminal proceedings ought to be stayed until the disposal of the civil suit.]

In all such cases, the test is whether the accused would be prejudiced if the criminal proceedings are not stayed until the disposal of the civil suit, and in this respect there is no distinction between proceedings instituted in pursuance of sanction granted by a Court and those instituted by a party himself where no such sanction is necessary.

Anna Ayyar v. Emperor, 30 M. 226; 6 Cr. L. J. 131, followed.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue an order directing stay of further proceedings in Preliminary Register Case No. 11 of 1914, on the file of the Town second Class Magistrate of Trichinopoly, pending disposal of Original Suit No. 34 of 1915 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly.

ORDER.—The Sub-Registrar refused registration and criminal proceedings were at once instituted by the present counter-petitioner. The 1st petitioner has filed a suit under the provisions of the Registration Act. I am of opinion that this is a case where criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the disposal of civil proceedings. There will be no hardship to the counter-petitioner, while on the other hand the petitioners will be seriously hampered if criminal proceedings in which the 1st petitioner and the attesting witnesses are accused are not stayed. I do not think it makes any difference in principle whether the criminal proceedings have been instituted in pursuance of sanction given by a Court, or in the exercise of the right given to a party to institute proceedings when no sanction is necessary. In either case the test is, whether the party is likely to be prejudiced by criminal proceedings going on when a civil suit is pending in which the genuineness of the document is in issue. In the present case the law gives the 1st petitioner the right of appeal to the District Registrar and the right of a suit to direct registration. I can see no grounds for holding that when a party anticipating an appeal to the Registrar and a civil suit rushes into a Criminal Court, the Court should not stay proceedings pending the civil suit, especially when all the attesting witnesses are co-accused.

It is argued that the discretion of the 2nd Class Magistrate should not be disturbed. I am unable to find any intelligible ground on which the Sub-Magistrate refused to stay proceedings. The power of the High Court to stay proceedings is clear [Anna Ayyar v. Emperor (1)].

I direct that the criminal proceedings be stayed pending the disposal of Original Suit No. 34 of 1914. The District Munsif will see that the suit is disposed of as early as possible.

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, first Class, Amritsar, exercising enhanced powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, dated the 6th March 1915, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Roshan Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Herbert (Assistant Legal Remembrancer), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Udham Singh, a Jat aged 27 years of the village of Burj Rai in the Amritsar District, has been convicted by a Magistrate exercising powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, of an offence under section 20 of the Indian Arms Act, 1878, and has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. Pal Singh, his elder brother, has received a like sentence for abetting the same offence. From these convictions and sentences they have now appealed to this Court.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows. At about 7.45 p. m. on the evening of the 13th February last the two appellants were sitting under a palm tree just outside the Station Club grounds in the Ram Bagh at Amritsar. When asked by the two constables what they were doing, replied that they wanted to know where Mr. King, the Deputy Commissioner, and Mr. Broadway, the Superintendent of Police, were to be found. This aroused the suspicion of the constables, who called Mr. Perrott, the Assistant Superintendent of Police, from the Club. The appellants were then searched and a revolver with six cartridges were found in an outside pocket of Udham Singh's coat. In another of his pockets was a bottle half full of liquor. Udham Singh was sober, but Pal Singh was worse for the liquor. The original theory was that the appellants were waiting outside the Club with the object of making an attempt on the lives of Mr. King and Mr. Broadway, but it has been dismissed by the learned Magistrate, who has given excellent reasons for his finding which I need not repeat. The fact is that Pal Singh, who took his discharge from the 23rd Cavalry six years ago, is an inveterate visitor of European officers, as is evidenced by the statements of officers belonging to his late regiment and others. He had visited Major Howes of the 23rd Cavalry the previous day, and Lieutenant Colonel [Sherar on the 7th February. He had visited Mr. Broadway himself in December last. On that occasion also he was under the influence of liquor.

It has been fully established from tickets found on the person of Udham Singh that the original intention of the appellants who had left Lahore the same day was to proceed to Patti Station, which is close to their village.

For the reasons why they broke their journey at Amritsar, we have only the statement of Pal Singh from which it would appear that they left the station in order to drink at leisure. Then they wandered to the Ram Bagh, the probability being that Pal Singh had in his head the hasty idea of making a salam to European officers, whom he had previously met. It may be mentioned that he states that he previously had an interview with Mr. King who was then pleased to see him. However this may be, there is plenty of evidence that Pal Singh is a well disposed person, and, as the Magistrate has found, there is much to indicate that they did not visit the Ram Bagh with any sinister motive.

Their story was that the revolver belonged to their uncle, Sardar Chaugat Singh, a Risaldar in the 23rd Cavalry, who stated that he had lent it to them, as they were carrying money, in order to protect themselves in their journey from Patti Station to their home. The Magistrate has disbelieved this story, thinking that it was unlikely that they required such protection and remarking also that this origin of the revolver had not been disclosed to the Police. That is a mistake, as the Police diary shows that Udham Singh stated that it was obtained from their uncle. The story of Risaldar Chaugat Singh (who was called as a witness for the prosecution) as to how he himself obtained possession of the said revolver is hardly credible but this is another matter, and that it was from him that his nephews got the revolver, I can see no reason to disbelieve. His story that he gave it to them for self-protection is not necessarily untrue. At all events, I can discover no other reason that is more probable, and in the absence of any other statement I am prepared to accept this one.

What the Magistrate says is that it is not unlikely that Pal Singh purchased the revolver, which is of American manufacture, from some returned emigrant, and he goes on to remark that, however that may be, there can be no doubt that it was Pal Singh who instigated his brother to keep the revolver and "by its delivery enable Udham Singh to commit an offence under section 20 of the Arms Act." All this is pure surmise, and the fact is that unless the story of Sardar Chaugat Singh is believed to the extent above indicated, there is no positive evidence on which Pal Singh can be convicted at all. Risaldar Chaugat Singh says distinctly that (although the revolver was intended for the protection of both his nephews) it was to Pal Singh that he gave it. Pal Singh, therefore, must have made it over later to Udham Singh. If so, both of them were in possession of it during different periods of the day, but unless the Risaldar is believed on this point, there is no evidence on which Pal Singh can be convicted of any offence.

That Pal Singh, however, first had possession of the revolver, I see no reason to doubt, but even so there is nothing to show that while it was in his possession it was concealed in any way, though the probability is, of course, that he carried it in his pocket, that being the natural thing to do.

In the case of Udham Singh we know as a certainty that he was carrying the revolver in the outer pocket of his coat, but the question still remains whether this was being done "in such a manner as to indicate an intention that such act may not be known to any public servant."

The learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer who appeared for the Crown, (I may remark has not disputed the findings of the Magistrate in so far as they are favourable to the appellants) relies on the ruling published as Khem Singh v. Emperor (1). The facts of that case were not parallel, and the Hon'ble Judges who decided it were careful to remark that they did not think it necessary to lay down any general rule as to what cases fall under section 20; and what cases under section 19 of the Act, and that each case must be decided on its own facts.

In the present case we have but the bare fact that Udham Singh was carrying the revolver in his pocket. There is no evidence to show, whether in day, light it could have been seen through the material of the coat or not, but doubtless it was in any case concealed to a greater or less extent by the facts of its being placed in a pocket at all. No man, however, who carries a revolver, would put it anywhere else than in a pocket. For the sake of convenience he would not think of carrying it in his hand, and unless he wished to advertise its possession to the whole world, he would not carry it exposed to view as in a belt. In fact Udham Singh was doing just what any rational man entitled to carry a revolver would do, and if he can be convicted under section 20, it must be not so much because he carried the revolver in his pocket, but because not being entitled to carry a revolver, he must, having placed in his pocket, be presumed for that reason to have desired to conceal its possession from public servants.

To that length I am not prepared to go.

If a man is in reality trying to conceal a revolver in such a manner as to bring him within the purview of section 20 of the Act, there will probably be some other evidence, such as conduct for instance, to justify his conviction. But in this particular case, not only is there no such evidence, but the facts point rather to disregard of consequences, than any thing in the shape of active concealment.

Udham Singh was carrying the revolver as openly as it was possible to carry it with any regard to his own convenience, and he and his brother went out of their way to bring themselves into contact with public servants. As already stated, I consider that the Magistrate has quite rightly found that there was no sinister motive; and my belief is that Udham Singh and his brother had practically forgotten the existence of the revolver.

In my opinion, therefore, the facts do not justify conviction under section 20. I set those convictions and sentences aside and instead convict the prisoners under section 19 (f) and having regard to the whole circumstances of the case, I sentence each of them to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 381—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11, 32—Ownership of alleged stolen property—Witness stating what a deceased person had said to him—Admissibility of such statement.

A witness's statement as to what a deceased person had said to him regarding the ownership of the property alleged to be stolen is not admissible in evidence either under section 11 or under section 32 of the Evidence Act.

Bela Rani v. Mahabir Singh, 14 Ind. Cas. 116; 9 A. L. J. 351; 34 A. 341, followed.

In the absence of evidence as to the ownership of stolen property, a conviction under section 381, Penal Code, cannot stand.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Deputy First Class Magistrate of Saidapet Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 26 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the second Class Magistrate of Saidapet Taluq, in Calendar Case No. 138 of 1914.

Mr. K. Narasimha Aiyar, for the Appellant.

The Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

MOFIZUDDIN AHMED v. BASANTA KUMAR GHOSH.

ORDER.—The only evidence as to the ownership of the property alleged to have been stolen is the 1st prosecution witness's statement as to what Ranganatha Tawkar, now deceased, said to him regarding it. We cannot bring this statement within the terms of section 32, Indian Evidence Act; and following Bela Rani v. Mahabir Singh (1), we do not think it is admissible under section 11. In the absence of evidence as to the ownership of the property, the conviction of an offence punishable under section 381, Indian Penal Code, cannot stand. It is set aside and the accused must be released, if in custody.

Accused set at liberty.*

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b)—Subordinate Magistrate transferred after disposing of a case and acquitting accused—Application for sanction to prosecute complainant—Sanction given by District Magistrate—Legality of sanction—Subordinate Magistrate, whether subordinate to District Magistrate.

After the accused in a case had been acquitted and the first Class Deputy Magistrate, who had disposed of the case, transferred from the District, one of the acquitted persons applied for sanction to prosecute the complainant under section 211, Indian Penal Code. The application was made to and granted by the District Magistrate:

Held, that although the cases pending in the Court of the transferred Deputy Magistrate on the date of his transfer were placed before the District Magistrate, either for disposal by himself or for re-distribution among his subordinate Magistrates, he never became the presiding Judge in the Deputy Magistrate's Court and, therefore, was not competent to grant sanction as he did [p. 465, col. 1.]

Held, further, that for the purposes of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Court of the Subordinate Magistrate was not subordinate to the District Magistrate but to the Sessions Judge. [p. 465, cols. 1 & 2.]

RAM SUBHAG SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Babu Bimala Charan Deb and Amal Kumar Roy Chowdhury, for the Petitioner.

Babu Srish Chandra Chowdhury, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that five persons were placed on their trial on a charge under section 143 and were acquitted. The trial took place in the Court of Babu Makhan Lal Chatterjee, a Magistrate exercising first Class powers. The present petitioner was the complainant in the case to which we have referred and after the disposal of that case and the transfer to another District of the Deputy Magistrate, an application was made by one of the accused persons for sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the prosecution of the petitioner on a charge under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. That application was made to and was granted by the District Magistrate.

It is conceded that for the purposes of section 195 of the Code the Court of the Deputy Magistrate was subordinate, not to the District Magistrate, but to the Sessions Judge and the question we have to consider then is, whether in view of the provisions of section 195, sub-section (1), clause (b), the District Magistrate represents the Court in which the alleged offence punishable under section 211, Indian Penal Code, was committed.

In showing cause against the Rule it has been suggested by the learned Pleader who has appeared on behalf of the Crown that inasmuch as on the departure of the Deputy Magistrate, all cases then pending in his Court were placed before the District Magistrate we should hold that for the time being the District Magistrate became the presiding Judge in the Deputy Magistrate's Court.

Now it may well be that in so far as he proceeded to dispose of such part-heard cases the District Magistrate, within the meaning of section 350 of the Code succeeded to and exercised the jurisdiction which the Deputy Magistrate had ceased to exercise.

But neither the case under section 143 nor the application for sanction were among the cases so left part-heard, and when the District Magistrate placed on his own file all such cases it would seem that he did so not in order to the exercise of the Deputy Magistrate's functions, but in order to the exercise of his own higher functions and the re-distribution of the pending business among his subordinate Magistrates.

For these reasons we hold that the District Magistrate was not competent to make the order now in question. We accordingly make this Rule absolute and set aside the sanction complained of.

Rule made absolute.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 1925 OF 1914.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 233, 537—Object of s. 233—'Distinct offences', meaning of—Hurt caused to two persons—Separate charges—Illegality—'Irregularity,' meaning of—Subramania Iyer's case, what decided—Words "subject to the provisions herein before contained" in s. 537, whether refer to the entire preceding Code—English decisions, force of—Privy Council judgment—General observations, force of—Pleader's consent—Trial.

Per Sharfuddin and Beachcroft, JJ.—The joinder in one charge of two distinct offences of causing hurt to two distinct individuals is not an illegality which vitiates the trial but is an irregularity which is cured by section 537, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 471, col. 1; p. 479, col. 1.]

The qualifying words "subject to the provisions, hereinbefore contained" in section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, do not refer to the entire Code that precedes that section but only to sections 529 to 536 of Chapter XLV where the section occurs. [p. 473, col. 2; p. 479, col. 2.]

Per Sharfuddin, J.—The first portion of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is not so imperative as to render a trial null and void if the direction enjoined therein is disobeyed. In other words, a disobedience of the first portion of section 233 is not an illegality which vitiates a trial but is a mere irregularity curable by section 537 of the Code. [p. 475, col. 2.]

Section 233 of the Code contains the general law and the reason of it is that the mind of the Court might not be prejudiced against the prisoner, if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting upon different evidence. [p. 478, col. 1.]

A charge is a first notice, to the prisoner, of the matter whereof he is accused, and it must convey to him with sufficient clearness and certainty that which the prosecution intended to prove against him and of which he will have to clear himself. [p. 478, col. 1.]

RAM SUBHAG SINGH v. EMPEROR.

What their Lordships of the Privy Council have decided in the case of Subramania Iyer, 25 M. 61, is that if law expressly provides a particular mode of trial, a disobedience of that law vitiates the whole trial. It is doubtful if the framing of charges is a mode of trial but joint trial of charges as to distinct offences would be a mode of trial. [p. 478, col. 2.]

When two offences have been committed and either of them has no connection with the other they are distinct offences. [p. 478, col. 2.]

Although illustrations have no force of law they go a great way to explain the intention of the Legislature. [p. 478, col. 2.]

Per Beachcroft, J.—In the case of Subramania Iyer, 25 M. 61, the Privy Council did not decide that a defect under section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, was fatal to the trial. They in effect decided that a disregard of the second part of the section, by joining charges beyond the limits specified in section 234, vitiated the trial. The general observation "their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity" must be read with the sentence immediately following it which limits its application to the case where charges are tried together which the law expressly says shall not be tried in the same trial. The words "mode of trial" in the general observation cannot have reference to the formal defect of drawing up one charge instead of two. The drawing up of the charge is part of the trial, but the words "mode of trial" have reference to the constitution of the trial. [p. 468, col. 2; p. 469, cols. 1 & 2.]

The object of section 233 is two-fold: in the first place, to give an accused person notice of the charges which he has to meet, in the second, to see that he is not embarrassed by having to meet charges in no way connected with one another. Where the offences form part of the same transaction the law allows them to be tried together; in such a case the accused is not likely to be embarrassed or the Court confused. The first part of the section is designed to give the accused notice of the charges against him. The object is that he shall not be convicted of an offence of which he has not been charged. This object is not frustrated, and the accused is not prejudiced if the accusations against him are written in one sentence or on one sheet of paper, instead of in two sentences or on two sheets of paper. [p. 469, col. 2.]

It is open to question whether consent of Pleaders can validate a trial which is illegally constituted. [p. 470, col. 1.]

Where a thing is directed to be done and that thing is in effect done, but in the wrong way, the error amounts only to an irregularity and not an illegality. [p. 471, col. 1.]

Though a decision even of the Privy Council is an authority only for what it decides, the general remarks of their Lordships are ordinarily considered to have binding force in this country. [p. 469, col. 1.]

Reliance on cases decided under the Criminal Law of England is liable to mislead though such cases may sometimes be useful as illustrating principles. [p. 472, col. 1.]

Per Fletcher, J., (dissenting).—The causing of hurt to two different persons are two distinct offences for each of which there ought to be a separate charge. A failure to frame two separate charges is not a curable irregularity but an illegality which vitiates

the trial. [p. 467, col. 1.]

The whole of the section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, is governed by the words "subject to the provisions, hereinbefore contained." Therefore a neglect of the provisions of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is not cured by that section and renders the trial illegal. [p. 467, col. 1.]

This Rule first came up for hearing before Fletcher and Beachcroft, JJ., who differed in their opinions, and delivered the following judgments on the 23rd February 1915.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, Babus Baikunta Nath Mitter and Manindra Nath Banerji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed upon the petitioner should not be set aside.

The petitioner was charged along with others of having committed an offence punishable under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code. He was also charged with having caused hurt to two persons, Khalifa Ahir and Rambilas Lal, and thereby having committed an offence under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code. Only one charge was framed against the petitioner in respect of the hurt caused to these two persons. The petitioner having been convicted and sentenced on the charges framed against him applied for and obtained the present Rule.

The only question for our decision is, whether the charges of committing hurt against two persons having been charged in one charge renders the trial illegal.

Section 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge. The causing of hurt to two different persons are obviously two distinct offences and there ought to have been in the present case two separate charges framed against the petitioner of the offences charged under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

The question we have to decide is, whether the failure to frame two separate charges vitiated the trial or whether it was merely an irregularity which is cured by other sections in the Code.

It has been held in a series of cases in this Court that the neglect to observe the provisions of section 233 of the Code renders the trial illegal.

I need not set out all the cases laying down this proposition. It will be sufficient to state that they commence with the case of Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu Mandal (1) and end with the case of Asgar Ali v. Emperor (2). Those cases which are binding on us clearly cover the question which we have to decide.

Unless we come to the conclusion that the matter ought to be referred to a Full Bench, our decision must be in accordance with those authorities.

There is, however, a later decision of this Court, Musai Singh v. Emperor (3), in which a contrary view was taken. With all due respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, it was not open to them to ignore the previous decisions of the Court and to decide that case without reference to them. The case of Musai Singh v. Emperor (3) does not appear to me on consideration to have been well decided. The learned Judges observe that in the case before them "the defect is one of 'duplicity' not of misjoinder."

In England, however, an indictment is said to be 'double' when an accused has been charged with having committed two or more offences in one count of the indictment. This I should have thought was a misjoinder. Further, the learned Judges in quoting the law in India from the Code of Criminal Procedure make, what is to my mind, a most important omission. In quoting from section 537, which is the only section (if any) that can remedy a defect such as we are at present considering, the learned Judges fail to observe that the whole of the section is governed by the words "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained." This includes amongst other provisions the provisions contained in section 233 and a neglect of the provisions contained in that section is not, I think, cured by section 537.

Not only do I, therefore, consider that we are bound by the decisions of this Court earlier than the decision in the case of Musai Singh v. Emperor (3) but I approve and follow such decisions. In my opinion the case of Musai Singh v. Emperor (3) was wrongly decided and as it is contrary to the series of the earlier decisions of the Court we are not bound by and ought not to follow it.

The present Rule ought, therefore, I think, to be made absolute and the petitioner should be re-tried according to law.

BEACROFT, J.—The charges against the petitioner were of rioting and causing hurt. The latter charge, which has formed the subject of discussion in this case runs as follows:—"that you on or about the 5th day of July 1914 at Megitala voluntarily caused hurt to Khalifa Ahir and Ram Bilas Lal and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code." This charge and the charge of rioting are drawn up on a form with the heading "charges with two heads."

The only ground urged by the petitioner's Vakil is that the charge above quoted is defective and, therefore, on the authority of the case of Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (4) the whole trial was bad. The learned Vakil also cited five cases decided by this Court and one by the Allahabad High Court to support his contention. It is unfortunate that the Crown has not been represented to argue the case before us, yet in spite of that fact I feel no doubt whatever that the Rule ought to be discharged.

The five cases of this Court quoted by Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter were the following in order of time, (1) Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu Mandal (1). The accused was convicted on one charge of extorting a machilika and Rs. 25 apparently on different dates. The learned Judges held that the fact of there being only one charge was fatal to the trial, on the authority of Subramania Aiyar's case (4). (2) Johan Subarna v. Emperor (5). One charge was framed in respect of two attempts to cheat on different dates. The learned Judges said "there should have been two charges. Under the ruling of the Privy Council in Subramania Aiyar's case (4) this would seem to be an illegality which vitiates the trial and cannot be cured by section 537." Then referring to a case cited by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer, "this does not relate to a defect under section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, which according to the ruling of the Privy Council above referred to vitiates the trial." (3) Tilakdhari Das v. Emperor (6). In this case two persons were charged in one charge for misappropriation of three sums of money, collected in accordance with their duty from three persons. Apparently it was suggested that the money had never come into the possession of one of these two persons. It was argued that there was both misjoinder of persons on the authority of Budhai Sheikh v. Tarap Sheikh (7) and of offences on the authority of Johan Subarna v. Emperor (5) and Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu Mandal (1). The learned Judges remarked that the cases cited carried the rule in Subrahmanya Aiyar's case (4) to an extreme length, but they were not prepared, as the case had not been fully argued, to dissent from the cases cited. They then remarked that the irregularity in procedure—it is not clear whether they referred to misjoinder of persons, or offences or both—had in fact caused a failure of justice and ordered a re-trial of the accused separately, which suggests that they considered the joinder of persons to be irregular. This case is certainly not an authority in favour of the petitioner. It is to be noticed that the learned Judges did not refer to section 222, Criminal Procedure Code, which might have been an answer to the argument of misjoinder of charges, the charge being of one offence of misappropriation only, though three sums were separately specified. (4) Srish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (8). The accused was charged with cheating and an allegation of delivery of property on three different dates was made in one charge. Two cases only, those of Johan Subarna v. Emperor (5) and Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu Mandal (1), were cited, and the learned disposed of the case on the authority of those cases, without expressing any opinion on the correctness of the view propounded. (5) Asqar Ali v. Emperor (2). The accused was charged with misappropriating between the 29th May and 4th December 1911

a sum of money made up of two sums collected between those dates. Harington, J., said the charge was bad in view of section 233. Coxe, J., said that as the charge framed was illegal, the conviction could not stand in view of Subrahmanya Aiyar's case (4). The authority of this case is considerably weakened as the learned Judges do not seem to have referred to section 222 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and their decision is directly contrary to the decisions in Samiruddin Sarkar v. Nibaran Chandra Ghose (9) and Sat Narain Tewari v. Emperor (10). In all three cases there was a charge of misappropriation of a lump sum and it is immaterial whether that sum is made up of several smaller sums or not.

In only one of these five cases, the second, was the Crown represented.

The case in the Allahabad High Court is that of Emperor v. Fattu (11). The accused were charged with committing dacoity and it was alleged that they looted the houses of three, if not four, persons on one night. Stanley, C. J., remarked: "Their Lordships of the Privy Council have held in the recent case of Subrahmanya Aiyar v. Emperor (4) that the disregard of the express provisions of sections 233 and 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not a mere irregularity, such as could be remedied by section 537, but was altogether illegal."

It will be noticed that in two of the above six cases the Privy Council is represented as having decided that a defect under section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is fatal to the trial. In my opinion that is too broad a generalization of what their Lordships said. They in effect decided that a disregard of the second part of section 233, by joining charges beyond the limits specified in section 234, vitiated the trial. A reference to the judgment itself will show that their Lordships made no mention of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code. The head-note of the report does, it is true, say that one of the counts of the indictment contravened the provisions of sections 233 and 234, but the judgment itself from beginning to end deals with section 234 and with that section alone.

RAM SUBHAG SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The criticisms, in the last paragraph of the judgment, of the decision of this Court in In the matter of Abdur Rahman (12) have reference to section 234 only, as in that case there was a joinder of offences not committed within the space of 12 months.

In a passage that is frequently quoted, Lord Halsbury, L. C., who also delivered the judgment in Subramania Aiyar's case (4), says in Quinn v. Leatham (13): "Every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be explications of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. A case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it."

Now in those cases in this Court in which the learned Judges have expressed the opinion that a defect under section 233 vitiates the trial, they have considered themselves bound by Subramania Aiyar's case (4). With the greatest respect for the learned Judges who took part in those decisions I venture to say that the decision of the Privy Council is not an authority for the proposition stated.

Though a decision even of the Privy Council is an authority only for what it decides, the general remarks of their Lordships are ordinarily considered to have binding force in this country. But not only is the decision in Subramania Aiyar's case (4) not an authority on the result of a disregard of the first part of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, but the "generality of the expressions" used in the judgment does not even bear on the question. Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter relies especially on the sentence—"Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity." But this sentence must be read with the one immediately following it which limits its application to the case where charges are tried together which the law expressly says shall not be tried in the same trial. Nor can the words "mode of trial" in that sentence have reference to the formal defect of drawing up one charge instead of two. The drawing up of the charge is, of course, part of the trial, but the words "mode of trial" have reference to the constitution of the trial, and when their Lordships speak of "disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial", they do not refer to a formal defect in the proceedings in a trial which is properly constituted. That the present accused could be tried at one trial for the offence of rioting and two offences of causing hurt is not and cannot be disputed.

If then Subramania Aiyar's case (4) is not to be regarded as an authority for the proposition advanced for the petitioner, is the defect in the charge curable? For an answer to this question the cases cited do not help us, as the learned Judges did not consider the question apart from the case of Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor () .

The object of section 233 is two-fold: in the first place, to give an accused person notice of the charges which he has to meet, in the second, to see that he is not embarrassed by having to meet charges in no way connected with one another. Where the offences form part of the same transaction the law allows them to be tried together; in such a case the accused is not likely to be embarrassed or the Court confused. The first part of the section is designed to give the accused notice of the charges against him. The object is that he shall not be convicted of an offence of which he has not been charged. This object is not frustrated, and the accused is not prejudiced, if the accusations against him are written in one sentence or on one sheet of paper instead of in two sentences or on two sheets of paper.

This was in effect the view taken in the case of Moharuddi Malita v. Jadu Nath Mandul (14) in which three charges of theft were included in one formal charge, the persons from whose fields the thefts had been committed being differentiated by the letters (a), (b) and (c). The accused were convicted and separately sentenced for three offences of theft. Even though they were charged with having committed "an offence", they were convicted of three offences. The learned Judges held that this was an error of form and not of substance, an irregularity and not an illegality. That the Pleaders consented to the joint trial of three persons does not affect the case. It does not touch the present question which is as to the misjoinder of charges and not as to the misjoinder of persons, and in any case it is open to question whether consent of Pleaders could validate a trial which was illegally constituted.

The learned Judges also distinguished the case from that of Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu Mandal (1), on the ground that in that case the two offences were distinct and committed at different times. Whether or not this distinction be a sound one, it will also apply to the 2nd and 4th cases which I have referred to above. If the distinction was good in Moharuddi Malita v. Jadu Nath Mandul (14) it is good in the present case.

The mere fact that the letters (a), (b) and (c) were used in Moharuddi Malita v. Jadu Nath Mandul (14) does not really distinguish that case from this: here both persons assaulted are named; the irregularity in that case was really greater than the irregularity in this, for in that case charged with one offence, though there were in fact three offences, they were convicted of three; in the present case, charged with one offence, though there were in fact two, the petitioner had been convicted only of one offence though the facts found amount to two.

The result of this review is that of the five cases of this Court cited for the petitioner, three have been distinguished in another case on grounds applicable to this and the authority of the other two, as I have already pointed out, is considerably weakened by other considerations.

In the case of Musai Singh v. Emperor (3) an accused was charged with having cheated three different persons and caused them to deliver to him three sums of money, three distinct offences of cheating, but there was only one charge under section 420, Indian Penal Code, covering the three different acts. It was held that the charge was defective for duplicity and not misjoinder and the case of Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (4) now quoted against such a charge was referred to by the learned Judges as not affecting such a case. The case of Sriish Chandra Mukerjee v.

Emperor (8) was relied on in support of the Rule in that case, but the Rule was discharged, the defect being treated merely as an irregularity. The learned Judges relied on sections 535 and 537, Criminal Procedure Code. It may be interesting to note that the learned Vakil who now appears for the petitioner appeared in that case to support the exactly opposite contention. He has not attempted to distinguish that case from this.

If the view be correct that no departure from the strict letter of the law can be treated as a mere irregularity, but is an illegality, it is difficult to see what kind of case is provided for by the phrase "irregularity in the charge" in section 537, for unless there has been a departure of some kind from the strict letter of the law, it is clear that there has been no irregularity. Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter suggested two instances of what would be merely an irregularity (1) where the name of the accused or of the person against whom the offence was committed is omitted from or wrongly given in the charge, (2) where the common object is not specified in a charge of rioting.

Obviously the first is not an instance of irregularity, it is either an omission or an error, both of which are also provided for by section 537. The second is also an omission, and if the common object is one of the particulars required by section 222 to be given in the charge, then section 225 would cure the defect and recourse to section 537 would be unnecessary. That section then must apply to some other state of things.

What is the effect of the words "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained" in section 537? I do not think it can possibly be taken to be that the section is to have no application if there has been any departure from any of the previous sections of the Code. Such an interpretation would render the words "error, omission or irregularity in other proceedings" absolutely nugatory. The Code is exhaustive as to procedure. I think the opening words of the section must be read as having reference to sections 529 to 536. The Chapter in which these sections are included is headed "Of Irregular Proceedings" and sections 529 to 536 deal directly with the effect of various irregularities, including some cases of want of jurisdiction. In some cases, the irregularity is fatal in others not. Then follows section 537 a general saving section which is, however, limited by the foregoing sections in the same Chapter. In one of the sections before section 537, viz., section 535 is a provision that the absence of a charge shall not invalidate proceedings, unless it has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. So that in the present case if no charge at all under section 233 had been framed, a conviction under that section, or two convictions under that section, would not have been invalid unless there had been an actual failure of justice. In view of that section, apart from section 537, it is difficult to see how the petitioner's contention that the trial is bad because there was one charge instead of two, can be supported.

I consider it is impossible to define accurately what is meant by "irregularity" in section 537 and undesirable to attempt such a definition. The Judicial Committee say, "The illustration of the section itself sufficiently shows what was meant." The illustration shows that where a signature by a Magistrate is required, a signature by initials is purely an irregularity. So that where a thing is directed to be done and that thing is in effect done but in the wrong way, the error amounts only to an irregularity and not an illegality. Applying this test, what does section 233 in effect require and what has in effect been done? The section requires that a person is to be informed by a charge of every offence in respect of which he is to be tried. Treating the charge as one of two offences of causing hurt, he has in effect been told that he is to be tried for causing hurt to two persons named. The necessary information has been given to him, but in the wrong way, it has been given in one sentence instead of in two.

I have discussed the case up to this point as if the accused had really been charged with two offences in one charge, that being the footing on which it was argued by Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, and all the cases cited on behalf of the petitioner to which I have referred, appear to have been treated on that footing. But in the present case though acts amounting to two offences of causing hurt are alleged, the charge is only of one offence, as if the Magistrate had considered that the hurt caused to two persons amounted only to one offence. Not only is this indicated by the wording of the charge itself, but support is lent to this view by the fact that the charges are drawn on a form headed "charges with two heads", one is the rioting charge, the other the charge of causing hurt. The conviction is also on that footing. The cases of Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu Mandal (1), Johan Subarna v. Emperor (5) and Srish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (8) could not have been treated on that footing, as in those cases the acts alleged were committed on different occasions, and not as here at the same time.

Now it is somewhat surprising to me that an accused should be allowed to say, "I have been charged with and convicted of one offence, but as I ought to have been charged with and convicted of two, the whole proceedings are bad," and unless the law on the subject is very clear, I should be unwilling to attribute to the Legislature the intention of allowing him to say any such thing.

If the charge is treated as one of one offence only, the Magistrate has merely told him that causing hurt to two persons amounts to one offence, whereas he might have charged, convicted and sentenced him for two. In such a case the provisions of section 233 have not been contravened, for the accused is in effect accused of one offence only.

Whether the charge is treated as one of two offences or one, the result is the same. In one case, I prefer the view taken in Moharuddi Malita v. Jadu Nath Mandul (14) that the error is one of form and not of substance and that taken in Musai Singh v. Emperor (3) to that taken in the cases cited on behalf of the petitioner. In the other, the provisions of section 233 have not been contravened.

To recapitulate, I am of opinion (1) that the case of Subrahmaniam Aiyar v. Emperor (4) is not an authority for the proposition that failure to observe the first part of section 233 is fatal to the trial, (2) that if we are merely to follow authority, we must follow Moharuddi Malita v. Jadu Nath Mandul (14) in which the learned Judges made it a distinguishing feature that the offences were committed on the same occasion—a distinction which applies to the present case, and in view of that distinction the cases cited by the petitioner do not apply, (3) that if Moharuddi Malita v. Jadu Nath Mandul (14) is not distinguishable from the other cases, it is a more correct interpretation of section 537 than the other cases, which do not discuss section 537, (4) that if petitioner had been convicted of one or two offences under section 323 without any charge at all, the defect would not in view of section 535 have been necessarily fatal, much less can it be where in fact there has been a charge under section 323, (5) that if the case be considered from the point of view that the petitioner has been accused of only one offence, though the facts alleged amount to two offences, there has been no contravention of section 233.

In dealing with the case I have not referred to English cases, as reliance on cases decided under the Criminal Law of England is liable to mislead, though such cases may sometimes be useful as illustrating principles. Even in that stronghold of technicality the joining of more charges than one in one count has been held not to be a fatal defect. In the case of Reg. v. Giddins (15) the prisoners were charged in one count of assaulting two persons and of stealing from those persons. Objection was taken before trial. Tindal, C.J., decided that Counsel for the prosecution was not to be put to elect on the ground that "it was all one act and one transaction." It is noticeable that this in effect was the ground on which the learned Judges who decided Moharuddi Malita v. Jadu Noth Mandul (14) distinguished it from the case of Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu Mandal (1).

In a recent case, the case of Rex. James Andrew Thompson (16), the Court of Criminal Appeal refused to interfere in the case of a conviction, where there were two counts in each of which a number of offences were alleged. The indictment was bad, but it was held that the appellant had not in fact been prejudiced, as in the deposition and at the trial offences were proved on specific dates. The decision proceeded on one of the sections of the Criminal Appeal Act, which in effect provides what is provided by section 537, Criminal Procedure Code.

In conclusion I may mention that it would be difficult to find a case where a mere technicality, if upheld, would lead to more absurd results than in this case. The petitioner has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment under section 147 and to two months' under section 323. The sentences are to run concurrently, yet because he has been charged on only one charge instead of two under section 323 the trial in respect to the charge of rioting also is to be held invalid, though it would have been unaffected if there had been no charge and no conviction at all under section 323.

I think the Rule should be discharged and the petitioner committed to jail to serve out the rest of his sentence.

This Rule again came up for hearing before Sharfuddin, J., who delivered the following JUDGMENT.—This is a reference made to me under section 439 read with section 429 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as Fletcher and Beachcroft, J.J., were divided in opinion as to the interpretation of the first portion of section 233 of the Code.

The facts so far as are necessary for the purposes of the present reference are these:

There was rioting in which hurt was caused by one Ram Subhag Singh to two men, named Khalifa Ahir and Ram Belas Lal. The petitioner was charged with rioting and with hurt caused by him to the above-mentioned two men. The latter charge is under section 323, Indian Penal Code.

The second head of the charge is in the following terms:

"That you, Ram Subhag Singh, on or about the 5th day of July 1914 at Mafitala, appertaining to Mouza Bangra, voluntarily caused hurt to Khalifa Ahir and Ram Belas Lal, and thereby committed an offence under section 323, of the Indian Penal Code, etc. etc."

Ram Subhag Singh, the petitioner, having been found guilty of both the charges, was convicted and sentenced. He moved this Court and obtained a Rule in the following terms:—

"Let the record be sent for and a Rule issue calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused should not be set aside or why such other orders should not be passed as to the Court may seem fit and proper."

The above is an open Rule, but the present reference relates to the first ground taken in the application for révision, and that ground is that the joinder in one charge of two distinct offences of causing hurt to two distinct individuals was an illegality which was fatal to the whole trial.

The difference between the two learned Judges of the Bench that heard the Rule is as to whether the first portion of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is so imperative as to render the whole trial null and void for the reason that the direction enjoined therein has been disobeyed, and also as to whether the omission complained of is curable by section 537 of the Code.

Section 233 of the Code enacts: "for every distinct offence of which any person is accused, there shall be a separate charge, and every such charge shall be tried separately except in the cases mentioned in sections 234, 235, 236 and 239."

For the purposes of the present reference I am concerned with that portion of the section which I have italicised and which refers only to the framing of the charge.

In the present case the accused was charged in one Court with having caused hurt to two men. On behalf of the petitioner it has been contended that a duplication of two charges in one count was not a mere irregularity which could be cured by section 537 of the Code; and that the omission was an illegality in the mode of trial and in disobedience of an express direction of law and that by reason of this obedience the whole trial vitiates.

Section 537 enacts: "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, no finding, sentence, or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered under Chapter XXVII, or on appeal or revision on account:—

(a) of any error, omission, or irregularity in the complaint, summons, warrant, charge, proclamation, order, judgment or other proceedings before or during trial, or in any inquiry or other proceedings under this Code, or

(b) of the want of or any irregularity in any sanction required by section 195, or any irregularity in proceedings taken under section 476, or

(c) of the omission to revise any list of jurors or assessors in accordance with section 324, or

(d) of any misdirection in any charge to a Jury unless such errors, omission, irregularity, want or misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

Explanation:—In determining whether any error, omission or irregularity in any proceeding under this Code has occasioned a failure of justice, the Court shall have regard to the fact that the objection could or should have been raised at an earlier stage in the proceedings."

For the purposes of the present reference, I am concerned with clauses (a), (b), (d) and the explanation. The above section is prefixed by the qualifying words "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained." A question arises as to whether these qualifying words refer to the part of the Code which precedes section 537 or they refer only to the Chapter where this section finds a place. The question has been raised, though not expressly decided, whether the provisions referred to are the provisions of the entire Code preceding this section or only the provisions of Chapter XLV where this section occurs. The former view was adopted in the case of Raj Chunder Mozumdar v. Gour Chunder Mozumdar (17) and in the case of Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chundra Bhattacharjee (18), and the latter view was put forward by the referring Judges in the case of In the matter of Abdur Rahman (12) but the Full Bench did not decide the question.

To my mind it is clear, from the wordings of clause (b) of section 537 and the explanation attached to it, that the qualifying words "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained" do not refer to the entire Code that precedes that section, because if those qualifying words referred to all the sections of the Code preceding 537, the clause (b) of the section would become meaningless or inoperative. Take the case of giving false evidence in a Court. Under section 195, clause (b), of the Code no Court "shall take cognizance except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of the Court where the offence was committed or some other Court to which such Court is subordinate." If the qualifying words in section 537 were to be interpreted in the manner suggested by the learned Vakil for the petitioner, clause (b) of section 537 would conflict with that interpretation. If the qualifying words refer to the entire Code preceding the section, it would mean that trial of an accused for giving false evidence without a sanction previously obtained would be altogether null and void and section 537 would not be able to cure the defect; but clause (b) distinctly provides that in such a case, section 537 can cure the defect if there has not been a failure of justice.

If the words "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained" referred to all the preceding sections of the Code, then an omission to sign a warrant cannot be cured by this section. Section 75 of the Code requires a warrant of arrest to be in writing and to be signed by the presiding officer. The words used in that section are "shall be in writing, signed by the presiding officer." Clause (a) of section 537 provides that an omission in a warrant is curable by that section under certain circumstances. There is only one illustration attached to this section, which is this, "A Magistrate being required by law to sign a document signs it by initials only. This is purely an irregularity, and does not affect the validity of the proceeding."

Section 68 requires certain formalities with regard to summons and the word used is "shall", but having regard to the new and the only illustration to section 537 of the Code, it is purely an irregularity and cannot, therefore, affect the validity of the proceeding.

In the present case the objection that the charge has not been framed in accordance with the provisions of section 233 of the Code was never taken before the matter came to this Court. In determining whether the omission complained of has occasioned a failure of justice, I must have regard to the fact whether the objection could or should have been raised at an earlier stage in the present proceeding.

If by the duplication of the charges the petitioner was embarrassed, he should have objected to the form of the charge when it was read to him.

On behalf of the petitioner reliance has been placed on the case of Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (4) and some other cases that followed that Privy Council case. The later cases I propose to discuss later on. At present I think it necessary to examine the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council and find out from it whether their Lordships held therein that a disobedience to the direction contained in the first portion of section 233 is an illegality not curable by section 537.

The head-notes that prefixed the judgment of their Lordships are incorrect. Those head-notes are to the following effect:

"The appellant was tried at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court and convicted on an indictment, the first count of which contravened the provisions of sections 233 and 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (which provide that every separate offence shall be charged and tried separately, except that three offences of the same kind may be tried together in one charge if committed within the period of one year), and did not fall within the provisions of section 235 (1) (which provides that if, in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction more offences than one are committed by the same person, he may be charged with, and tried in, one trial for every such offence). On a case certified under Article 26, Letters Patent, and heard by the Full Court, it was held by the majority of the Court that the union of the first count with the others made the whole indictment bad for misjoinder, but that it was open to them to strike out the first count rejecting the evidence with regard to it, and deal with the evidence as to the remaining counts of the indictment. This was done, with the result that the conviction was upheld on one count only the sentence being reduced. Held by the Judicial Committee that the disregard of an express provision of law as to the mode of trial was not a mere irregularity such as could be remedied by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Such a phrase as "irregularity" is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time, and those offences being spread over a longer period than by law could have been joined together in one indictment. Nor could such an illegal procedure be amended by arranging afterwards what might or might not have been properly submitted to the Jury. To allow this would leave to the Court the function of the Jury, and the accused would never have been really tried at all upon the charge afterwards arranged by the Court. The trial having been conducted in a manner prohibited by law was held to be altogether illegal and the conviction was set aside."

I have reproduced above the whole of the head-notes as I consider it of serious importance. I find, on comparing them with the judgment, that these head-notes contain more than what was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and in order to do this, it is, I think, necessary to mention here in some details the facts of that case. In that case the appellant was tried on an indictment in which he was charged with no less than forty-one acts, those acts extending over a period of two years. Their Lordships held this to be in contravention of the provisions of section 234 of the Code (which provides that a person may only be tried for not more than three offences of the same kind if committed within a period of twelve months).

Their Lordships' views as to the scope of section 537 of the Code as I make out are these:—

When a person was tried for 41 offences in direct contravention of the provisions of the section 234, their Lordships observed that the mischief sought to be avoided by the section having been committed, "the effect of the multitude of the charges before the Jury has not been averted by dissecting the verdict afterwards and appropriating the finding of guilty only to such parts of the written accusation as ought to have been submitted to the Jury. It would in the first place leave to the Court the function of Jury and the accused would never have really been tried at all upon the charge arranged afterwards by the Court." Their Lordships did not regard this as curable by section 537. The following remarks by their Lordships manifestly indicate that the illegality referred to was an utter disobedience of the law as contained in section 234 of the Code. Those remarks are:—"Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity. Such a phrase as irregularity is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time and those offences being spread over a longer period than by law could have been joined together in one indictment."

The case before the Privy Council was not that any provision of the section 233 was contravened. The only question before their Lordships was whether the mode of trial in which one indictment contained 41 acts, spread over a period longer than 12 months, was or was not illegal by reason of the provisions of the section 234 of the Code.

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the head-notes, prefixed by the reporter, are misleading in so far as reference is made therein to the section 233 of the Code.

During the course of arguments a number of authorities has been referred to in support of the contention that a disobedience of the first portion of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is an illegality which vitiates the whole trial and not a mere irregularity curable by section 537 of the Code.

I propose now to discuss the other authorities referred to during the course of argument in order to point out, assuming the correctness of the views expressed therein, that the facts of these cases were different from the facts of the present case:

(1) In the case of Gul Mahomed v. Cheharu Mandal (1) the charges were:—

1st. "That you, on or about the 15th or 16th day of January 1905, at Khayarbari, committed extortion of a muchili a and of Rs. 25 respectively, from Cheharu Mandal and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 384, Indian Penal Code.

2nd. "That you, on or about the 15th of January 1905 at Khayarbari assaulted Cheharu Mandal and thereby committed a offence under section 352, Indian Penal Code."

In the above case the accused was convicted under sections 384 and 352, Indian Penal Code. The convicted person obtained a Rule from this Court. When the Rule came on for hearing Crown was unrepresented. This Court held that, assuming these charges arose out of one and the same transaction, and that the claim for Rs. 25 did not constitute extortion, a neglect to observe section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, must be pronounced to be fatal to the case according to the ruling in Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (4), because under that section there should have been a separate charge for the distinct offences.

Apparently, no doubt, the above authority is in support of the contention that to charge the accused in the present case for two acts of hurt caused by him on two different persons in one indictment was in direct contravention of the provisions of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code. In this reported case, it must be remembered that the charges, as framed, referred to acts of the accused on two different dates; it is possible, therefore, the accused may have been embarrassed in meeting with such a charge. In the present case, however, there was one rioting in the course of which the accused is said to have caused hurt to two men simultaneously or almost simultaneously, and during the whole trial he never objected to the alleged misjoinder of the charges; on the contrary, he by examining witnesses for the defence indicated that he was not embarrassed at all.

What the Privy Council has prohibited is any contravention of any mode of trial laid down expressly by the law. To charge an accused person with two acts committed in one and the same transaction and committed simultaneously or almost simultaneously is a matter which was not before their Lordships of the Privy Council. The only passage in their Lordships' judgment which may be construed to have any reference to section 233 of the Code is this: "the policy of such a provision (joinder of charges of more than three offences committed within a year) is manifest and the necessity of a system of written accusation specifying a definite criminal offence is of the essence of Criminal Procedure." At the time, what was present before their Lordships was that 41 acts committed within the space of more than 12 months were included in one charge. I am of opinion that the above quoted passage is not in reference to section 233, but is in reference to section 234 of the Code.

(2) Another case cited on behalf of the petitioner is the case of Tilakdhari Das v.

Emperor (6). In this case the Crown was unrepresented.

The facts of this case were:—

The petitioners were in the employ of the Darbhanga Raj, Tilak Dhari being the patwari, Chaman Missir a jeth raiyat. It was the duty of the patwari to collect rents from the *raiya*s and to account for their collections. They collected three sums of money, namely, Rs. 2-12 from a tenant by the name of Kirty Jha and Rs. 6-4 and Rs. 1-4 from another tenant called Bhatoo Thakur, all the three items being collected on one and the same date, the 30th Bhadra 1312. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madhubani convicted the petitioners under section 408, Indian Penal Code, in respect of all the three items and sentenced them to certain terms of imprisonment. The charge as framed was as follows:—

That you, on or about the 30th Bhadra 1312 fash, at Pariharpur, being in service of the Maharaja of Darbhanga and entrusted with the duty of collection of rents from the *raiya*s of Pariharpur and being in charge of the collection of monies, dishonestly misappropriated three sums of collection money, viz.—(1) Rs. 2-12, realised from Kirty Jha; (2) Rs. 6-4 from Bhatoo Thakur and Rs. 1-4 from Bhatoo Thakur on 30th Bhadra 1312, as shown in 3 receipts, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 408, Indian Penal Code."

The observations made by Caspersz, J., sitting with Chitty, J., are important as they distinguish that case from the present case. Their observations are:—

"The authorities we have cited doubtless carry the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (4) to an extreme length. But we are not prepared, as at present advised, and in a case which has not been fully argued (Crown was unrepresented), to dissent from the cases to which our attention was called. We are of opinion that the irregularity in the procedure of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is not an irregularity such as can be cured by the provisions of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. We rather think that the irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice and that the petitioner should be re-tried on charges properly framed. There should be separate charge for each distinct offence as provided by section 233, Criminal Procedure Code. The two petitioners, being accused of different offences committed in different transactions relating to different railyats, should be tried separately."

From the above remarks, it is clear that the omission to frame separate charges in that case was treated as an irregularity and not as an illegality. Separate trial and distinct charges were ordered, but not in consequence of an illegality, but in consequence of an irregularity which had occasioned a failure of justice.

(3) The third case cited was the case of Budhai Sheikh v. Tarap Sheikh (7). The acts of this case were these:—

Certain amount of linseed was looted on the 22nd February and certain tobacco on the 23rd February by an unlawful assembly consisting of the same persons, of whom the petitioner was the leader. It was held that the events of the two different dates were not part of the same transaction and the trial was bad under section 239, Criminal Procedure Code, and section 234 of the Code by its term, referred to the case of a single accused, and is not applicable where several persons are jointly tried under section 239 of the Code.

It is important to note that the facts disclosed in this reported case do not disclose that the provisions of the section 233 had been contravened.

(4) The fourth case cited is the case of Srish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (8). The charge in this case referred to was of three acts of cheating, i.e., in July, in August, and in October or in November. This Court held that the charge was bad. Here also there were three different transactions and on three different dates. From the report it appears that this Court looked into the evidence on the record of that case, as I find in the judgment the following passage:—

"The only question is whether we should send back the case for re-trial. We think, in the circumstances, it would be highly unprofitable to do so, and especially having regard to the evidence brought to our notice and to the statement elicited from Girish Chandra Ghosh in re-examination." The conviction for the above reason was set aside.

It appears from this reported judgment, the learned Judges had relied on the case of Johan Subarna v. Emperor (5).

(5) The fifth case cited was the case of Asgar Ali v. Emperor (2). The charge in this case was to the following effect:—

"That you between the 15th Jaista 1318 B. S. (29th May 1911) and the 18th Agrahayan 1318 B. S. (4th December 1911) at Rama Ethernagar being entrusted with the collection made on account of chaukidari tax, in your capacity of a public servant as a collecting parchayat of Union VI of the Thana Dumkul, dishonestly misappropriated a total sum of ten annas and six pies (10 annas 6 pies), to wit, a sum of four annas six pies collected from Atal Mistri between the 15th Jaista 1318 (29th May 1911) and the 4th Bhadra 1318 (1st August 1911) and a sum of six annas collected from Rajni Nath between the 20th Asarh 1318 (5th May 1911) and the 18th Agrahan 1318 (4th December 1911) and thereby committed an offence under section 409, Indian Penal Code."

It was held that a single charge relating to several distinct offences was illegal under section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, there should have been a separate head of charge for each of such offences. The case of Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (4) was relied upon.

I consider, however, the charge as framed was perfectly correct and in strict conformity with the provisions laid down in section 222, clause (2), Criminal Procedure Code, which enacts that "when the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed, and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed, without specifying particular items or exact dates and the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of section 234, provided that the time included between the first and last of such dates shall not exceed one year."

There are other cases also in which it was held that a duplicity in the charge vitiates the trial and those cases appear to have followed the case of Subramania Aiyar v. Emperor (4) as reported in the head-notes. I have already pointed out that this Privy Council authority has no reference to section 233 of the Code.

Now I desire to discuss the question of duplication. There is an authority of this Court, namely, the case of Musai Singh v. Emperor (3) in which the facts were similar to the facts of the present case, and it was held that this was a mere duplicity which had not occasioned any failure of justice. The learned Judges who decided the case refused to interfere. The learned Vakil for the petitioner admitted that he could not distinguish the facts of this reported case from the facts of the present case.

There is no doubt that according to the general principle a duplicity of the charge is not allowed. The indictment must not be doubled, that is to say, no one count of the indictment should charge the accused with having committed two or more offences, for instance, with having committed murder and robbery or the like. But where the offence charged, whether felony or misdemeanour, is one single act, it may be made the subject of a single count. So the indictment may charge the prisoner in the same count with felonious acts with respect to several persons, as in robbery with having assaulted A and B and stolen from A one shilling and from B two shillings, if it was all in one transaction (see Archbold's Criminal Pleadings, 24th Edition, page 75).

Section 233 of the Code contains the general law, and the reason of it is that the mind of the Court might not be prejudiced against the prisoner, if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting upon different evidence. It might be difficult for the Court trying him on one of the charges not to be unfairly influenced by the evidence against him on the other charges. A charge is a first notice, to the prisoner, of the matter whereof he is accused, and it must convey to him with sufficient clearness and certainty that which the prosecution intended to prove against him and of which he will have to clear himself.

In cases similar to the present case the Court has to see whether the accused was bewildered and embarrassed by the duplicity of the charge.

In the case of Rex v. James Andrew Thompson (16), his Lordship the Chief Justice dismissed the appeal remarking "that even assuming the objection raised after plea to the defect in the form of indictment was not too late, no substantial miscarriage of justice has accrued and that we are, therefore, bound to give effect to the proviso in section 4, sub-section (1), of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, which is as follows:—'Provided that the Court may, notwithstanding that they are of opinion that the point raised in appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant, dismiss it, if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has occurred'." This provision appears to be similar to that laid in section 537 of the Code.

Section 233, as already observed, provides two things, first, for separate charge for each distinct offence, second, for separate trial except in four cases mentioned. What their Lordships of the Privy Council have prohibited is if law expressly provides a particular mode of trial, disobedience of that law vitiates the whole trial. I doubt if the framing of charges is a mode of trial, but joint trial of charges as to distinct offences would be a mode of trial and if an accused is tried jointly on several charges not coming under sections 234, 235, 236, 239, that trial would be null and void.

Although illustrations have no force of law, but they go a great way to explain the intention of the Legislature. There is only one illustration attached to section 233 of the Code, which is this:—"A is accused of a theft on one occasion, and of causing grievous hurt on another occasion. A must be separately charged and separately tried for the theft and causing grievous hurt." If the intention of the Legislature had been that separate charge should be framed even in a case where more than one distinct offence has been committed in the same transaction (as in the present case), one would expect an illustration to that effect.

The words "every distinct offence" in section 233 of the Code have some meaning. I understand, when two offences have been committed and each of these two offences has no connection with each other, they are distinct offences. The section does not say "for every offence" but "for every distinct offence." The illustration quoted above indicates the meaning of "distinct offence." In the illustration, the two offences were committed on two different occasions, one was theft and the other was grievous hurt.

The decision of the question involved in the present reference depends on whether the omission to frame two charges instead of one against the accused with respect to hurt caused by him to two individuals, is or is not curable by section 537 of the Code as a mere irregularity which has caused no failure of justice. I have already shown that the qualifying expression at the beginning of section 537 refers only to Chapter XLV and that omission in a charge, warrant or summons is not an illegality but is only an irregularity.

"An author must be supposed to be consistent with himself, and, therefore, if in one place he had expressed his mind clearly, it ought to be presumed that he is still of the same mind in another place, unless it clearly appears that he has changed it. In this respect, the work of the Legislature is treated in the same manner as that of any other author; and the language of every enactment must be construed, as far as possible, as to be consistent with every other which it does not in express terms modify or repeal." (See Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 5th Edition, page 253.)

"In determining either what was the general object of the Legislature, or the meaning of its language in any particular passage, it is obvious that the intention which appears to be most agreeable to convenience, reason, justice, and legal principles, should, in all cases open to doubt, be presumed to be the true one." (Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, page 309.)

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the omission complained of is but an irregularity. The objection taken in this Court could and should have been taken at an earlier stage of the proceeding.

The accused was convicted for rioting and hurt and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months under section 147, and two months under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and both the sentences were made to run concurrently. He was further ordered under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, to execute a bond in Rs. 500 with a surety in like amount to keep the peace for a year and in default to undergo simple imprisonment for that period.

I have now to consider as to whether there has been any failure of justice. Ram Subhag, the petitioner, was charged in one count for having caused hurt, in one rioting, to two men, namely, Ram Belas and Khalifa Ahir. The lower Appellate Court's finding is this: "also the individual charge against Ram Subhag of voluntarily causing hurt to Khalifa has been proved, but not the individual charge for voluntarily causing hurt to Ram Belas, for apparently Ram Belas had no marks of injury." From the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, it does not appear what nature of hurt was caused by Ram Subhag to Khalifa.

Referring to the judgment of the trying Court, I find that Court saying, "P. W. No. 11 proves a number of injuries he found on the person of Khalifa, one being a simple fracture of the left ring-finger and the other a compound fracture near the middle part of ulna and radius bones." This witness is a Sub-Assistant Surgeon. It does not, therefore, appear from the judgment of either Court what was the nature of the injury caused by the petitioner. The injury caused by him must have been a simple hurt to Khalifa, as he was charged under section 323, Indian Penal Code. I have been told that the petitioner has already served 19 days in jail, and there can be no doubt that he had to spend a large amount of money in defending himself in two Courts below, and in this Court. In the above circumstances, I reduce his sentence of six months to the portion already served. The order under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, will stand. He is discharged from the bail bond.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 498
—Maintenance of children living with mother—Father's liability.

A father cannot refuse to maintain his children on the ground that they are living with their mother, if they are unable to maintain themselves. If he wants to have them in his custody, he must enforce his rights, if any, in a Civil Court.

Review of the order of the Western Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon, directing the applicant to pay to the respondent, his wife, Rs. 30 a month for the maintenance of his three daughters at the rate of Rs. 10 each and Rs. 25 for her own maintenance.

Mr. Broadbent, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. C. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—As regards the children, it is urged in the first place that there has been no neglect to maintain them, as the father is willing to do so provided they are not left with the mother. Reliance is placed on the case of Man Singh v. Musammat Dharmon (1) where it was held that when a man offers, in answer to an application to maintain his children, to do so on condition that they live with him, it cannot be said that he refuses to maintain them. It is true that some remarks in two Upper Burma cases, Maung Pine v. Mi Nyn (2) and Maung Ma v. Ma Cho (3), indicate a similar view but there was no decision on the point, and both in Upper and Lower Burma the contrary has since been expressly held, see Ma Nyein Me v. Maung Kyaw (4), Maung San Hla v. Ma On Bwin (5), Mi Gauk v. Nga Po Hmi (6), Mi Saw v. S. (7) and Nan Saw Shwe v. Maung Hpone (8). The contention cannot, therefore, prevail and unless and until the father enforces his rights, if any, in a Civil Court Criminal revision against an order of the Magistrate of Aligarh.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Applicants.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants have been convicted of an offence under section 7 (a) of the Indian Copyright Act, 1914. Ajudhia Prasad wrote a book in Urdu called "Translation Guide, Part 1", and had it printed in 1897 by the applicants who are the owners of a press. He also wrote a Translation Guide, Part I, in Hindi but died before he could publish it. His widow, the complainant, had the new work printed and published by the applicants in 1911. Three years later the applicants published another edition of the Translation Guide in Hindi, but suppressed the name of the author and claimed to be the proprietors of it. For the applicants it is contended that the complainant had no copyright in the Hindi work. 'Copyright' did not formerly include the exclusive right of translation, but the author of a book who made a translation of it was entitled to a copyright in it as if it were an original work. Therefore even if the Hindi book in question is only a translation of the Urdu book, Ajudhia Prasad, and his widow after him, had copyright in the Hindi book. Section 4 of the Act of 1914 to which Counsel has referred has no bearing upon the case. The application is dismissed.

Held, that on these facts the minor was not liable on the promissory note.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, in Appeal Suit No. 525 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Shiyali, in Original Suit No. 258 of 1912.

Mr. S. Muthia Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. Kuppusawmy Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The second defendant is no doubt described in the body of the suit note as the guardian of the 1st defendant, who was at its date a minor; and the necessity for borrowing is stated in it as arising from the 1st defendant's father's debt. We are not, however, prepared to treat these facts alone as sufficient to indicate that 2nd defendant signed as 1st defendant's guardian or did not intend to incur personal liability. We must, therefore, hold that 1st defendant is not liable on the note.

It is urged in the alternative that he is liable on the original debt, for which the note was substituted. But that was not the case relied on in the plaint, nor has it been shown how plaintiff, an assignee of the pro-note alone, could rely on it, or how a suit on the debt could be in time.

In these circumstances, the appeal against order must be allowed, the lower Appellate Court's order being set aside and the District Munsif's decree restored. Plaintiff will pay 1st defendant's costs throughout.

The plaintiffs sued S, his father B, and his brother J, for recovery of a debt incurred by S alone and a decree was passed against them, on the finding that when the debt was incurred all the three defendants were members of a joint Hindu family. It was not shown that the loan was taken either for the benefit of the family or for the purposes of a joint family business:

Held, that under the circumstances B and J were not liable to pay the debt. [p. 481, col. 2.]

There is no presumption that a debt contracted even by the Manager of a Hindu family is contracted for the benefit of the family or firm. [p. 481, col. 2; p. 482, col. 1.]

Petition for revision under section 44 of Act III of 1914, of the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, first Class, Rahtak, dated 1st October 1914, varying that of the Munsif, second Class, Jhajjar, dated the 22nd April 1914, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Petitioners.

Chaudhri Rambhaji Datta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued Shankar, his father, Bhura, and his brother, Jowahir, for the recovery of a debt incurred by Shankar alone. The Munsif gave a decree against Shankar only, on the ground that although all three defendants were members of a joint Hindu family at the time when the debt was contracted, it had not been shown that the loan was taken either for the benefit of the family, or for the purposes of a joint family business. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge Bhura and Jowahir were held liable without any further finding of fact, merely on the ground that at the time of the loan the family was joint. Bhura and Jowahir have now applied for revision and their petition must succeed. There is ample authority, e. g., Ganpat Rai v. Munni Lal (1), for holding that there is no presumption that a debt contracted even by the Manager of a Hindu family is contracted for the benefit of the firm or family. The fact has to be proved. There is no evidence on the record to justify an affirmative finding of fact; indeed in the memoranda of appeal, presented to the lower Appellate Court, the appellants made the continued existence of a joint Hindu family the sole basis of their contention. They had sufficient opportunity for meeting the plea of the petitioners, but they made no attempt to establish facts on which liability could be based.

The revision is allowed and the plaintiffs' suit as against the petitioners is dismissed. The petitioners will get costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion the Court below is right. A suit was brought under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure for removal of certain trustees of a temple. The case was compromised and a decree was made in accordance with the compromise, to the effect that Gaya Din should be the manager of the temple and Ram Chand should be the manager of the temple property. It is said that Gaya Din has been declared insolvent and accordingly an application was made to the District Judge to remove Gaya Din from his office of trustee. The learned Judge has, in our opinion, rightly held that no such application could be made in the Miscellaneous Department. If Gaya Din had committed any act which would entail his removal from the office of trustee, the remedy was a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but no application in the Miscellaneous Department could be made for his removal. The Court has no authority to entertain an application of this kind. The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the present application was in continuation of the suit which terminated in a compromise and decree. The suit having been decided and a decree made, there could not be a continuance of the suit. The present application cannot be deemed to be an application for execution of the decree. Mr. Gokal Chand Narang and Mehta Bahadur Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law, which arises in this second appeal, is one of some importance and put briefly it comes to this. Is a plaintiff entitled to ask a Court of Justice to give him a decree declaring that a deed of release executed by him was a colourable transaction entered into to defraud his creditors and for enforcing the rights which he possessed prior to that deed? Now, in this case there is no doubt that the defendants were a party to the fraud and it is clear that the purpose of the fraud has been accomplished. The cases, in which a contemplated fraud has not gone beyond the stage of intention, have, therefore, no bearing upon the issue before me. There was considerable diversity of judicial opinion in India as to whether, when the intended fraud had not been carried into execution, the Court should or should not relieve a person from the consequences of the deed executed by him with intent to commit fraud. But the matter has recently been set at rest by a judgment of the Privy Council in Petherpermal Chetty v. Munandy Servai (1), wherein their Lordships held that when the purpose of the fraud has not been effected, there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff from repudiating the transaction as being a colourable one and recovering possession of the property.

The point which I have to determine is whether a plaintiff, who has fraudulently executed a deed of release, can, after the object of the fraud has been carried into effect, claim relief from the consequences of the fraudulent transaction against a person who is in pari delicto. Now, there is a ruling of this Court in Jiwan Singh v. Jora (2) to the effect that a defendant, who is a party to the fraud, is allowed to put forward the plea that the contract, which the plaintiff wants to enforce, was fraudulent and that, as a matter of fact, he was not entitled to the rights he purported to obtain under it. The ratio decidendi of that judgment is that a person cannot invoke the help of a Court of Justice in giving effect to a fraud and that a defendant in possession of the property, through in pari delicto, is permitted to show the real nature of the transaction. But the case of a plaintiff stands on quite a different footing. The maxim in pari delicto, potior est conditio possidentis is fully applicable to him and I see no valid reason why a Court of Equity should help a person who does not come with clean hands.

As observed by Mellor J., in Taylor v. Chester (3), the maxim in pari delicto, potior est conditio possidentis is as thoroughly settled as any proposition of law can be. It is a maxim of law established, not for the benefit of plaintiffs or defendants, but is founded on principles of public policy, which will not assist a plaintiff, who has paid over money or handed over property in pursuance of an "illegal or immoral" contract, to recover it back, for the Courts will not assist an illegal transaction in any respect: per Lord Ellenborough in Edgar v. Fowler (4); Collins v. Blantern (5); Lord Mansfield in Holman v. Johnson (6). The same principle is enunciated in Kerr on Fraud and Mistake, 4th Edition, page 436, where the learned author observes: "It is a general rule that a Court of Justice will not interpose actively in favour of a man who is particeps criminis in an illegal or fraudulent transaction. The Court will take the objection as to the illegality of the transaction, even although the defendant himself does not. Where both parties are equally offenders against the law, the maxim potior est conditio possidentis prevails, not because the defendant is more favoured, where both are equally criminal, but because on the principle of public policy the Court will not assist a plaintiff, who has paid over money or handed over property in pursuance of an illegal or immoral contract, to recover it back. If, accordingly, a deed has been executed, or a conveyance made, to enable a party to contravene the provisions of an Act of Parliament, no suit in equity will lie to set aside the deed or recover the estate. The party executing it cannot be heard to allege his own fraudulent purpose. He is estopped from confirming the operation of his deed within the limits of his intended fraud." The principle is fully established that allegans turpitudinem suam shall not be heard. The rule of law laid down in a judgment of this Court reported as Dogar Mal v. Jamiat (7) is also to the effect that a plaintiff is precluded from alleging that he effected the fictitious transaction in fraud of his creditors.

Upon a consideration of the law bearing upon the subject, I am satisfied that the plaintiff in this case cannot, after deceiving his creditors, be allowed to avoid his deed on the ground of fraud. The conclusion arrived at by the learned Divisional Judge is, therefore, correct, and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—It is first contended that the landlord can compel the tenant to surrender the land on the strength of the following clause in the lease-deed (Exhibit A):—"If, while without alienating the land in any manner I am enjoying the said land through posterity, I find that I do not require the said land, I shall relinquish the land to you and obtain from you the value of the improvements which I have made thereon".

In our opinion this clause does not work a forfeiture, but is rather intended to secure for the tenant a right to relinquish his holding at his option. In fact the case in which the tenant alienates the land is in terms excluded from the conditions upon which he is allowed to relinquish it. The landlord, therefore, cannot rely on the fact that the land has been alienated as indicating a desire to relinquish, and thus work the clause to the tenants' disadvantage when forfeiture does not follow from the act of alienation. We do not see any material distinction between this case and that dealt with in Parameshri v. Vittappa Shanbaga (1).

The second contention, which is that the landlord is entitled to recover half the land-cess from the tenant, is a good one. Madras Act V of 1884 does not restrict this right to cases in which the lease-deed contains a provision to that effect.

We modify the decree by allowing Rs. 4-11-6 disallowed by the lower Courts and in other respects we dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal partly allowed; Decree modified.

Assault—Compensation for assault—Costs incurred in prosecuting assailant, if allowable.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge of the Sialkot Division, dated the 13th January 1913, varying that of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 29th May 1912, decreeing claim for Rs. 364.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Devi Chand, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and the cross-appeal No. 888 of 1913 arise out of an action brought by the plaintiff, Jagan Nath, against the defendants for damages for assault and battery. The Court of first instance assessed the damages at Rs. 364.

The plaintiff and the defendants both preferred appeals to the Divisional Judge, who dismissed the appeal of the latter and accepting that of the former enhanced the amount to Rs. 614. Both parties being dissatisfied with the decision of the lower Appellate Court have appealed to this Court and these appeals may conveniently be disposed of by one judgment.

The damages awarded by the lower Courts include, inter alia, an item of Rs. 164, which represents the costs incurred by the plaintiff in successfully prosecuting the defendants for causing hurt, and for the reasons to be set forth hereafter we are of opinion that the plaintiff is not legally entitled to recover the expenses of the criminal litigation. In regard to the remaining items, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has, after full consideration of the evidence, decided that the plaintiff is entitled to the medical expenses incurred by him and also to damages for mental and physical injuries, and has estimated the amount of damages with reference to all the circumstances of the case. It is clear that there is no principle of law involved which would justify interference in a second appeal, and the decision being based upon facts is obviously not open to objection in this Court. The dictum of the learned Chief Judge in Shib Ram v. Hamir Singh (1) that the question of the quantum of damages can be considered in second appeal, which has been cited before us, is no authority for the proposition that a finding as to the amount of damages arrived at after a consideration of all the relevant facts is liable to be disturbed in second appeal, when the legal liability is beyond dispute and the contest is confined to the sum of money which should be paid by one party to the other. The report of that case does not show on what grounds the decision on damages was attacked, and we doubt very much whether the brief observation contained therein was intended to lay down the broad proposition which the learned Counsel for the plaintiff wants to deduce from it.

In England the amount of damages to be awarded is a question for the Jury and in India the same function is performed by the Subordinate Courts. We think the decision of the lower Courts estimating the amount of damages is a question of fact, unless such amount is beyond the legal limits if there are any, [vide Banee Madhub Chatterjee v. Bholanath Banerjee (2); Joheerooddeen Mahomed v. Dabee Pershad Singh (3); Joheerooddeen Mahomed v. Dabee Pershad Singh (4); Jogeswar Sarma v. Dinaram Sarma (5)] or it is assessed upon a wrong principle of law. In the case before us we do not find any such error as would constitute a justification for our interference in second appeal.

Coming now to the item of Rs. 164 which has been allowed in lieu of the expenditure incurred by the plaintiff in the criminal action brought against the defendants, we are clear that the costs incurred in criminal proceedings are no part of the consequences of the wrong done by the defendants and they cannot, therefore, be recovered. It is manifest that the plaintiff was not bound to prosecute his assailants and that he might have obtained full satisfaction for the wrong done him without entering upon the criminal prosecution. The fact that he voluntarily resorted to a Criminal Court to get the defendants punished, is absolutely no reason for throwing upon them the liability for the expenditure incurred for a merely collateral purpose. We cannot regard it as damages which flowed from their wrongful act.

The case of an accused in a malicious prosecution bringing a civil suit against his prosecutor and recovering as part of the damages the money spent by him in defending himself in the criminal action is for obvious reasons not parallel and no argument can, therefore, be deduced from it. The accused in that case has no alternative but to resist the indictment brought against him by the defendant, and a case of that kind clearly stands upon a different footing. Nor does the fact that under section 545, Criminal Procedure Code, the Criminal Court is empowered to order the whole or any part of the fine recovered from the convict to be applied in defraying expenses incurred in the prosecution, constitute a valid argument for holding that such expenses can be obtained by a civil suit. There is no principle of law governing the award of damages for tort upon which the claim of the plaintiff can be sustained, and the conclusion reached by us is fully supported by the decisions of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts in Ohandan v. Sumera (6), Fazal Imam v. Fazal Rasul (7), Ohuramoni Dasi v. Baidya Nath Naik (8). The only case, in which the contrary rule is enunciated, is an earlier judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Lal v. Tula Ram (9), and it is noteworthy that it was expressly dissented from in the two subsequent judgments of that Court which are cited above.

Upon an examination of the general principles and the decided cases we have no hesitation in holding that the Courts below have erroneously decided that the expenses of the criminal prosecution should form part of the damages awardable to the plaintiff in an action of this kind. The result is that we dismiss the Appeal

No. 805 of 1913 preferred by the plaintiff, and accepting the appeal of the defendants (No. 888 of 1913) we modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by reducing the decretal amount of Rs. 614—164=450. In view of all the circumstances of the case we direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court and to comply with the orders of the lower Courts as to costs incurred therein.

Appeal dismissed.

wet crops are cultivated on dry lands (provided that the wet crops are not raised with the help of the improvements effected at the tenants' sole expense) is not illegal. In the present case, the help of the water of the Periyar Channel cannot be said to be the help due to the tenants' improvements, even though the tenant might pay water rate to the Circar. There was no permanent work done by the tenant which improved the holding.

We shall, therefore, request the District Court to submit a finding on the evidence on record on the question "whether by custom, the plaintiff is entitled to charge the wet rate claimed if wet crops are raised on dry lands by the tenant with the help of water not obtained by any improvements effected by the tenant himself."

The findings should be submitted in four weeks from receipt of records and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

November 2, 1914.

MR. F. A. GREGORY—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

versus

MR. H. THOMSON—DECREE-HOLDER—
RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 46—Execution of decree—Jurisdiction of execution Court to issue prohibitory order to person outside its territorial jurisdiction.

A decree passed by a Court at Jubbulpore was transferred for execution to a Court at Ambala. The latter Court issued a prohibitory order to the Examiner of Accounts, Lahore, and to the Executive Engineer, Saharanpur, directing them not to make any payments to the judgment-debtor, a contractor, to whom money was due on contracts on account of work done under the Executive Engineer, Saharanpur. It was contended for the judgment-debtor that the Ambala Court had no jurisdiction to issue the prohibitory orders:

Held, that the contention was valid, for there was nothing to show that the judgment-debtor could have claimed payment at Ambala and that the mere fact that the judgment-debtor resided at Ambala and the work done by him was done partly in the Ambala District and his claims had first to be passed by the Examiner of Accounts at Lahore did not confer jurisdiction on the Ambala Court. [p. 488, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Ambala Division, dated the 7th May 1914, affirming that of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 3rd April 1914, issuing prohibitory orders to the Examiner of Accounts, Lahore, and to the Executive Engineer, Saharanpur.

Mr. Obedulla, for the Appellant.

Lala Madan Gopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will cover the connected Appeal No. 899 of 1914. In both of these cases Mr. Gregory is the judgment-debtor, decrees having been passed against him at Jubbulpore. Recently Mr. Gregory has been working as a contractor for the North-Western Railway, the work done by him being done partly in the Ambala District and partly in the Saharanpur District. Mr. Gregory was residing in Ambala, that is to say, Ambala seems to have been his head-quarters while the work was being done. Payment had to be obtained from the Executive Engineer, Saharanpur, but the claims had first to be passed by the Examiner of Accounts at Lahore.

The Jubbulpore Court having, at instance of the decree-holders, issued non-satisfaction certificates, the decrees were transferred to the District Judge of Ambala, who issued prohibitory orders to the Examiner of Accounts, Lahore, and to the Executive Engineer, Saharanpur. The only question which has been argued before me is whether the District Judge had jurisdiction to issue such orders.

In one case, where the value of the original suit was over Rs. 5,000, the District Judge's order has been attacked by appeal direct to this Court, in the other the order has been upheld on appeal by the Divisional Judge, and so the judgment-debtor has lodged a second appeal to this Court.

Now it seems perfectly obvious that an executing Court's jurisdiction is limited to its own local limits, otherwise there would be no need at all for the Court which passed the decree to send the decree for execution to another Court. The Ambala Court cannot execute a decree in the Sharanpur District any more than the Jubbulpore Court could. Begg, Dunlop and Co. v. Jagannath Marwari (1) also is a clear authority on the point.

But for the decree-holders it is urged that as Mr. Gregory's claims on the Railway were payable at Ambala, and as he could have brought a suit at Ambala to recover his money from the Railway, the Ambala Court had jurisdiction. There is nothing to show that Mr. Gregory could have claimed payment at Ambala. It was work done under the Executive Engineer of the Railway, and presumably Mr. Gregory would have to go to the head-quarters of the Railway Division (i. e., Saharanpur) to get paid. But as a matter of fact I understand that the usual practice in such cases is for the Executive Engineer to give the contractor a cheque payable at a Government Treasury. It would probably have suited Mr. Gregory best, under ordinary circumstance, to get a cheque on the Ambala Treasury, but I presume it would be open to him to take a cheque on the Saharanpur Treasury, and in that case I think it is clear that the Ambala Court could not issue a prohibitory order. And apparently it is the issuing of the cheque, not the cashing of the cheque, which a Court may prohibit in such cases, see Bhagwandas Kishordas v. Abdul Husein Mahomed Ali (2), and the issue of the cheque would surely be a transaction to be effected in Saharanpur. I am, therefore, of opinion that the prohibitory orders issued by the Ambala Court are without jurisdiction.

Then it is urged on behalf of the decree-holders that it is only the garnishee, and not the judgment-debtor, who can raise objection as to want of jurisdiction, but no authority is cited for the proposition that a judgment-debtor cannot raise such an objection, and as he is a person who is directly interested in the matter, I fail to see why he cannot object. I note too that the prohibition is addressed partly to him, see Order XXI, rule 46, the prohibition forbidding the creditor from recovering as well as the debtor from paying the debt which the decree-holder seeks to attach.

Finally I am asked to delay orders so that the decree-holders may have time to get action taken under section 46 of the Civil Procedure Code. But such action can only be taken by the Court which passed the decree, and as long as execution proceedings are pending in the Ambala Court, I fail to see how the Jubbulpore Court can take action. To have execution proceedings pending in two different Courts at one and the same time would lead in many cases to utter confusion and was, I am sure, never contemplated by the framers of the Procedure Code, and the very terms of the proviso to section 46 seem to make it clear that it applies only to decrees which have not yet been transferred.

I accept these appeals and set aside the prohibitory orders passed by the District Judge of Ambala as bad for want of jurisdiction. The judgment-debtor has succeeded purely on technical grounds and I leave parties to bear their own costs of these execution proceedings both in the Ambala Courts and in this Court.

Appeal accepted.

Sadasook Gambir Chand v. Kannayya, 19 M. 96 and Srinivasa Charlu v. Balaji Rau, 21 M. 232, followed.

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Hannay, in Civil Revision Petition No. 598 of 1913 on the file of the High Court, preferred against that of the Court of Small Causes, Madras, in Small Cause Suit No. 6522 of 1913.

FACTS.—The suit was to recover arrears of rent alleged to be due under a rental agreement executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. By a separate document of even date with the suit rental agreement, the defendant purported to mortgage usufructually to the plaintiff certain immoveable properties of his, agreeing to repay the principal by 40 monthly instalments of Rs. 650 each, the interest for the said 40 months having been paid in advance on the date of the loan. The rent purporting to be payable under the rental agreement was Rs. 162-8-0, which represented the stipulated interest at 10 annas per cent. per mensem on the principal sum advanced, viz., Rs. 26,000 and this sum was apportioned on the several properties mortgaged. The rental agreement, in addition to referring to the above rent as payable (though it was actually paid in advance in the shape of interest), provided that such payments should go towards gradual reduction of the interest and principal due under the mortgage-bond. Six of the monthly instalments payable under the mortgage-deed were duly paid and default was committed in respect of the others. Plaintiff, thereupon, instituted this suit in the Presidency Small Cause Court, which the defendant contested. The learned second Judge returned the plaint under section 19A of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, for presentation to the proper Court, as he held that the lease in suit was not an independent transaction but only part and parcel of the mortgage arrangement and that he had no jurisdiction to hear the suit, which was in effect not for rent but to recover instalments due under the mortgage transaction. Against this order, the plaintiff preferred a civil revision petition, Civil Revision Petition No. 598 of 1913, and Hannay, J., who heard this petition, set aside the order of the Small Cause Court Judge. The judgment of the learned Judge was as follows:—

"The preliminary objection is taken that no revision petition lies, as the proper course was for the petitioner to have applied to the Small Cause Court under section 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. The order in this case is an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court. It is not an order having the force of a decree, and it has been held in Chinnathambi Mudaliar v. Veerabadriah Naidoo (1) that the orders referred to in section 38 are orders having the effect of a decree. The preliminary objection is, therefore, overruled.

"On the merits I think the order of the Judge cannot be supported. The plaintiff merely sues for rent upon an agreement executed by the defendant. The agreement was, no doubt, executed contemporaneously with a mortgage between the same parties and it contains references to the mortgage. It provides that the rent is to be applied in the first place in reduction of interest under the mortgage and in the second place in reduction of the instalments of principal payable thereunder. That is merely a term providing for appropriation of the rent under the mortgage, and though the plaint recites that the rent sued for will be credited accordingly there is no prayer as regards that matter. The only prayer is for recovery of the arrears of rent claimed. The proper appropriation of the rent will be a matter for disposal in connection with the mortgage, but the mere fact that a term relating to such appropriation appears in the rental agreement is not sufficient, in my opinion, to support the conclusion of the Small Cause Court Judge that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit for rent upon the agreement.

"The order of the lower Court is set aside and the lower Court will be directed to take the plaint upon the file and proceed to determine it according to law. The respondent will pay the petitioner's costs of this petition."

(1) 26 M. 163.

NAGOOR MEERA SAHIB v. SOOKULAL SOWCAR.

Against this judgment the defendant preferred an appeal under the Letters Patent.

Messrs. V. C. Seshachariar and A. Narayana Sarma, for the Appellant:—This Court has no jurisdiction to revise an order of the Presidency Small Cause Court. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was right in holding that he had no jurisdiction. The mortgage-deed and the rental agreement represent one transaction. The suit was in effect to compel payment of the principal money due under the mortgage-bond and as such related to immoveable property, and the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction under section 19, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, to try the same. The next objection is that no revision lay as other remedies were open which the plaintiff did not avail himself of. Section 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act provided a right of appeal to a Full Bench of that Court against the order in question.

[Mr. O. P. Venkataraghavachariar, continuing.] Any order in the suit is appealable. It cannot be denied that the suit was contested. It is not that only orders having the force of a decree are appealable to the Full Bench. There is nothing in the section to warrant such a restricted construction. Chinnuthambi Mudaliar v. Veerabadrach Naidu (1) is not correctly decided. The order in question is one having the force of a decree, as it put an end to the suit so far as the Small Cause Court was concerned. The nature of jurisdiction exercised by the Full Bench in applications for new trial is that of an Appellate Court. Sadasook Gambir Chand v. Kannayya (2) and Srinivasa Charlu v. Balaji Rau (3) are not good law and require reconsideration in light of the ruling in Johan Smidt v. Ram Prasad (4). See also the judgment of Sir Arnold White, C.J., in Madurai Pillai v. Muthu Chetty (5) where the right to apply for a new trial is styled as the right of appeal. Further the Chapter is headed "New Trials and Appeals." It is a rule of interpretation of Statutes that every word used therein is intended for some specific purpose, and is not a surplusage. The word "appeals" must, therefore, refer to some section and section 38 is the only section in the Chapter to which it can be applied. Headings to divisions of an Act are portions of the Act itself, and not mere marginal notes: John Lang v. Kerr Anderson & Co. (6). They are in the nature of a preamble: Latham v. Lafone (7), Hammersmith and City Ry. v. Brand (8) and Reg. v. Local Government-Board (9) per Brett, L. J.; Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, page 71*. The plaintiff, having failed to appeal, is not entitled to come up to the High Court in revision. Jagannatha Mudaliar v. Vathiyar Appa, sawmy Mudalair (10). A revision petition does not lie against an order returning a plaint by the Small Cause Court, as that order is final. Vide Shamshudin Routhem v. Asa Bivi Ammal (11). Such an order confers jurisdiction on the ordinary Court: In re Hausambhai Abdulabhai (12) and Mahamaya Dasya v. Nitya Hari Das Bairagi (13). If the order in question is held only to be interlocutory, then also no revision is competent.

Mr. M. A. Tirunarayanachariar, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—In a recent case Venkataramanjulu Naidu v. Ramaswami Naidu (14), we followed the decisions in Haladhar Maiti v. Choytonna Maiti (15) and Ramdin Bania v. Sew Baksh Singh (16) and held that the Court could exercise revisionary jurisdiction over the Presidency Small Cause Court.

We have been shown no reason now for taking a different view. It is argued that in the present case there could be no revision, because respondent-plaintiff had an appeal open to him under section 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. But we

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 64, 85—Punjab Loans Limitation Act (I of 1904)—Acknowledgment—Novation—Accounts stated.

Dealings between the parties began about the beginning of 1905, and balances were struck in May, July and November 1905. The dealings were of various kinds, entries had to be made sometimes to defendants' debit and sometimes to their credit. The last balance wound-up with the words baqi deone and it was contended for the plaintiff that they amounted to a promise to pay:

Held, that the words were simply equivalent to the English phrase 'balance due' and, though an acknowledgment, did not amount to a promise to pay and that, therefore, Article 85 and not Article 64 was applicable to the claim and that the mere fact that accounts were kept by one side alone was no sufficient reason for holding that the account was not an open, mutual and current account within the meaning of Article 85. [p. 492, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge of Shahpur at Lyallpur dated the 14th July 1913, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, Lyallpur, dated the 30th July 1912, dismissing the suit.

Mehta Bahadur Chand and Mr. Gokal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue for an amount due on bahi accounts. The first Court held that Article 85 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act applied, and dismissed the suit as time-barred. The Divisional Judge on appeal held that Article 64 applied, and the period of limitation being six years under the Punjab Loans Limitation Act, he held the claim to be within time and gave the plaintiffs a decree. The defendants appeal.

Limitation is the only question for decision in this appeal. The nature of the dealings between the parties is stated in the judgment of the first Court (see page 5 of the paper-book). Dealings between the parties began about the beginning of 1905 and balances were struck in May, July and November 1905. The last is the balance in question. The wording of this balance will be found on page 5 of the paper-book. For the plaintiffs it is contended that this is a case of an "account stated," within the meaning of Article 64. Defendants contend that Article 85 applies, and that the period of limitation is only three years. The real question is whether the balance is merely an acknowledgment of an existing debt or whether it also contains a promise to pay.

Ganga Prasad v. Ram Dayal (1) lays down that a mere acknowledgment of a debt is neither an account stated, nor is it evidence of a new contract. Various older rulings are cited, and the difference between the law in England and in this country is pointed out, and it is also pointed out that if such an acknowledgment were an "account stated" within the meaning of Article 64 or mere evidence of a new contract, section 19 of the Limitation Act would be a dead letter.

In Ratta Ram v. Musammam Nano (2) a Full Bench ruling, it is also held that if the statement of account is nothing more than a mere acknowledgment this is not a fresh contract, and does not amount to an account stated. This ruling has been followed in later rulings of this Court [vide Ganpat v. Daulat Ram (3)] and we have no hesitation in following it.

Next comes the question whether this particular balance contains a promise to pay. It certainly winds up with the words bagi deone, but we are unable to draw any distinction between this phrase and the phrase bagi dena rahe, which is to be found in Pala Mal v. Tulla Ram (4), or the phrase baki dena found in Ranchhoddas Nathubhai v. Jeychand Khushalchand (5). As far as we can see all three phrases are simply equivalent to the English phrase "balance due," and though an acknowledged debt, do not amount to a promise to pay.

We hold, therefore, that Article 64 is inapplicable.

Counsel for the plaintiffs has not argued that any other Article applies, though he contends that Article 85 does not apply to such a case. For the defendants it is contended that if Article 85 does not apply, Article 83 applies at least to a part of the case. The dealings between the parties were of various kinds. Entries had to be made sometimes to defendants' debit, sometimes to their credit. The mere fact that accounts are kept by one side alone is no sufficient reason for holding that the account is not an open, mutual and current account within the meaning of Article 85; see Lakshmayya v. Jagannatham (6).

We hold that Article 85 is applicable and the claim is time-barred.

We, therefore, accept this appeal and reversing the decision of the lower Appellate Court, we restore that of the first Court dismissing the suit. The plaintiff will pay costs as ordered by that Court, but we leave the parties to bear their own costs in the Divisional Court and in this Court, as possibly the plaintiff would have sued in time, had he not been misled into thinking that he would be in time under the Punjab Loans Limitation Act if he sued within six years.

Appeal accepted.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870)—Ad valorem fee—Appeal against final decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act from decree under.

If any proceedings, which have terminated in a final decree under Order XXXIV, rule 3, are made the subject of an appeal, the appeal must be treated as an appeal from the decree and must be stamped accordingly and an ad valorem fee should be paid. [p. 493, col. 1]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, dated the 18th January 1915.

Babu Rudra Datta Sinha, holding brief of Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This case is up to-day for discussion of the Court-fee which is payable upon the memorandum of appeal. The office has reported that the memorandum of appeal has been filed on a two-rupee stamp. The stamp officer, however, has suggested that an ad valorem fee is required, inasmuch as what has been appealed against is a decree which has been passed by the Court of first instance under the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 3. This rule contemplates the passing of a final decree in a foreclosure suit and, as the office remarks, an alteration has been made in the law since the introduction of the new Code of Civil Procedure. Under the Transfer of Property Act, and while the sections relating to foreclosure suits were incorporated in that Act, the Court was merely required to pass an order for foreclosure, or, in case the mortgage was redeemed, for the delivery of the property to the person redeeming; but now under the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 3, it is quite clear that what the Court is directed to do in such cases is to prepare a final decree. It follows, therefore, that if any proceedings which have terminated in the final decree under this rule are made the subject of appeal, the appeal must be treated as an appeal from the decree and not as an appeal against the order. We may point out that this view is confirmed by a reference to the provision of Order XLIII, rule (1), clause (O). From this clause it appears that the only order which is appealable in proceedings taken under rule 3 is an order refusing to extend the time for the payment of the mortgage-money. It seems to us to follow necessarily that any other appeal must be treated as an appeal against the final decree and must be stamped accordingly. We allow the appellant one month to make good the deficiency in the Court fee reported by the office.

Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT

OLDFIELD, J.—The plaintiff entrusted his bundle, containing Rs. 430, to the 1st defendant to be kept whilst the two went to a godown ten feet distant for a short time. The 1st defendant put it in an unlocked box, in which he had money of his own. When the two went away the 1st defendant's nephew was in the shop, though he was not actually asked to mind it. On the return of the plaintiff and the 1st defendant the money was gone. The Subordinate Judge held that the 1st defendant was not negligent and dismissed the plaintiff's Small Cause suit. A learned Judge of this Court revised this decision, passing the decree for the plaintiff which is before us on appeal. The facts stated above are all that are material, except perhaps what the learned Judge and the Subordinate Judge have not referred to, though they doubtless had it in mind, that there is no allegation in the plaintiff's evidence of his having told the 1st defendant anything regarding the amount of the money entrusted.

It is, no doubt, the case that this Court has before now interfered in revision with Small Cause decrees, based on a flagrant misinterpretation or disregard of evidence. But we do not understand the learned Judge to have done so in this case or to have based his judgment on anything except what he held to be the lower Court's mistake of law.

That mistake was, as we understand him, not its adoption of the measure of care actually taken by the 1st defendant to preserve his own money in the box as the test, by which his conduct in connection with the plaintiffs had to be tried, instead of the care which a man of ordinary prudence would take, as section 151 of the Indian Contract Act prescribes. For he refers to the former only in connection with an argument advanced in support of the lower Court's judgment, not in connection with the judgment itself. The learned Judge's ground of decision was that negligence was not established and he treated this as matter of law, because it involved an inference from the facts found.

With all due respect we do not think this sustainable. There are no doubt cases such as Thomas Giblin v. McMullen (1), in which the question whether there is any evidence of negligence is dealt with as one for the Judge, not the Jury; and there are others in which the question, whether proof of gross negligence or ordinary negligence was necessary; and had been given, was treated as one of law. But the present case does not resemble them and we have been shown nothing in support of the general proposition which the learned Judge's judgment involves. The Subordinate Judge, as his judgment shows, tested the 1st defendant's conduct with reference to the proper standard, that is prescribed in section 151 of the Indian Contract Act, the care which a man of ordinary prudence would take in similar circumstances; and it is not shown that he made any mistake in applying that test. The result of his application of it must then be accepted as final.

In these circumstances we must allow the Letters Patent Appeal, set aside the decision under appeal and restore that of the Subordinate Judge. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs in this Court.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree. It is not shown that the Subordinate Judge misunderstood the law or that the inference of fact at which he arrived, namely, that there was no such negligence on the part of the 1st defendant as a man of ordinary prudence acting in respect of his own affairs might have acted as the 1st defendant did is a perverse finding of fact. Nor is it shown that the only possible inference on the facts proved was the contrary inference. [See Sreemant Raja Yerlagadda Mallikarjuna Prasada Naidu Bahadur v. Rayapati Venkata Vasudeva Row (2).]

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 4, 5—Application for decree absolute—Limitation—Computation of period of limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181—Mortgage suit—Preliminary decree—Appeal—Decree affirmed by Appellate Courts—Application made three years after expiration of period allowed for payment by first Court, if maintainable.

An application for an order absolute for sale under Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, is governed by Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, 1908, and the period of limitation should be computed from the time when the right to apply first accrued. [p. 496, col. 2; p. 497, col. 1.]

A preliminary decree under Order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code, was made on the 27th of February 1909. The decree allowed a period of six months to the judgment-debtor to pay the amount of the decree and that period expired on the 26th of August 1909. Meanwhile the judgment-debtor appealed. The decree was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court on the 25th of January 1911 and by the High Court on the 25th of January 1912. The decree-holder applied on the 25th of April 1913 under Order XXXIV, rule 5, for a decree absolute:

Held, that the application, having been made beyond three years from the date of the expiration of the period for payment, was barred by time under Article 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, 1908. [p. 497, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the subsequent decrees by the Appellate Courts only affirmed the right given by the Court of first instance and did not give rise to a fresh right unless the decree of the Court of first instance was in any respect varied by the Appellate Courts [p. 497, col. 1.]

Execution second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 26th August 1914.

FACTS.—This was a decree-holder's appeal. The decree-holder obtained a decree for sale against the respondent on the 27th of February 1909. Before he could apply for an order absolute for sale under Order XXXIV, rule 5, the judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge who confirmed the decree of the first Court on 25th January 1911. He appealed to the High Court and the High Court too dismissed his appeal confirming the decrees of the two lower Courts on 25th January 1912. The decree-holder then applied for an order absolute on 25th April 1913. There was no extension of time for payment in either of the original decrees of the lower Courts. The first Court dismissed the application of the decree-holder as barred by time and the lower Appellate Court on appeal upheld that order. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Durga Charan Banerjee, (with him Dr. Surendra Nath Sen), for the Appellant:—I admit that under the old Act the application was an application in execution, but now this is an application in the suit itself and Article 181 of the Limitation Act would apply. The application must be made when the right to apply accrues. The right to apply accrued in this case when the decree became final.

[BANERJEE, J.—Suppose a decree is made and the judgment-debtor appeals, is not the decree-holder bound to apply for execution of the decree within three years of the decree?]

Before the expiry of six months fixed for payment, when the judgment-debtor takes up the matter in appeal and the matter becomes sub judice, the right to apply accrues only when the final decree is made. The appeal being preferred there was a likelihood of the decree being reversed.

[BANERJEE, J.—If the decree were reversed, the whole proceeding falls to the ground. There is nothing to prevent the application being made. The right to apply accrued when the six months allowed by the Sub-Judge expired].

If the right to apply accrued on several dates, why should not the decree-holder apply later?

[BANERJEE, J.—Take the case of an instalment bond. The plaintiff is bound to sue on first default and failure to do so will destroy his right].

The distinction is that there is danger of the right being lost. Suppose the decree were reversed by the lower Appellate Court and were restored by the High Court. The right to apply will accrue on the decree of the High Court.

There will be no difference, I submit, in this case and the present case. The decrees of the lower Appellate Court and of the High Court give a fresh right to apply.

We will have to introduce the word "first" in the words of the Article and the words will be "right to apply first accrues." This we have no justification for doing.

The decree of the first Court becomes merged in the decree of the Appellate Court.

Article 182 provides that application may be made from the date of the original and the date of the Appellate Court's decree, the date of the High Court's decree and so forth, showing that where it was meant to give specific directions, they were inserted in the Article. The words of Article 181 are different and we can apply within the time allowed from the date of any of the decrees.

[RAFIQUE, J.—Can the judgment-debtor pay if time is not extended by the High Court, although the decree of the lower Courts is affirmed?]

No. He has no right to pay. The decree in this case never became final and was sub judice and the decree-holder could not apply to have it declared final. Final decree is the decree of the Appellate Court.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondent:—Supposing the judgment-debtor appeals and the proceedings in appeal take some years, and the judgment-debtor withdraws his appeal, when would the right to apply accrue?

It is alleged by the other side that the right to apply accrued several times. I submit that he was, therefore, bound to apply as soon as the right accrued first.

Where the decrees of the Appellate Courts were meant to give a starting point for limitation, provision was specially made for them under Article 182, Limitation Act.

Article 181 makes no such provision and the decree-holder was bound to apply within the time allowed by law from the date when his right accrued first, and not from any later date.

Under the old Limitation Act it was held that an application for order absolute under the Transfer of Property Act fell under Article 178 of that Act.

MADHO RAM v. NIHAL SINGH.

I rely on Ali Ahmad v. Naziran Bibi (1), Udit Narain v. Jagannath (2).

Cause of action once accrued cannot be said to accrue again because there was a fresh denial. It was so held in Baldeo Prasad v. Ibn Haidar (3).

He also referred to Gaya Din v. Jhuma Lal (4).

Mr. Durga Charan Banerjee, in reply:—The first Court's decree becomes either embodied in the Appellate Court's decree or is revived by the later decree. In any case there is a right to apply when the decree in appeal is made.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application made under Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure, for a final decree in a suit for sale upon a mortgage. The preliminary decree under Order XXXIV, rule 4, was made on the 27th of February 1909. That decree allowed a period of six months to judgment-debtor to pay the amount of the decree, and that period expired on the 26th of August 1909. Meanwhile the judgment-debtor appealed, with the result that the decree of the Court of first instance was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court on the 25th of January 1911, and on second appeal, by the High Court on the 25th of January 1912. Neither the first Appellate Court nor this Court extended time for payment of the mortgage-money. The present application was made on the 25th of April 1913. It was contended on behalf of the judgment-debtors, that is the mortgagors, that the application was beyond time. This contention was allowed by the Court of first instance and the decision of that Court was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The decree-holders have preferred this appeal and it is urged on their behalf that limitation should be computed either from the date on which the decree of the Court of first instance was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court or when the decree of this Court was made. In order to consider whether the application is barred by limitation or not it is first, of all necessary to determine what Article of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act is applicable to the present case. It is clear that Article 182 does not apply and there being no other Article which is applicable, the only Article which can be applied is Article 181. Rule 5 of Order XXXIV provides that where payment is not made within the time fixed, the Court shall on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff pass the final decree for the sale of the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof. Therefore, it is necessary that an application should be made by the plaintiff in order to obtain a final decree under that Order. The application is thus an application in the suit and since the passing of the present Code of Civil Procedure it can no longer be said to be an application in execution or for the execution of a decree. It is, therefore, manifest that Article 182 cannot apply and as stated above, since there is no other Article which is applicable, the only Article which would govern an application of this kind would be Article 181. This has been held by the Bombay High Court in Datto Atmaram Hasabnis v. Shankar Dattatraya (5), following the decision of Jenkins, C. J., in Amolak Chand Parak v. Sharat Chandra Mukherjee (6). Under the old Limitation Act also it was held by this Court in Ali Ahmad v. Naziran Bibi (1), and Udit Narain v. Jagannath (2), that an application for an order absolute for sale under the Transfer of Property Act was governed by Article 178 of the Limitation Act of 1877, which corresponds to Article 181 of the present Act. The next question to be considered is, when did the right to apply accrue as provided in the 3rd column of that Article? There can be no doubt that after the expiry of the six months allowed by the decree of the Court of first instance, the decree-holders-plaintiffs became entitled to apply for final decree. The mere fact that an appeal was preferred from the preliminary decree did not take away that right or postpone it. This is conceded by the learned Vakil for the appellants, but he urges that he also acquired the right to apply when the decrees of the Appellate Courts, namely, that of the first Court of Appeal and of the High Court were passed.

WASI ALI v. JANG BAHADUR SINGH.

AYYAKUTTI MANKONDAN v. PERIYASAMI KAVANDAN.

It seems to us that limitation should be computed from the time when the right to apply first accrued. That right accrued, as we have said above, when the six months granted by the Court of first instance to the judgment-debtors expired. The passing of the subsequent decrees by the Appellate Courts only affirmed that right and did not give rise to a fresh right, unless the decree of the Court of first instance was in any respect varied by the Appellate Courts. We think that the analogy of the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in Gaya Din v. Jhumman Lal (4) applies. That was a case in which the question was, whether the money sought to be recovered became due under Article 132 of the first Schedule when default was first made in the payment of instalments. It was held that the money became due when the first default was made. On the same principle limitation must be computed, in a case like the present, from the time when the plaintiffs' right to make an application for a final decree first accrued. Admittedly the right first accrued in this case on the 26th of August 1909, and more than three years having expired from that date when the present application was made, it is beyond time. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 4—Ad valorem fee—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6, appeals against decrees under.

An ad valorem fee is payable on appeals against decrees passed under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-ordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated 14th April 1914.

JUDGMENT.—I agree with the view of the Assistant Registrar. A Court-fee of Rs. 550 is required. Let the deficiency be made up within two months. The appeal will be admitted as soon as the deficiency is made up.

The following is the report of the Assistant Registrar:—Appeals from decrees passed under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act were always filed in this Court as appeals in proceedings in execution of decree under section 244, Act XIV of 1882, on a stamp of Rs. 2. Section 90 has been repealed. Its provisions are now embodied in rule 6, Order XXXIV, Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. This is an appeal from a decree passed under that rule. It is headed as an appeal under section 47, Code of Civil Procedure, i. e., as an execution of decree appeal and bears a court-fee label of Rs. 2. I beg to bring it to the notice of the Court that in accordance with the ruling of the Calcutta High Court reported as Lakhi Narain Jagdeo v. Krittibas Das (1), an ad valorem fee of Rs. 550 is payable on this memorandum of appeal.

the rates payable in respect of the neighbouring lands and applying this rate he decreed the plaintiffs' claim to the extent of Rs. 187-14. The defendant went in appeal to the District Judge. He has allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit entirely. In his judgment he remarks that the Court of first instance acted irregularly in treating the suit as one under section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. It certainly was not open to the Assistant Collector to take action under this section, for it never was the case of the plaintiffs, at any rate in the plaint as originally framed, that the defendant was in occupation without the consent of the landlord. On the contrary the allegation is clear, namely, that he was holding as a tenant of the plaintiffs and under a liability to pay a grain rent. The learned Judge is, in my opinion, quite correct in saying that the case should not have been dealt with under section 127. The learned Counsel who appears for the appellants here has pointed out that an application for amendment of the plaint was made on the 17th of November 1914 by which the plaintiffs asked for an additional relief, that is to say, they wanted it to be put in the plaint that if no rate of rent was proved to have been agreed upon, an occupation rent should be allowed under the provisions of section 127. No such amendment could properly be allowed in a case of this kind so as to raise a new case inconsistent with the case raised in the pleadings. It is clear from the judgment of the first Court that the plaintiffs failed entirely to show that there had been any estimate of the produce for the years in suit by way of kankut or that there had been any arrangement for the division of the produce. The plaintiffs relied principally upon the statistics of other years and induced the Court to strike a مند rate, which was applied so as to arrive at the amount said to be owing to the plaintiffs. I do not think this was allowable. The plaintiffs having put up a definite case of a grain rent it was for them to show how much grain had been raised in the years in suit and how much of that grain was due to them and further to show what the market-rate of the grain was in each of the years in suit. The plaintiffs having failed to prove the case set up in the plaint, I do not see my way to interfere in second appeal and grant a decree which could only have been allowed in a suit which was differently framed. In my opinion the decision of the lower Court is correct and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Debt incurred by one of the members—Liability of other members.

It is not a correct statement of Hindu Law to say that when a debt was contracted by one member of an admittedly joint Hindu family, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that the debt was raised for joint family purposes, on the contrary the presumption would be the other way [p. 501, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by one Brij Lal against four persons, Jaishi Ram, Shiam Lal, Nihalu and Kanshi, but of these defendants No. 4 was a pro forma defendant and no relief was asked for against him. As to the other three, the case for the plaintiff was that they were members of a joint Hindu family, that certain transactions were entered into between defendant No. 1 and himself, and that defendant No. 1 was acting (karkun) on behalf of the joint family and struck a balance for Rs. 300 on a certain date. Defendant No. 1 could not be found and proceedings were ex parte against him. He did appear at the first hearing and pleaded that he had not understood the account, but thereafter he never appeared in Court again. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the other hand objected that at the time of agreement defendant No. 2 was a minor, that defendant No. 3 had no connection with this debt, that the business was not joint, and that the money was not raised for the joint business of the family. There was also another question about a settlement of the dispute by a panchayat, but we have nothing to do with that now.

The first Court held that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were not liable and gave an ex parte decree against defendant No. 1 for Rs. 500. The findings of that Court are not very precise, but, so far as I can understand them, they are that it is not proved, that the business was joint that it has not been proved that defendant No. 1 was manager of the family or that he was competent to carry on dealings on behalf of the family, that defendant No. 3 was the oldest member of the family and the natural manager, and that defendant No. 1 was a man of dissipated character. The lower Appellate Court admitted that when the balance was struck the family was joint. It then proceeded to argue the case on the basis of Ganpat Rai v. Munni Lal (1), which ruling is not accepted in the Punjab as being sound.

In my opinion it is not a correct statement of Hindu Law to say that, when a debt was contracted by one member of an admittedly joint Hindu family, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that the debt was raised for joint family purposes. My opinion is on the contrary that the presumption would be the other way, and in support of this opinion I need only quote Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, pages 443 and 444, Bichha Lal v. Jai Pershad (2), Mul Chand v. Sadhu Singh (3) and Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (4). Two rulings have been put forward on the other side, namely, Hari Shanker v. Babu Ram (5) and Suraj Kumar v. Baldeo Das (6).

I have seen these rulings but it does not seem to me that they help. In the latter, for instance, it was positively proved that the members of the Hindu family, who actually contracted the debt, carried on a separate shop of their own apart from the family and actually raised the loan for that separate shop. Now in the present case nothing like this has been proved. No doubt the lower Appellate Court says that it holds that the debt in the present case was not raised for joint family purposes, but there is really no explanation of what the meaning of this remark is. There is no proof whatever on the record that the defendant No. 1 carried on a separate business of his own at all, and a portion at least of the account leading up to the balance in suit makes it clear that a considerable part, at all events, of the debt was on account of joint family business. It seems to me that both the lower Courts have been misled in this case by directing their attention too much to the alleged bad character and dissipated habits of defendant No. 1. He may have been of bad character, but it does not in the least follow that this small debt of Rs. 300 was not raised by him in the ordinary way of family business.

This is no doubt only a revision, but both the Courts below seem to me to have taken so wrong a view as to how cases of this kind ought to be dealt with that I have no hesitation in interfering. For these reasons I allow this revision and amend the decree of the lower Courts making it against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 jointly and severally. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 will pay plaintiff's costs in all the Courts.

Revision allowed.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Res judicata.—Case decided in favour of one party—Decision, adverse, on one point not affecting ultimate favourable decision of case, effect of—Appeal, party not entitled to, effect of.

Where a point in a case is found against a party, and the case is ultimately decided in his favour, and thus he is not entitled to appeal against that decision, the finding on that point does not operate against him as res judicata in a subsequent case. p. 503, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 17th July 1914, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, Partabgarh, dated the 9th March 1914.

i FACTS.—The defendant sued the plaintiffs in the Civil Court for redemption of mortgage of some plots of land, effected by Madho Singh, the defendant's ancestor, in favour of Bhagwan, the plaintiffs' ancestor. The suit was decreed and the defendant was awarded possession of the plots.

Thereupon the plaintiffs brought a suit in the Rent Court against the defendant for recovery of possession over those plots under the provisions of section 108, clause (10), of the Oudh Rent Act, on the ground that they had occupancy rights in respect of the plots in suit. The defendant contended that the suit was not maintainable in the Rent Court, inasmuch as the relation between the parties was not that of landlord and tenant but that of mortgagor and mortgagee, by virtue of which he had got the redemption-decree and possession in pursuance of that decree. He also denied the allegation as to the existence of occupancy rights. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiffs were not occupancy but simply ordinary tenants, as appeared from the entries in the revenue papers prepared at the time of the recent Settlement, and that the relation of landlord and tenant did exist between the parties, and in view of the provisions of section 68, clause

(2), of the Oudh Rent Act decreed their claim and ordered them to be put back in possession until such time as they were not ejected by notice. An appeal from the decree was taken by the defendant on the ground that the relation between the parties was one of mortgagor and mortgagee and not one of landlord and tenant, but it was dismissed as even the Appellate Court held that the latter relationship existed between the parties.

Some time later, the defendant issued a notice of ejectment against the plaintiffs, and they contested it principally on three grounds—firstly, that they and their ancestors were occupancy tenants of the plots entered in the notice, secondly, that they were tenants of those plots at a favourable rate of rent, and lastly, that they were tenants holding under a special agreement, for they alleged that the mortgage transaction above referred to had been entered into on the condition that even after the redemption of the mortgage the plots would remain in the holding of the plaintiffs' ancestor or his heirs at a rental of Rs. 4 a year per bigha. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiffs could not urge any of the grounds mentioned above, because the decision of the Rent Courts in the previous suit for recovery of possession, declaring that the plaintiffs were not occupancy but mere tenants, finally determined the status of the plaintiffs as between them and the defendant. The plaintiffs contended that the said decision could not operate as res judicata, inasmuch as they had after all succeeded in the case and thus, not being entitled to appeal from that decision, could not have it corrected by the Appellate Courts so far as it stood against them.

The Assistant Collector dismissed the suit, and his order was upheld in appeal by the Commissioner.

Babu Ishri Prasad, for the Appellants.

Thakur Lal Behari Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, J. M.—Both the Assistant Collector and the Commissioner have followed the decision of the Courts in the suit for recovery of possession and have not tried the case on its merits. As plaintiffs in the suit for possession, the present appellants succeeded on the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed, and they were not entitled to appeal against the finding of the lower Court that they were not occupancy tenants. The questions in the present suit then are not res judicata by reason of the decisions in the former suit and should be tried on their merits.

I would, therefore, set aside the orders of the lower Courts and direct that the suit be re-heard, fresh evidence being taken if the Court thinks necessary. This view is not contested by the respondent. The appellants have filed along with their grounds of appeal before me a copy of a judgment, which is new evidence in the case and which he does not refer to at all in his grounds of appeal. Such attempts to bring fresh evidence on the record surreptitiously must be stopped. Appellants will, therefore, bear the whole costs in the appeal before me.

TWEEDY, S. M.—I concur.

Order set aside; Case remanded.

Mr. St. G. Jackson and Babu Sita Ram, for the Appellants.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants here were plaintiffs in the Court of first instance in a suit brought to recover possession of certain immoveable property, which once belonged to one Puran. The plaintiffs claimed that they were the nearest reversioners of Puran. Puran after his death had been succeeded by his widow, Musammatt Jasoda who died on the 20th of October 1911, and it was from this latter date that these plaintiffs alleged they had become entitled to the property. The defendant in possession is one Sita Ram who, on the pedigree filed, appears to be more remotely related to the deceased Puran than are the plaintiffs. According to the pedigree which was put in Puran left two daughters, Musammatt Kaunsilla and Musammatt Shitabo, and both of these daughters have sons, the son of Musammatt Shitabo being one Ram Narain who appeared in the case as plaintiffs' witness No. 5. Kaunsilla's son, it appears, is illegitimate but Ram Narain, the son of Shitabo, is admittedly of legitimate descent. Clearly, therefore, if the ordinary Hindu Law applies, the plaintiffs were not entitled to get possession of Puran's estate in the presence of Ram Narain who is Puran's daughter's son. In the plaint no definite custom was set up by the plaintiffs. They merely alleged in a vague way that by law and custom they were entitled to possession of this property. Various pleas were raised by the defendant, the principal one of which was that the plaintiffs had no title to succeed to this property in the presence of the daughter's son, Ram Narain. An issue was struck in the first Court as to whether under the family custom daughters and their sons were excluded from inheritance by cousins and collaterals. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit came to no definite finding upon this issue of custom. On the other grounds he decided in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed their claim. When the case, came in appeal before the learned District Judge, he had to decide the issue as to the custom which was pleaded and after an examination of the evidence, he has come to the conclusion that no custom is proved by which in this family daughter's sons are excluded from inheritance. The learned Judge has referred to all the evidence in the case. The oral evidence he has referred to as scanty and being of practically no value, and as for the wajib-ul-arz which was produced and which provides only that daughters do not in any circumstances obtain a share, he held that not to be sufficient proof of the custom upon which the plaintiffs relied. The question of custom is raised here in second appeal but it appears to me that I am concluded by the finding of the learned District Judge. The law on this point has been clearly laid down in the case reported as Pragi v. Baiju (1), decided by Mr. Spankie. In his judgment in that case he stated that the question whether a particular wajib-ul-arz is sufficient proof of a custom recorded in it is a question not of law but of fact, as it is a question regarding the weight or value to be attached to it. I followed this ruling of Mr. Spankie and adopted the same view of the law in a case reported as Lalman v. Nand Lal (2). The learned Counsel for the appellants referred to a case reported as Musammāt Mohumad-yinnissa v. Musammāt Nasibun (3), in which Mr. Blennerhassett has ruled that a wajib-ul-arz is sufficient proof of custom and if not rebutted is conclusive. This was Mr. Blennerhassett's interpretation of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Lekraj Kurr v. Mahpal Singh (4), which is reported in Rafique and Jackson's Oudh Privy Council Decisions, 2nd Edition, at page 359. The construction placed upon their Lordships' ruling by Mr. Blennerhassett was discussed by Mr. Spankie in Pragi v. Baiju (1) and, he differed from Mr. Blennerhassett's view and held that the Privy Council had laid down no such rule. I agree with Mr. Spankie's view of the matter and it cannot be contended now that as a matter of law a wajib-ul-arz, if unrebutted is conclusive proof of a custom. I adhere to the view which I took in Lalman v. Nand Lal (2) and hold that the sufficiency of evidence being a question of fact the decision of the lower Appellate Court that the evidence in this case is insufficient is binding upon me. The only other point which was argued was in connection with the jus tertii which was set up by the defendant in this case. As I have already mentioned, one of the pleas taken in defence was that Ram Narain, the daughter's son of Puran, had a better right to the property than the plaintiffs. Ram Narain appeared as a witness for the plaintiffs and in his evidence he stated that he did not consider himself entitled to succeed to Puran's property and that he did not claim it. He is a young man of 23 years of age and he gave as his reason for not wanting this property the existence of a custom by which he says that daughter's sons are excluded by collaterals. It appears, however, that, after the death of Musammāt Jasoda, Ram Narain tried in the mutation proceedings to have his name recorded in respect of this property but was unsuccessful in his application, and it is a title late in the day now for it to be argued that Ram Narain's attitude towards this property is that of one who disclaims entry upon his inheritance. It has been argued that because Ram Narain in his evidence has given up all claim to the property and that as his right was the only right which was set up by the defendant as an obstacle to the plaintiffs' right to get the property in this case, (4) 5 C. 744 (P. C.); 6 C. L. R. 593; 7 I. A. 63; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 93; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 704; Rafique and Jackson's P. C. No. 61; 4 Ind. Jur. 423.

SHARAF NOOR v. AHMAD.

the decision of the Court below ought to have been in favour of the plaintiffs. The learned Judge refused to accept this argument. He said that the mere fact that Ram Narain had stated in his evidence that he made no claim to the property would not necessarily vest the title to the property in the plaintiffs. This view of the learned Judge is undoubtedly correct. If the custom of exclusion of daughter's sons has not been established the position is that the estate has vested in Ram Narain after the death of the widow Musammam Jasoda, and if that is so Ram Narain's interest could only pass to the plaintiffs by some act within the law which would, have the effect of transferring the estate to the plaintiffs. A mere declaration on the part of Ram Narain that he does not want the property cannot, as the lower Court observes, operate as a conveyance of the property to the plaintiffs in this case.

These are the only points which have been raised in second appeal. I decide them both against the appellants. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—It is clear that the entry in the marriage register, which is signed by the parties, is clearly to the effect that Rs. 200 was fixed as dower and that the whole of it was deferred. The learned District Judge has considered the evidence produced by the appellant to show that half of it was intended to be prompt dower and has come to the conclusion that it cannot be believed. He has not omitted to consider any portion of the evidence, and I do not see how his finding, which is clearly one of fact, can be challenged in second appeal.

I am, therefore, constrained to hold that no good ground for interference in second appeal is made out. The appeal is accordingly dismissed and the parties are directed to pay their own costs in this Court.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 32 (6)—Old pedigree—Authorship of statements in old pedigree, whether necessary to prove—Admissibility of evidence, objection as to, when to be taken and decided.

Neither section 32 of the Evidence Act nor its clause 6 provide that it is necessary to show who it was that made the statements referred to therein. [p. 506, col. 2.]

Held, that the pedigree was admissible in evidence. [p. 506, col. 2.]

The proper time to object to the admissibility of evidence is at the trial when the evidence is tendered and it is then that the Court should rule as to the admissibility or inadmissibility of the evidence. [p. 506, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Moradabad.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.
Mr. Nihal Chand (for Mr. B. E. O'Connor with him Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that a certain deed of gift made by one Musammatt Sanjia in favour of the defendant should be held to be null and void after her death. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The lower Appellate Court gave him a decree.

Having regard to the fact that this is a second appeal, the learned Vakil on behalf of the defendant-appellant was bound to admit that the only question that could be argued, was the admissibility in evidence of a pedigree relied upon by the plaintiff, on the strength of which the lower Appellate Court decreed the plaintiff's claim. Objection to the admissibility of evidence taken at a late stage in litigation is not to be encouraged. The proper time to object to the admissibility of evidence is at the trial when the evidence is tendered and it is then that the Court should rule as to the admissibility or inadmissibility of the evidence. When the objection is taken at the proper time, the party wishing to produce the evidence may be able to take steps to make the evidence admissible. If the objection is not taken until a late stage in the litigation, it may mean that an Appellate Court is obliged to decide against the party on a technical ground or the time of the Court is taken up in re-trying matters which ought to have been disposed of at the original hearing, the result being loss of public time and additional and unnecessary expense to the litigants.

The document in question is an alleged pedigree showing the relationship of a number of persons and amongst others of Hulas (the husband of Musammatt Sanjia) with one Bhusa. The document, according to the finding of the Court below, was an ancient document and genuine. A witness of the name of Jiraj produced the document. It had been filed in mutation proceedings, the record of which case was sent for. Jiraj identified the document and stated that he had received it as a family pedigree from his grandfather. No objection appears to have been taken to the admissibility of this document in evidence in the Court of first instance, although its genuineness was not admitted. In the lower Appellate Court it was objected to, on the ground that it was inadmissible because no evidence was adduced to show who had made it. We think that having regard to the stage at which objection as to the admissibility of the document is made, we should treat it as a document, produced by Jiraj who proved that he received it from his grandfather, as being a document which contained the particulars of the family relationship. We must also assume that the statements made by the witness Jiraj are true, they having been believed by the lower Appellate Court. The question is whether under these circumstances the document is or is not admissible in evidence. Section 32 of the Evidence Act provides that "statements, written or verbal, of relevant facts made by a person who is dead, or who cannot be found, or who has become incapable of giving evidence, or whose attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay or expense which, under the circumstances of the case, appears to the Court unreasonable, are themselves relevant facts in certain cases." Clause 6 is as follows:—"When the statement relates to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption between persons deceased, and is made in any Will or deed relating to the affairs of the family to which any such deceased person belonged, or in any family pedigree, or upon any tomb stone, family portrait, or other thing on which such statements are usually made, and when such statement was made before the question in dispute was raised." We assume for the purposes of our decision that it was impossible to show who in fact had made the statements contained in the pedigree, that the pedigree was made before the question in dispute had arisen and necessarily that it was impossible to call as witness the person who had made the material statements contained in the pedigree. The question is whether on these assumptions the document was admissible. We think that it was. Neither the section nor the clause provide that it is necessary to show who it was that made the statements. In the case of an old pedigree it would be generally quite impossible to give evidence as to who was the author of the statements. We may point out that in the present case we are not called upon to express any opinion as to the genuineness of the document, or the weight to be attached to the evidence. In our opinion the decision of the Court below was correct and ought to be affirmed. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

The Appeal No. 2820 is barred by limitation, but on the merits also the appellants have no case for a further appeal. It was found by the lower Courts that the alienations were effected for valid necessity. They failed in their contention that their father contracted his debts owing to gambling and immorality, and now they desired to adopt the plea of the alienees that some of the debts were con-

Waryam Singh* (1) is, however, of no assistance to them, for this reason that the loans in question had been taken from third parties.

The appeals have been dealt with adequately and it does not appear to me that the plaintiffs have any equities on their side.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the passage at the end of the deed was an interpolation and that under section 20 of the Registration Act, the Sub-Registrar was justified in refusing to register the deed as the parties were not prepared to admit the interlineation. We also think there was a denial of execution by the defendant within the meaning of section 35. We do not think the plaintiff is entitled to have the document registered as the deed of the defendant. As incidental to the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit for the registration, we think that we should at the same time order the registration of the execution of the deed by the plaintiff to be cancelled. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

Easement—Right to flow water—Diversion of route—Obstruction.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Bareilly.

Mr. Girdharilal Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal which arises out of a suit brought by him in an attempt to maintain his right of easement. The map filed with the plaintiff will explain the case. The plaintiff's case was that there was a hole in the wall between his compound and the compound of the defendants, that through this hole the rain water which fell in his compound and also the rain water which came from the roof of the house of one Mohammad Raza Khan and also the daily dirty water used in his house used to flow through the mohri A on to the defendants' land and thence to the public drain which runs in front of defendants' house, that this easement had been in existence for many many years and that shortly before the suit the defendants had blocked up the hole with stones and bricks and thus prevented the flow both of the daily water and the rain water. The defendants denied that they had blocked up this hole in the wall or that they had blocked up any drain. They admitted that the plaintiff had a right to drain off all rain water from his compound through this hole across the defendants' land to the public drain. This right they did not for an instant contest; but they contested the plaintiff's right to send his dirty "domestic" water through that hole on to their land. This they said had never come through the mohri A. According to the written statement of the defendants the drain is still in existence now as it used to be. But it will be remembered that it was the plaintiff's case that drain ran straight from mohri A in a straight line across the compound of the defendants and so on to the public drain. The presiding officer of the Court below apparently inspected the locality. He found that the drain did not run straight across the compound and that where, according to the plaintiff, the old drain used to run across the compound the defendants had built a cowshed and that the drain had now taken a circuitous route instead of a direct route across the compound. The Court below held that there was no doubt whatsoever that the plaintiff had passed not only the rain water from the house but also dirty water after domestic use through this drain and had done so regularly. It refused to accept the evidence of the defendants' witnesses, which was to the opposite effect. But it came to a curious conclusion. It held that because some eight or ten years ago the defendants had built their cowshed and had diverted the course of the drain across their compound, this was an obstruction to the exercise by the plaintiff of his right and that as this occurred more than two years before the suit the plaintiff failed to show that he had exercised his right peaceably and without obstruction up to a date within two years of the suit. As to the rain water the plaintiff's case was decreed; as to the passage of soiled water the plaintiff's claim was dismissed. The plaintiff comes here on second appeal. The point taken is that the mere diversion of the drain across the defendants' land is not an obstruction to the exercise, by the plaintiff, of the right which he claims. The right which the plaintiff claims is clearly right to pass his water, both soiled and rain water, through the mohri A across the defendants' land to the public drain. The fact that the defendants diverted the direction of the old route taken by the water in former days and now pass it by another route does not, in my opinion, constitute an obstruction to the exercise of the plaintiffs' right at all. The plaintiff's right to flow water both dirty and rain water through the mohri A on to the defendants' land was not obstructed by the drain being diverted. It was immaterial to the plaintiff whether the defendants built the drain all round their compound or in a zigzag course so long as his right to pass water through the drain was not interfered with. Because the defendants have slightly altered the course of the drain it is impossible to say that the plaintiff's right has in any way been interfered with. The obstruction of which the plaintiff complained was an obstruction created within a period of six months before suit by the blocking up of the mohri A with bricks and stones. This the defendants totally denied having done. They do not claim a right to do so. The plaintiff claimed an injunction against the defendants ordering them to remove all obstructions from the mohri A and to leave it open and clear, so that both rain water and daily waste water might flow through it without hindrance and forbidding them ever to block it again and that a perpetual injunction might be issued against them restraining them from ever closing the aforesaid mohri and preventing the flow of daily waste water there through. The plaintiff's claim in regard to rain water has been decreed. He is equally entitled to a decree in respect of the daily waste water. I, therefore, order that in addition to the decree already passed in his favour he will have a decree declaring him entitled to pass his daily waste water through the mohri A on to the defendants' land and a perpetual injunction as against the defendants restraining them from blocking up the mohri A or in any way obstructing the plaintiff in passing his rain water as well as daily waste water through that mohri across the defendants' land to the public drain. The plaintiff will have his costs in all Courts.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), ss. 6, 9—Consideration—Bond in favour of mortgagee non-agriculturist by agriculturist in lieu of mortgage-bond—Consideration.

Where A in consideration of the money due to C, executed a registered mortgage-deed of his land in favour of B, which transaction did not contravene the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and B executed a registered bond for the same amount in favour of C:

Held, that the bond by B in favour of C was with consideration although the execution of the mortgage-deed in favour of C by A would have infringed the provisions of the said Act. [p. 610, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Attock Division at Campbellpur, dated the 5th November 1912, reversing that of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 6th July 1912, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Fazl Elahi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit for the recovery of the money due on a bond dated the 22nd of August 1908, has been decreed by the learned Divisional Judge, and the sole point which has been argued before us and which requires determination in this appeal is whether the defendants executed the document without receiving any consideration.

The facts are correctly stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and need not be repeated here at length. We observe that the execution of the bond is admitted by the defendants and it is clear that they received Rs. 595 in cash from the plaintiff and paid that sum to Khan Zaman. It appears that the latter owed Rs. 2,080 to the plaintiff and that in pursuance of an agreement the plaintiff released Khan Zaman from his obligation to pay that debt and accepted in lieu thereof the liability of the defendants for that sum. It was for this reason that on the 22nd August 1908 two deeds were executed, the bond in dispute for Rs. 595 plus Rs. 2,060=Rs. 2,675 by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff, and a registered mortgage-deed by Khan Zaman in favour of the defendants for Rs. 4,571, consisting of Rs. 2,675 mentioned above and Rs. 1,896 which was due to the plaintiff on a previous mortgage of the land effected in his favour by Khan Zaman, which mortgage the defendants agreed to redeem.

It is clear that the mortgage-deed of 22nd August 1908, as it stands, does not contravene the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and that if we accept the contention of the appellants that the transaction should be treated as an alienation in favour of the plaintiff, it would certainly infringe the terms of that enactment. The mortgage-deed is a registered document and the onus lies heavily on the defendants to establish the benami nature of the transaction. The learned Divisional Judge has, after a consideration of all the facts and circumstances, recorded his finding against the contention of the appellants and nothing has been urged before us which would justify us dissenting from that finding.

It is not disputed that if the mortgage is treated as an alienation in favour of the defendants, the bond in suit was with consideration. We think the defendants are liable under the bond which they admittedly executed in favour of the plaintiff and for which they received consideration. We accordingly uphold the judgment and decree of the learned Divisional Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Succession certificate not produced in Court of first instance—Certificate necessary—Admission of certificate by Appellate Court—Conditions.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 21st of September 1910, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, second Court of that district, dated the 9th August 1909.

Dr. D. N. Mitra and Babu Rishendra Nath Sircar, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—In this case the only question that arises is, whether or not a succession certificate was necessary and whether the appellants who failed to produce such certificate in the Court of first instance should have been permitted to do so by the lower Appellate Court before whom the certificate was produced.

I think that the Court should have admitted the certificate, making such order as to costs as was proper by reason of the non-production of the certificate in the Court of first instance.

We, however, now set aside the decree of the District Judge and remit the appeal to him for a re-hearing. The succession certificate is filed here and will go back with the other records to him.

As the appellants are responsible for not producing the certificate, we will make no order as to costs in the present appeal and do not disturb the order as to costs made by the lower Appellate Court.

Appeals, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Tyabji reported in 21 Ind. Cas. 930, presented against the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, in Original Suits Nos. 32, 40 and 26 of 1911.

FACTS.—See the judgment appealed against reported in 21 Ind. Cas. 920.

The plaintiff, a temple servant, instituted a suit against His Highness the Rajah of Cochin urging that as the trustee of the temple, His Highness wrongfully dismissed him. The Subordinate Judge of Calicut dismissed the suit on the ground that no suit was maintainable against a Ruling Chief without the sanction of the Governor-General in Council. In this case the Governor-General in Council after communicating with His Highness had declined to grant the sanction.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court and His Lordship, Mr. Justice Tyabji, upheld the view of the Subordinate Judge. (See 21 Ind. Cas. 930.) Against that judgment a Letters Patent Appeal was filed by the plaintiff.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar (with him Mr. N. A. Krishna Aiyar), for the Appellants, contended (1) that the suit substantially was against the trust and it was only incidentally as against the Rajah who was the trustee. In such cases no permission was required. (2) That His Highness had put in a written statement in which, although he objected to the suit being maintained against him, he pleaded on the merits and consequently there was a waiver of the privilege.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, on behalf of His Highness, the Respondent, supported the judgment of the lower Court and submitted that the privilege was an absolute one and as a fact there was no waiver.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question in these appeals is whether His Highness the Rajah of Cochin was legitimately impleaded as a defendant in the connected suits in the absence of consent by the Local Government under section 86, Code of Civil Procedure.

It is urged, firstly, that the absence of such consent is immaterial, because His Highness had waived his privilege by proceeding, after pleading it, to plead also on the merits. I do not consider whether the course of his pleading did in fact amount to a waiver, because, in my opinion, the recognition of cases of waiver, as excepted from the ordinary provisions of international law as understood in England, cannot be imported into the clear language of the Indian Code. The contrary view was, no doubt, taken in Chandulal Khushalji v.

KAULESHAR PRASAD MISRA v. ABADI BIBI.

Awad bin Umar Sultan Nawaz Jung Bahadur (1). But with all respect I find the reasoning therein inconclusive and doubt whether the reference to the supposed intention of the Legislature is permissible or, if permissible, whether it is sufficiently comprehensive.

Secondly, it is argued that the suits are really against the deity of the suit temple, represented by the Rajah, and that, as they are not against the Rajah himself, the section is inapplicable. Reference to the plaints shows that the suits are for relief against the Rajah and others, on the ground that the first mentioned has usurped the position of trustee and has used the power thus obtained to plaintiffs' prejudice. The suits are, therefore, not against the deity, as represented by the Rajah.

In these circumstances the appeals fails and must be dismissed with cost.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree with the judgment just now pronounced by my learned brother. Mr. Ramachandrier relied on certain obiter dicta found in the judgments of the learned Chief Justice and of Justice Seshagiri Aiyar in the case of Veeraraghava Iyer v. Muga Sait (2) for the proposition that it is not enough merely to object to the jurisdiction to show that there was no voluntary submission by the defendant to the jurisdiction of the Court. The case of Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (3) distinctly held otherwise. The learned Chief Justice guardedly says that, because there are two English cases, Boissiere & Co. v. Brockner & Co. (4) and Guiard v. DeClermont and Donner (5), which hold that such mere objection is insufficient, Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (3) "is probably no longer law." Seshagiri Aiyar, J., first says that he would hesitate to follow Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (3) owing to the decision of Cave, J., in the former case; the learned Judge then says that "the conditions of existence in this country may not justify the application of the principle enunciated by Cave, J.," and finally says that it was "unnecessary to decide" in that particular case "which of the two" conflicting decisions [Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (3) or Boissiere & Co. v. Brockner & Co. (4)] "should be followed." I am prepared to follow Parry & Co. v. Appasami Pillai (3) as it has not been overruled and as the reasoning therein seems to me sound and I am not prepared to follow the English cases contra.

I agree that the appeals should be dismissed with costs.

CHANDA SINGH v. HARBANS SINGH.

are the defendants of the fourth party. They made a deed in her (plaintiff's) favour on the 4th of July 1913. The defendants' title on the other hand is as follows:—Ali Ahmad, they allege, executed a sale-deed in the year 1889, in favour of one Musammāt Idan. Musammāt Idan died in 1912, leaving as her heir the defendant of the third party, Ramzan, and Ramzan by a sale-deed, dated the 30th June 1913, sold the property to the appellant, Pāndit Kauleshar Prasad Misra. Both the Courts below have decreed the plaintiff's claim. Both Courts have found that the sale-deed of 1889 was a fictitious sale-deed under which no possession passed or was intended to pass that Musammāt Idan was the mistress of Ali Ahmad, that Ali Ahmad continued to be the owner and in possession of the property notwithstanding the sale-deed. This it seems to us is a finding of fact which we in second appeal are bound to accept.

The appellant, however, contends that there is a flaw in the plaintiff's title. In the sale-deed of the 4th of July 1913, there is a stipulation that the price should be paid within one year provided that possession is obtained within that time, that if possession was not obtained, then the payment of the price should be postponed, and further that in the event of the vendee not getting the property, the price should not be paid at all. It is contended that the consideration for this contract is opposed to public policy, being a gambling transaction. It is further contended that there being a condition attached to the payment of the consideration, the transaction is not a sale within the definition of that expression contained in section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. In our opinion there is nothing contrary to public policy in providing that the payment of the consideration should be postponed in certain events and that it should not be paid at all in the event of the property being lost. It certainly was not a gambling transaction. Section 54 defines a "sale" as "a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised, or part paid and part promised." In our judgment the stipulations in the present deed did not prevent the transaction amounting to a "sale" within the definition.

It is next contended that Ramzan, the appellant's vendor, was the ostensible owner of the property in suit with the consent, express or implied, of the real owners, and that the appellant took all reasonable care to ascertain that Ramzan had power to make the transfer in his favour. The Courts below have found that Ramzan was not the ostensible owner with the consent, express or implied, of the real owners, and they have further found that under the circumstances of the present case the appellant did not take reasonable care to ascertain the title of his vendor. In our opinion these are questions of fact upon which we must accept in second appeal the findings of the Courts below.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

JOHNSTONE, J.—In brief, the history of the case is as follows:—

One Harbans Singh, minor, sued for pre-emption of the land in suit sold by Musammât Fateh Bano to Sham Sunder and others. On 23rd December 1901 he secured a decree conditional on payment of Rs. 8,968-8-0 within two months. Chanda Singh, Pleader, present plaintiff, had been retained for the minor in the case by the next friend, Bhagat Singh, and it was he who paid in the pre-emption money on 20th January 1902 on behalf of the minor. He also, again expressly on behalf of the minor, on 16th March 1902, having executed the decree and got possession, put in the usual dakhnama.

Meantime, on 23rd January 1902, Chanda Singh appealed in the name of the minor to the Divisional Court for reduction of the purchase-money, but this was returned in May 1902 for presentation in the Chief Court, and that appeal, together with a cross-appeal by vendee, is now pending in this Court. On 7th June 1902, Bhagat Singh aforesaid applied to the Revenue Authorities asking that the land should be mutated in favour of Chanda Singh on the ground that it had been by oral contract transferred to the latter, but Musammât Ishar Kaur, mother of the minor, objected, and the application was disallowed. Then Chanda Singh himself on 19th May 1902 applied to this Court for an order that his name should be substituted for the minor's in the pre-emption appeals aforesaid on the ground of an oral purchase of the land by him from the minor, and on 10th July 1902, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Rattigan granted the application, supported as it was by the affidavits of Chanda Singh and Bhagat Singh, "subject to all just exceptions at the hearing" and on 6th August 1902, Chanda Singh filed his present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ferozepur, for possession of the land on the score of the aforesaid alleged purchase, or in the alternative for recovery of the money paid in by him plus other smaller sums which need not be specified here. He prayed that if only money was awarded to him, it should be made a charge on the land. Thereafter on the 18th September 1902, three petitions were filed in this Court, the first to the effect that inasmuch as the pre-emption money was paid by Chanda Singh on behalf of the minor the latter's name should remain on the record of the appeals aforesaid as plaintiff, the second for removal of Bhagat Singh from the position of next friend under section 446, Civil Procedure Code; and the third for cancellation of Chanda Singh's power-of-attorney and for an inquiry into his alleged professional misconduct. On 5th February 1903, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Reid sent these petitions down to the Divisional Judge for report, and a lengthy report was made on the 5th May 1903, and finally the three petitions were disposed of by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Reid, by orders directing:—

1. That the minor's name do remain in the record of the pre-emption case.

2. That the name of Musammât Ishar Kaur be substituted for that of Chanda Singh (Bhagat Singh?) as minor's guardian ad litem (next friend?).

3. That Chanda Singh's power-of-attorney (with his consent) be cancelled, and that the matter of Chanda Singh's conduct do lie over, with leave to either party to mention it at or after the hearing of the pre-emption appeals.

Meantime the present suit was proceeding and it was ended on 27th May 1904, on which day the Subordinate Judge in an elaborate judgment ruled:—

- (a) that the land was not duly sold to plaintiff by an authorised person on behalf of the minor;
- (b) that the money paid into Court by plaintiff is his own money and not money received by him from the minor's lately deceased father, Sardar Partab Singh,

CHANDA SINGH v. HARBANS SINGH.

- (c) that by law plaintiff is not entitled to receive back from the minor the sum deposited in Court;
- (d) that plaintiff is entitled to no fee for conducting the pre-emption suit, he claims Rs. 372;
- (e) that plaintiff has not proved that he really advanced to Partab Singh and Bhagat Singh sums of money amounting to Rs. 316-1-3 in connection with the pre-emption suit;
- (f) that the other small items claimed be all disallowed.

Plaintiff appeals to this Court for his whole claim; but his learned Counsel stated plainly before us that he did not press for the land. This is intelligible, as pre-emption appeals are still pending, and perhaps the pre-emption decree will be set aside or will be so modified as to make the bargain a bad one. However, we have to consider whether there was a legal sale of the land to the plaintiff or not. After considering the evidence carefully I think no legal sale is proved. The property is a valuable one, plaintiff himself puts it down at Rs. 15,000, and yet no deed of sale was written or even suggested. The only person who could sell lawfully was Musammam Ishar Kaur and the sale by Bhagat Singh would be wholly a nullity. He may have been next friend of the minor in the suit; but he was not the guardian, either de jure or de facto, of the minor's property. On the 19th July 1902, before the Assistant Collector, first grade, in the mutation dispute, Chanda Singh said: "The contract of sale was verbally made with Bhagat Singh. Musammam Ishar Kaur did not make any contract of sale, nor could she enter into any by law. On 2nd January, Bhagat Singh told me that I should deposit the money and consider the land sold to me." In his plaint Chanda Singh alleges that in accordance with the wish and consent of Musammam Ishar Kaur and other relatives, Bhagat Singh asked him to pay the purchase-money and take the land in lieu thereof. He also says that he with the same permission took possession as proprietor, an assertion which is quite contrary to the real facts.

Musammam Ishar Kaur herself said on 2nd November 1902, when examined by the local Commissioner, that her late husband had paid some Rs. 9,000 to Chanda Singh previously, and that it was this money the latter paid into Court. Of this there is no proof whatever, and I must hold that the money was Chanda Singh's own. But the lady goes on to say that she never agreed that Chanda Singh should become proprietor, and she has always consistently said this. The letters relied upon as showing that she agreed to the sale to Chanda Singh are not conclusive. They are not written by her and none of them is even signed by her, though she can write her name and can read Gurmukhi. I would hold, in short, that she did not sell to Chanda Singh and never consented to such a sale.

As regards the claim for money, I am unable to see under what law or on what principle of equity the money claimed should be made a charge on the land. It is either money lent or money had and received, and all that plaintiff can ask for is a simple money-decree at the most.

Then as regards the item of Rs. 372, I agree entirely with the lower Court that plaintiff cannot claim it. He says expressly that he was working for the minor's father gratuitously, and thus no fee is allowable during that person's life-time. Thereafter, it is not stated or proved that any contract was made by Chanda Singh with Bhagat Singh or Musammam Ishar Kaur for fees, and so the inference is that gratuitous services continued.

As to the item of Rs. 316-1-3, I agree with the lower Court that the no-production of Chanda Singh of his alleged written agreement with Partab Singh is most suspicious, and that the item is not established. I am strongly of opinion that that agreement was never returned to Musammam Ishar Kaur and the suspicion I entertain about Chanda Singh's bona fides is much deepened by a circumstance that occurred in the course of the proceeding in the lower Court.

When Lala Kaushi Ram, Pleader for the plaintiff, was in the witness box, he was asked about a copy of the agreement which he said he saw with plaintiff after he became plaintiffs' Pleader, but, relying on his privilege as a legal adviser, he refused to answer the question put, which was: "Whether witness stated," to so and so, "that the plaintiff was going to base his suit on the agreement in question, and that he (witness) dissuaded him" from doing so by telling him that it would be dismissed at once and that he would be found guilty of professional misconduct. If Chanda

CHANDA SINGH v. HARBANS SINGH.

Singh were a man of any sort of honesty, I think he would have given his Pleader leave to answer the question.

I cannot find any proof of the other small items either; and the only questions remaining are whether plaintiff should have a decree for the Rs. 8,330-11-9 item, and if so, on what terms and conditions. In connection with this certain sections of the Contract Act have been referred to and several rulings. Section 64 to my mind is wholly inapplicable because, even if the contract by Bhagat Singh were a contract voidable by the minor, which it is not, how could it be said that the minor has rescinded it, when he has not yet reached an age at which he can rescind anything? Section 68 quoted by Mr. Pestonji has obviously no bearing on the case. Section 70 cannot apply, because Chanda Singh, on his own showing and allegations, did not pay for the minor but for himself, holding himself as having become pre-emptor and purchaser of the minor's decree. Section 65 is rather more in point in my opinion. Its first clause seems to me probably to cover the present case; for we may safely say that Chanda Singh, however mistakenly, thought he was really buying the land or the rights of the minor under the decree. That agreement with Bhagat Singh and others, which he made, has now been "discovered to be void" and the minor has undoubtedly received some "advantage" and he must restore that "advantage." Apart from this, on general principles of equity, the minor cannot be allowed simply to keep all this money and the land too.

Mr. Grey has argued that, being a plaintiff Chanda Singh cannot claim on the score of equity, because it is only who seeks equity that must do equity, not a person like the minor who seeks nothing. I do not assent to this application of the principle: but I need not discuss the matter at length, as, in my opinion, section 65, Contract Act, is sufficient authority.

Lastly, but what must the minor restore? The section does not say that plaintiff is entitled to a decree for the immediate re-payment of any sum of money paid by plaintiff to or for defendant. It says plaintiff must restore the "advantage" received. In ordinary cases the test of the proper relief would be that it should restore the parties to the condition of affairs before the contract was made. [See illustration (a) to section 65.] But here this is impossible for the minor has, by the action of the plaintiff, been landed in the litigation in the Chief Court, the result of which no one can foresee. It is not fair to say that it is open to the minor's guardian to decline to claim the payment into Court as being made on behalf of the minor and so to let the land go; for the minor had a distinct right to pre-emption; and his guardian is right (or may be right) in insisting upon the minor's keeping his decree. Nor is it fair to say that the minor should now be made to pay Rs. 8,000 odd back on demand, for he would have to borrow that money, or sell his other property to raise it; and this too would not be a return to the condition of affairs before the agreement with Bhagat Singh. I would pass a decree in favour of Chanda Singh in the following terms:—

(I) This decree not to be capable of execution until after the decision of the pre-emption appeals.

(II). The decree to be a simple money-decree for Rs. 8,330-11-9, the claim for the land being dismissed.

(III). If the result of the pre-emption appeals is that the minor's right of pre-emption is denied and so his suit is dismissed, the money deposited by Chanda Singh in the pre-emption case to be re-paid to him and not to the minor.

(IV). Ditto, if the pre-emption money is increased in appeal and the minor fails to pay the added sum and so his suit is dismissed.

(V). If the pre-emption money is reduced in appeal, Chanda Singh, and not the minor, is to draw so much of the money already in Court as is not required for payment to the vendee. As regards the sum still due thereafter to the plaintiff from the defendant under this decree, three months' grace to be allowed to the minor to raise the same. After that, decree be executed by plaintiff in the ordinary way.

(VI). If the pre-emption money remains the same, three months' grace be allowed to the minor to raise the sum of Rs. 8,330-11-9 now decreed. After that the decree to be capable of execution in the ordinary way.

KRISHNASWAMI AIYAR v. RANGASWAMI NAYADU.

I would make plaintiff pay defendants' costs.

For myself I would rather have had the pre-emption appeals decided before the present case; but it was at plaintiff's own request, I understand, that it was directed that this case should come first.

I would not at this stage take any action regarding what seems to be Chanda Singh's unsatisfactory and regrettable conduct, but leave that matter to be dealt with by the Bench that disposes of the pre-emption appeals.

LAL CHAND, J.—I agree with my learned colleague that the plaintiff is not entitled to get possession of the land in suit as vendee and that he is entitled to get a money-decree for the sum and on terms as proposed by my learned colleague.

Appeal partly accepted.

APPELLANTS

versus

Sodhi HARBANS SINGH—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Pre-emption—Claim based on foreclosure of mortgage with conditional sale—Presumption that pre-emptor is suing for his own benefit—Plea of equal right of pre-emption, if allowed for first time in appeal—Owning land under building, if give status of land-owner—Vendee to prove improvements and produce accounts—Vendee, right of, to get price paid in good faith—Compensation for litigation and improvements, when allowed—Compound interest—Costs—Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), ss. 12, 16—Use of title by Pleader.

Unless the contrary is clearly established, it is to be presumed that a plaintiff sues for his own benefit. [p. 519, col. 1.]

A plea of the vendee that he has got an equal right of pre-emption with the pre-emptor cannot be raised for the first time in appeal specially where the materials on the record are insufficient to support it. [p. 519, col. 1.]

A person owning a plot of land under building is not a land-owner within the meaning of and for the purposes of section 12 of Act II of 1905, even if it is assessed with some land revenue. [p. 519, col. 2.]

Phallu v. Mukarrab, 153 P. R. 1888 and Man Singh v. Dip Singh, 96 P. R. 1898, followed.

Kirpa Ram v. Ude Ram, 77 P. R. 1896, not followed.

It is the duty of the vendee or mortgagee to establish his claim for improvements by the most satisfactory evidence and production of accounts if any. [p. 520, col. 1.]

Section 16 of Act II of 1905 does not expressly allow a Court to award to vendees more than the market value or what they paid in good faith for the bargain, but the section is not exhaustive and equities are not excluded. A party who asks for equity must show that he has acted throughout fairly and honestly. So a vendee is not generally entitled to get compensation for litigation connected with the pre-empted property, but under special circumstances, he may be allowed to get it. [p. 520, col. 1.]

Compound interest is not interest on interest it is interest on a sum or sums which were interest, but which on default, etc., at once became principal. [p. 520, col. 2.]

When the vendee opposes the pre-emptor's claim on several grounds including inadequacy of the price, the latter is entitled to get his costs although the former succeeds in getting much more than what was offered by the pre-emptor. [p. 521, col. 1.]

A Pleader cannot arrogate to himself, if any, title which he is not authorized to use by any competent authority. [p. 521, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepur, dated the 23rd December 1901, decreeing pre-emption on payment of Rs. 8,330-11-9.

Mr. Shadi Lal, R. B., for the Appellants.

Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and No. 390 of 1902 are cross-appeals and can be conveniently disposed of together. The facts have been set forth and also the pleadings at length by the learned District Judge in his judgment dated 23rd December 1901, and I need not repeat them here.

As the case has been argued before us the points for decision are these:—

(1). Did the pre-emptor, Partab Singh (original plaintiff), sue not for his own benefit, but for the benefit of the Pleader Chanda Singh? If for his own benefit, then is there any reason why in view of what has happened after his death the suit should not be entertained?

(2). Have the vendees an equal right of pre-emption with plaintiff?

(3). Is there any reason for increasing the sum of money to be paid by plaintiff?

(4). Is there any reason for reducing that sum?

After hearing arguments and giving the whole case my best attention, I have arrived at the conclusion that the decision of the learned District Judge should be upheld in every particular except that compound interest should be allowed.

As to the first question, the theory of the appellants-vendees is that Chanda Singh and Partab Singh were intimate friends; that the former had a right of pre-emption, while the latter had not; that the latter, who is an experienced Pleader and apparently a man of some means, put up the former, who was poor, to sue, intending to take over the bargain from him after a successful issue of the suit. There are some indications of the extreme personal interest which Chanda Singh took in the case after the death of Partab Singh, as the history of the matter thereafter shows. Chanda Singh was Partab Singh's Counsel in the case. When Partab Singh died, Chanda Singh was instrumental in getting one Bhagat Singh, uncle of the minor plaintiff, who is a son and heir of Partab Singh, made next friend of the minor for the suit; and Chanda Singh from that time at least seems to have provided the sinews of war for the struggle with the vendees. When the decree was obtained, it was Chanda Singh who paid in the decretal money into Court, and who took possession of the land under a dakhnama in which he called himself Pleader for the decree-holder. He then applied for mutation of the land in his own name, on the ground that Bhagat Singh had sold the land to him by an oral sale. This was in the end refused, the minor's mother objecting. He then sued for possession on the basis of his alleged oral purchase and (in the alternative) for recovery of the money he had paid in (which was still in Court) together with further sums which he claimed as due to him, making the minor sole defendant. That case was fought out up to the Chief Court, where it was heard by a Division Bench consisting of Johnstone and Lal Chand, JJ., the result being that it was finally held that there was no valid sale of the land by the minor to Chanda Singh, who was only entitled to the refund of the sum he had actually deposited in Court on behalf of the minor. As to the time and manner of this refund, these were made dependent on the decision of the appeals now under consideration. Chanda Singh had already applied to be made appellant and respondent respectively in these appeals in place of the minor; but this has not been done. Lastly, in his statement in the mutation case before Lala Amir

SHAM SUNDAR v. HARBANS SINGH.

Chand, Revenue Officer, Chanda Singh said things which show his personal interest at that time, July 1902. In my opinion all of this goes no further than to show that after Partab Singh's death Chanda Singh saw his opportunity. It does not show that Partab Singh was not suing for his own benefit. There is no proof that Partab Singh would have been unable to pay for the bargain he was suing for. I would hold, then, that Partab Singh sued for his own benefit, or at least that the contrary is not established; and I can see no reason in these circumstances why present plaintiff's suit should be dismissed, because a crafty Pleader has attempted to make profit out of his position—an attempt, I may note, which has completely failed by the resolution and courage of the plaintiff's mother.

Turning to the second question, I observe that one looks in vain at the vendees' pleas, put in before the framing of issues, for any assertion or contention that their right to purchase was equal to that of the plaintiff. They did plead limitation and were successful on the point in the first Court, but the Appellate Court took the opposite view and remanded the case for re-trial on the merits. It is suggested that the last sentence in paragraph 2 of the original pleas involves a denial of the plaintiff's superior right, but the whole of that paragraph must be read together. If this is done, it becomes at once apparent that the closing sentence—"No right of pre-emption accrues to the plaintiff"—refers to the plea of limitation, and not to any theory of the possession by the vendees of pre-emptive power. It was only after the remand for re-trial that the vendees pleaded that they had an equal right with plaintiff by reason of their ownership of a minute plot of six marls of land in the mauza in which the land in suit is situated. This circumstance, coupled with the fact that the mortgagees-vendees issued a notice in March 1892 to pre-emptors, which they would hardly have done if they also had a right of pre-emption under section 12 of the Laws Act, shows that the view of the Court below is justified that the plea was an afterthought.

But, even if the plea be taken seriously, it seems to me clear that it must fail. The six marlas aforesaid is to all intents and purposes abadi land. It was apparently "cultur-able" in 1886-87, but soon after it was built over and sold to the vendees. At that time it does not appear to have been assessed to land revenue, and it is not till after the remand for re-trial aforesaid that we find a too minute assessment of nine pies shown against it in the papers. It appears to have been a plot really of no use except for building on. Mr. Shadi Lal for the vendees insists that it is "land" within the meaning of the word in the Laws Act. (He also suggests that it might be taken that the plot and also the land in suit are really part of the city of Ferozepur, in which case section 12 of the Act would not apply and plaintiff's suit would at once fail. This suggestion, I think, we should absolutely decline to consider. We have no materials to decide it upon, and it is an entirely new suggestion, not altogether consistent with vendees' reliance upon section 12 and their ownership of six marlas). In support of the applicability of section 12 to the vendees' case Mr. Shadi Lal refers us to Kirpa Ram v. Ude Ram (1) and Mr. Shiv Narain relies upon Phallu v. Mukarrab (2) and Man Singh v. Dip Singh (3), in which the case of 1896 is discussed. In my opinion it is possible to be too pedantic in these cases. I do not think it can have been the intention of the law to allow a party, simply because he owns a minute plot of land, described at the time in the papers as unassessed and as ghair mumkin abadi and covered with buildings, to pose for pre-emption purposes as a land-owner in the village. I prefer to take the rulings of 1888* and 1898† as my guide and to hold that the plaintiff's right of pre-emption is distinctly the superior one.

Questions (3) and (4) naturally go together, the latter being the net outcome of the cross-appeal by the plaintiff. As stated before us the vendees claim the following sums:—

(1). Improvements—
Two Wells	...	...	1,000
One Drain	...	...	50
Three jhailars	...	...	150
Two kothas	...	...	200
Total			1,400

(2). Reclamation of land, Rs. 200.

(1) 77 P. R. 1896.

* (2) 153 P. R. 1888.

† (3) 96 P. R. 1898.

SHAM SUNDAR v. HARBANS SINGH.

(3). Litigation expenses in past cases,
Rs. 2,850;

and a large sum on account of interest which I will discuss later.

As regards (1) and (2), I have carefully noted all the evidence on the record on which the vendees rely and I find it vague and unsatisfactory. The Court below has allowed Rs. 700 as to (1) which I think fair and equitable. No doubt wells, etc., were made, but the amount claimed is extravagant and it is supported by no documentary evidence, not even by vendees' books. No doubt before the remand vendees were ready to produce their books; but on retrial it was certainly their duty to prove their case; and whether they were served with a notice to produce the books or not, it can hardly be said that they have proved the expenditure of Rs. 1,600 when they have not put in their accounts. This is sufficient reason also for disallowing (2).

As to (3) we have nothing but the vaguest details of figures, and the vendees' Counsel admits he cannot give us chapter and verse. He details five suits and states what was spent in each; but there is no proof whatever of actual figures. It is also rather doubtful whether under the law a pre-emptor is bound to pay such items to the vendees. I do not think I need discuss this point in an elaborate way, but a few remarks will not be out of place.

Section 16 of the Act does not expressly allow a Court to award to vendees more than the market value or what they paid in good faith for the bargain; or to mortgagees, who have foreclosed, more than the total sum due on the footing of the mortgage or the market value. But the section has more than once been held not to be exhaustive, and it only lays down what is to be allowed as price to be paid. I do not think it was intended to exclude equities; but on the other hand, a party who asks for equity must show that he has consistently done equity and has acted throughout fairly and honestly. Here plaintiff sued for pre-emption and the vendees met him with an unwarrantable plea of time bar, causing immense delay in the disposal of the case and great annoyance and loss to the plaintiff. Then, not having in the first trial pleaded a right of pre-emption equal to that of plaintiff, after remand they put forward that plea, which has been found artificial and made-up. A good deal of the litigation for the expenses of which they demand compensation would never have been launched against them, had they met plaintiff's claim in the proper spirit and fought him at most on the question of how much he should be made to pay them. Whatever, then, may be the general principle applicable to such a claim as this of the vendees, it seems to me fairly clear that they are entitled to nothing under the head now being considered.

As regards interest the Court below has allowed to the vendees Rs. 4,268-8-0 on the principal sum, which is Rs. 4,000—Rs. 680 of the interest having been paid. The calculation has been made at simple interest at 15 per cent. per annum upto 26th November 1892, on which date defendant-vendees got actual possession, but the vendees before us claim compound interest, with yearly rests upto 6th February 1894, when the four months' grace given under the compromise expired. I confess I am unable to see why the calculation should be carried up to February 1894. No doubt it is not stated in the deed that when mortgagee gets possession interest shall cease; but this is usually understood, and in any case equity would require that from the interest between 21st November 1892 and 6th February 1894, the profits of the land should be deducted.

As to simple versus compound interest, it is contended for plaintiff that section 16 of the Act only contemplates simple interest; but this is a narrow view. Interest on the principal sum may be, in my opinion, simple or compound. Compound interest is not interest on interest, it is interest on a sum or sums which were interest but which, on default or liquidation, immediately become principal. I would thus allow compound interest.

Looking at the cross-appeal I find that all the grounds in it have been waived by the learned Pleader for the plaintiff, except that relating to the land taken up by the Government out of the land in suit. It is said that Government paid to the vendees Rs. 222 on this account, and that this should be deducted from the amount to be paid by plaintiff. There is nothing on the record about this, as the acquisition by Government occurred after the decree in this case was passed. The item is disputed and I do not think we should go into it at all.

It is urged that the Court below should not have given plaintiff costs against the vendees, inasmuch as plaintiff in the first instance offered the inadequate sum of Rs. 4,934 as due to vendees under the deed of mortgage of 13th November 1889, date of expiry of year of grace under the Regulation, the suit having been filed on 18th March 1896. But this does not take account of the facts already noted that vendees resisted the claim on other grounds besides the inadequacy of the offer. I would leave the order of the lower Court in re costs undisturbed.

My calculation of principal and interest from 12th October 1885 to 21st November 1892, at 15 per cent. per annum with compound interest upon yearly rests, allowing for the three payments shown at foot of page 173, brings out a total of Rs. 9,478. To this add Rs. 700 as allowed in addition by the Court below for improvements, and we have the total sum to be paid as Rs. 10,178.

In the Court below Rs. 8,330-11-9 was the net sum to be deposited (and actually deposited) by plaintiff after deduction of his costs, which amounted to Rs. 637-12-3. Plaintiff must have those costs and also his costs upon the present appeal in this Court, inasmuch as he has virtually won the day here. The costs here amount to Rs. 100 and if this and the sum of Rs. 637-12-3 aforesaid be deducted from the sum of Rs. 10,178 aforesaid, the net sum demandable of him is Rs. 9,440-3-9. He must make up this amount within two months or the suit will stand dismissed with costs. I would accept the appeal and modify the decree of the first Court in this sense.

As regards Chanda Singh, Pleader's conduct, I think we should send this file to the learned Chief Judge for orders as to the procedure to be adopted. It seems to me fairly clear that the Pleader has acted improperly. I need only refer to the following parts of the record:—

(1). The discussion of question (1) at the beginning of this judgment.

(2) The marginal references in that part of the judgment.

(3), The petitions connected with the order of Reid, J., referred to in one of those marginal notes.

I would recommend as a first step that Chanda Singh (who, I may say in passing, is probably not entitled to use the title of Sardar which he arrogates to himself) be asked to explain his conduct in writing.

Appeal partly accepted.

RAM NATH TEWARI—DECREE-HOLDER—

versus

CHATTERPALMAN TEWARI—

JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 6, applicability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Limitation—Minority—Execution.

As section 6 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases dealt with by the Statute itself it does not exempt a minor from the provisions of section 48, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 522, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Chamier, reported in 27 Ind. Cas. 865.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (with him Mr. Iswar Saran), for the Appellant.

Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an execution appeal. It appears that a decree was obtained by minors on the 22nd of May 1901. There were several applications for execution leading up to one on the 6th of February 1912, which was dismissed on the 3rd of December 1912. The present application for execution was made on May the 27th, 1913. It thus appears that the last application for execution was more than twelve years from the date of the decree. The judgment-debtors resisted execution relying on section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section provides that "where an application to execute a decree, not being a decree granting an injunction, has been made, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years" from the various dates specified in the section. It is admitted that had the decree-holders been persons of full age, the present application would be clearly barred. It is, however, contended that being minors they are still entitled to execute the decree. The first Court allowed the objection of the judgment-debtors. The lower Appellate Court reversed the Court of first instance. The learned Judge of this Court reversed the lower Appellate Court and restored the order of the Court of first instance.

Section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908, provides as follows: "Where a person entitled to institute a suit or make an application for the execution of a decree is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor or insane, or an idiot, he may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the first Schedule." It is admitted that the provision of this section does not help the present decree-holders. It might have given them a right to execute their decree notwithstanding the expiration of the three years' limit laid down in Article 182 of the Schedule I, but it does not give them any exemption from the provisions of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the case of Moro Sadashiv v. Visaji Raghu Nath (1), Sergeant, C J., held in a case similar to the present that section 7 of the former Limitation Act (which corresponds to section 6 of the present Limitation Act) only applied to cases dealt with by the Statute itself.

He, however, goes on to say:—"The question referred to us must be decided by the general principles of law as to the disability of minors, to which the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code must, in the absence of anything to the contrary, be deemed to be subject. The general principle is that time does not run against a minor; and the circumstance that he has been represented by a guardian, does not affect the question." If we were to accept this statement of the law it would mean that a minor party to a suit through his guardian, whether as plaintiff or as defendant, is not bound to take any of the steps provided by the Code of Civil Procedure within the periods therein limited. For example it would be open to a minor judgment-debtor to re-open by way of appeal a question which had been finally decided years before. Just in the same way if a suit had been decided against a minor he might delay presenting his appeal for many years. The learned Judge of this Court has referred to the judgment of Sir Meredith Plowden in Jhandu v. Mohan Lal (2), and also to the decision of Rebala Ramana Reddi v. Rebala Babu Reddi (3). In our opinion the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court was correct and ought to be affirmed. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Suit for execution of lease and recovery of rent decided by Munsif on Regular Side—Munsif incompetent to entertain suit for arrears alone—Munsif's decision relating to rent, whether operates as res judicata.

In a suit for the execution of a deed of lease and for arrears of rent a Munsif raised and decided on the Regular Side an issue relating to rent. Had the suit been solely for recovery of the rent it would have been beyond the jurisdiction of the Munsif. In a subsequent suit for arrears of rent filed in the Small Cause Court:

Held, that the decision of the Munsif operated as res judicata, although he was not competent to entertain a suit brought to recover rent alone. [p. 523; col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1857, praying the High Court to revise the decree and judgment of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga, in Small Cause Suit No. 734 of 1912, dated 15th August 1913.

KALYAN SINGH v. JAGAN PRASAD.

Mr. A. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. N. Aiyar Aiyar and K. Raja Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff agreed to grant a lease of a house site to the 1st defendant in July 1906. The latter sub-let portions of the site to the 2nd and 3rd defendants and directed them to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1-12-0 and 1-8-0 a month respectively. Owing to the failure of the 1st defendant to carry out the terms of the agreement, the plaintiff instituted Original Suit No. 92 of 1911 on the file of the Manamadura District Munsif for the execution of the lease-deed and for arrears of rent. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were impleaded as parties as they were in possession. One of the issues raised in that suit was, "which defendant is liable for what portion of the rent?" The Munsif decreed that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in this suit, who were defendants Nos. 4 and 5 in the former suit, were liable to pay Rs. 1-12 and Rs. 1-8-0 respectively and passed a decree to that effect.

The present suit is solely for arrears of rent and has, therefore, been filed in the Small Cause Side of the Subordinate Court of Sivaganga. The Subordinate Judge held that the previous decision was not res judicata and passed a decree jointly and severally against all the defendants for the arrears.

The 2nd defendant has filed this revision petition against that judgment. I am unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge on the question of res judicata. Mr. Raju Aiyar contends that as under section 16 of the Mofussil Small Cause Courts Act, Small Cause Courts alone are competent to entertain suits for arrears of rent, the previous decision by the District Munsif of Manamadura on the Regular Side is not res judicata. The District Munsif was competent to adjudicate on the claim for arrears, although he was not competent to entertain a suit brought to recover arrears alone.

The competency of the Munsif to decide an issue relating to arrears is not affected by the fact that a suit instituted solely for that purpose is beyond his jurisdiction. The decision in the case of Raja Simhadri Appa Rao v. Ramachandrudu (1) is directly in point. I do not think the observation of the learned Judges in the case of Avanasi Gounden v. Nachammial (2) affects this question. The observations relating to the test of appealability, which was doubted in the latter judgment, do not question the ratio decidendi of the decision in Raja Simhadri Appa Rao v. Ramachandrudu (1).

In the view I have taken of the effect of the former decision, the question in this case was directly in issue in the former case and is, therefore, res judicata.

In modification of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, I direct that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 do pay to the plaintiff Rs. 1-12-0 and Rs. 1-8-0 a month respectively regarding the arrears claimed and that the 1st defendant be held liable for any balance that the plaintiff may be unable to recover from the two other defendants.

Each party do bear his own costs throughout.

Petition allowed.

of Mr. Justice Chamier, reported in 27 Ind. Cas. 950.

Mr. Durga Charan Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution. The original decree was for Rs. 20,200, with proportionate costs and future interest at 6 per cent. per annum. It is now admitted that under the terms of the decree the decree-holder was only entitled to interest on the principal sum and not upon the costs. From time to time the decree-holder applied for execution. In the account of what he alleged to be due to him he included interest not only on the decretal amount but also on the costs. At last the situation was as follows:—If the decree-holder was not to get interest on his costs the decree was more than satisfied. If, on the other hand, he was to get interest upon his costs there would still remain something due to him. The sole question which has to be decided in the appeal is, whether or not the judgment-debtor having neglected to take exception to the inclusion in the account of interest on costs, he is now prevented from saying that the decree is satisfied. The principle which the decree-holder seeks to set up is that of res judicata. The law of res judicata appears in section 11 of the Code of the Civil Procedure. It provides that "no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court." Explanation 4 provides that "any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit." It seems quite clear that the provisions of the Code as to res judicata are not expressly made applicable to execution proceedings. It is said, however, that there are numerous authorities in which the principle of res judicata has been applied to execution proceedings. No authority has been shown to us where it has been decided that if a judgment-debtor does not take exception to the amount set forth as being due in an application for execution, he is prevented by the rule of res judicata from ever afterwards raising the question. To hold that he was, would not only be applying the rule of res judicata in a way not provided for by the Code but would be also seriously extending the authorities cited. In the present case the question as to how far the decree remained unsatisfied was never raised or decided. It is only by calling to his aid Explanation 4 that the decree-holder can contend that the question has already been decided. The judgment-debtor had very little reason for taking exception to the earlier applications for execution. A large sum was then due on the decree and he knew that his property must be attached and sold in order to realise what was beyond question due. The judgment debtor could not well take exception to the application for execution without employing a Pleader and incurring expense. When the decree was practically satisfied, the question as to how much (if any) remained due for the first time became really important. If it is considered expedient (we do not say it is) to make all the provisions of section 11 of the Code applicable to execution proceedings, it should be done by the Legislature and not by the Judges. We think that the view taken by the learned Judge of this Court was correct and ought to be affirmed. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Gurjranwala, dated the 3rd March 1914, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, Gurjranwala, dated the 24th June 1913, decreeing the claim.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Chaudhri Nabi Bakhsh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badr-ul-Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff's suit was for possession of four houses, mortgaged to him by Fazl Ilahi deceased, by deed of 27th June 1910, but the present appeal is concerned with only the half share of one house, which originally belonged to Fazl.

The first Court found that this portion of the house was sold by auction in execution of a decree issued against Fazl, that the auction-purchaser was one Muhammad Bakhsh who conveyed his rights to Fazl Ilahi in June 1910 and that consequently Fazl Ilahi's mortgage to plaintiff was good.

The Divisional Judge adopted the defendants' argument that the auction sale was bad and was no sale at all, because the auction though proclaimed for the 5th May 1909, was in fact held on 3rd May 1909. The learned Divisional Judge relied on Basharat-ulla v. Uma Churn Dutt (1) and Lala Seva Ram v. Kanshi Ram (2), although with reluctance (for he felt that the defence was dishonest), and dismissed plaintiff's claim.

From that decree plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Lala Seva Ram v. Kanshi Ram (2) was dissented from in the later ruling of Madho Mal v. Jawahir Singh (3), which is based on the Privy Council ruling reported as Tasadduk Rasul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (4).

Adopting the principle of those last quoted rulings, we would hold that an auction sale held at a time or date other than those proclaimed is not a nullity, but is voidable on proof of material injury.

(3) 6 Ind. Cas. 713; 40 P. R. 1910; 211 P. L. R. 1910; 63 P. W. R. 1910.

(4) 21 C. 66; 20 I. A. 176

However, the matter is not of supreme importance in this case, for we find that the Divisional Judge has held that the auction was proclaimed for the 5th May 1909 on very inadequate evidence, that the specific objection was not maintained the first Court and that the weight of evidence is overwhelmingly in favour of the theory that the auction was held on the 3rd May 1909 and was proclaimed for that date.

The only evidence that it was to be held on the 5th May 1909 is a copy of the proclamation which was retained on the record, but the date entered therein is written in an abnormal style and is quite insufficient to rebut the evidence of the binding list and the Court's orders.

Further, it is quite clear from a petition dated 15th July 1909 on that record, that Fazl was aware of the sale and accepted the benefit of the sale, for the petition is one by his surety offering to take over the house at a higher price than that for which it had been knocked down to Muhammad Bakhsh.

We hold that the sale took place on the 3rd May 1909 and that it was proclaimed for that day, that Fazl was aware of it and accepted it and that plaintiff is entitled to possession.

We accept the appeal and restore the first Court's decree in regard to the half house in question with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Where there is a strong ground for suspecting that a plaintiff is keeping back books and documents which he ought to have produced, the Court is entitled to draw adverse inferences against the plaintiff but it cannot dismiss his suit under Order XI, rule 21, unless an order for "discovery" or "inspection" has been made and disobeyed by him. [p. 526, col. 2.]

SAFDAR ALI v. GHULAM MOHI-UD-DIN.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Fatehgarh.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought to recover money alleged to be due on foot of four different mortgages. In the Court of first instance the learned Munsif was strongly of opinion that the plaintiff had in his possession or power certain documents which would throw light on the matter in dispute. With the consent of the plaintiff a visit was paid to the latter's house, a number of books were found but most of them likely to have a bearing on the case were not there.

After examining the plaintiff the Court dismissed the suit, reporting to do so under the provisions of Order XI, rule 21. The lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. On the real merits of the case we do not feel much sympathy with the plaintiff. There is strong ground for suspecting that he was keeping back books and documents which he ought to have produced. The question, however, which we have to decide is whether the Court was entitled under the circumstances to dismiss the suit in the way it did. Order XI, rule 21, is as follows: "Where any party fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery, or inspection of documents, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution." The rule concludes "and the party interrogating, or seeking discovery, or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect and an order may be made accordingly." If we look back to the earlier rules of the same Order, it is quite clear that the learned Munsif and the lower Appellate Court misapplied the rule. If a party wishes to get what is called "discovery of documents" from the other side, he makes an application under rule 12 asking the Court to order the other side to make discovery on oath of the documents which are or which have been in his possession or power relating to the matters in question. If the Court thinks fit it makes an order for discovery. The party upon whom this order of discovery is made is bound to comply with the order. The penalty for not complying with the order is that which is specified in Order XI, rule 21. Just in the same way after a party has admitted the possession of a document, the Court can make an order for inspection, and if the Court's order is disobeyed, the party complaining of the disobedience can apply for the enforcement of the order according to the provisions of Order XI, rule 21. In the present case there was no order for "discovery" or inspection. We may point out to the Court below that if it was of opinion that the party was keeping back documents, the Court is entitled to draw adverse inferences against the party withholding or keeping back documents. In our opinion the Court was not entitled to dismiss the suit under the provisions of Order XI, rule 21. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below, and remand the case to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court, with directions to restore the case under its original number in the file and to proceed to hear and to determine the same according to law. As we think that the appeals were entirely due to the conduct of the plaintiff we make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 3rd March 1914, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, second Class, Gujranwala, dated the 24th June 1913, dismissing the claim.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Chaudhri Nabi Bakhsh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badr-ul-Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are given in the judgments of the Courts below. This appeal is concerned solely with the half of the house held by Umar Bakhsh, who mortgaged it with other property to Bute Khan in 1895. It was a condition of the mortgage that the mortgagee could recover Rs. 1,000, the value of a mortgage on two houses at Sodhra held by Umar Bakhsh, and pay that sum to Khushal Singh mortgagee of one of the houses at Wazirabad, which were included in Bute Khan's mortgage; it was further stipulated that Bute Khan, if he could find a purchaser for any of the houses at Wazirabad, would be entitled to sell but would be bound to pay the proceeds of the sale to Khushal Singh and the balance was to be devoted to the settlement of Bute Khan's mortgage.

The question is whether this enabling provision of sale by the mortgagee constituted a clog on redemption.

The first Court held it to be "peculiar and hardly enforceable," further that there was no proof that the consideration for the sale by the son of Bute Khan to plaintiff's mortgagor, Fazl Ilahi, was paid to Khushal Singh.

The Divisional Judge held that inasmuch as the provision regarding sale of the property mortgaged prevented redemption, it was void.

The mortgage by Umar Bakhsh in favour of Bute Khan comprised:

(1) A mortgage right of Rs. 1,000 on two houses in Sodhra.

(2) A house in Wazirabad held in mortgage by Khushal Singh.

(3) Two other houses, free of mortgage, in Wazirabad.

It appears from the deed that one Lada had obtained a decree against the owner of the Sodhra houses and was having the houses sold subject to Umar Bakhsh's mortgage right, i. e., Umar Bakhsh was to get his money out of the sale-price.

Bute Khan was to act as Umar Bakhsh's agent, receive the Rs. 1,000 and pay it over to Khushal Singh. As Umar Bakhsh was only mortgagee of the Sodhra houses, he had no right to redeem, but only to receive a certain sum of money.

Now the rules concerning clogging, formulated and followed by the English Courts of Law, came into existence when the usury laws were in force and every device for evading them had to be defeated.

At the present day they are an anachronism, but the Courts have adhered to technicality and an unprogressive judicial policy, instead of moulding the law to meet modified modern conditions and confirming their interference to cases where something unconscionable or oppressive in the bargain called for redress.

In the Punjab there is no Statute governing the matter, but the broad principles of the Transfer of Property Act are generally respected.

Section 60 of the Act is based upon the basic principles that once a mortgage always a mortgage, but the corollaries which encumber it in English Law find no place in the Statute Law of India.

The true meaning of the expression receives some elucidation from a study of section 69 of the same Act. The true meaning appears to be that failure to discharge the debt punctually shall not per se debar from redemption.

Now in the case before us, the mortgagee was not authorized to sell on behalf of the mortgagor in default of payment of the mortgage money, but he was authorized to sell at any time even before the mortgage-money fell due; the mortgage agreement in fact is two-headed, in the first place it creates the mortgage; in the second, it constitutes the mortgagee the agent of the mortgagor for certain purposes not confined to the satisfaction of the mortgagee's mortgage alone.

In the Punjab, where litigious perversity is so ripe, legal technicality is at a discount and the essential is an enforcement of contracts, where they are not bad by reason of any oppressive condition.

For these reasons we think the plaintiff-appellant should succeed. The plea that the sale-proceeds were not devoted to the extinction of Khushal Singh's mortgage was not mentioned before us and we are not pressed by it, for the plaintiff was a bona fide purchaser for value and was not bound to see that purchase-money reached any particular destination.

For the foregoing reasons we accept the appeal and decree to plaintiff possession of the portion of the house in Umar Bakhsh's possession with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

The plaintiff, mortgagee, sued the defendants on a mortgage executed by their father and uncle and prayed for a decree against the defendants personally and the land mortgaged. On appeal the Divisional Judge granted decree against the defendants personally as heirs of the mortgagors, but finding that the mortgage was not for necessity refused to pass a decree against the mortgaged land:

Held, that the decree should not have been passed personally against the defendants, for they were only liable to the extent of the assets of the mortgagors in their hands.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge of Gujranwala Division at Lahore, dated the 10th March 1913, varying that of the Munsif, first Class, Hafizabad, Gujranwala District, dated the 26th June 1911, decreeing claim.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dhan Raj Shah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ganga Ram, the plaintiff in this case, relying on a collateral mortgage executed by the father and uncle of the defendants, sued the latter after the death of the executants for a decree for Rs. 1,000 both against the defendants personally and the land mortgaged.

The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 1,000 against the land mortgaged. On appeal the Divisional Judge found that the mortgage had not been effected for necessity, and for that reason modified the decree to one "against the defendants personally as heirs of the alienors."

The defendants appeal and there is a cross-objection by the plaintiff. The only point argued in the appeal is that the defendants should not have been made personally liable. In this contention there is obvious force. They are liable only to the extent of the assets of the alienors in their hands. Indeed there is little doubt that this was all that the Divisional Judge intended to decree and the required alteration, as far as it goes is not objected to by the respondent. The latter, however, urges that the decretal amount ought to have been made a charge upon the mortgaged land. But in view of the finding of the Divisional Judge that the mortgage was effected without necessity, against which there neither is, nor can be, any appeal, we see no reason for any such alteration. The land will, no doubt, be assets in the hands of the judgment-debtors and available like other assets to provide for the satisfaction of the decree, provided that it is liable according to law. But we are not prepared to make the decretal amount an express charge upon it.

The appeal is accepted and the decree will be modified to the extent above indicated, parties bearing their own costs in appeal as the relief granted amounts to no more than the correction of an inadvertence.

The cross-objection is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The decision of the District Judge is right on the materials placed before him. We feel very little doubt that the karnam is being paid a salary in lieu of the rusums which he received from the ryots in former years. However, as the evidence that the karnam is being paid a salary by Government has not been let in and as no notification has been proved to have been issued under Act II of 1894 in respect of the village, we are constrained to hold that the karnam is entitled to claim the rusum for the fasli in question. If the defendant is able to produce the notification extending Act II of 1894 to the village in question, this judgment will not affect him in subsequent years.

On the question whether the rusum is not payable because it is not a payment for agricultural purposes, it is enough to say that under section 51, fees paid with rent can be included in the patta and that section 3 (11) makes it clear that such fees are included in the term "rent" for the purpose of section 148 of the Appeal from a judgment and decree of the FACTS.—The facts of the case have been sufficiently set forth in their Lordships'

judgment.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. for the Appellants, contended that the whole question was as to what the Mitakshara said on the question of succession. In 1881

BUDDHA SINGH v. LALTU SINGH.

the Madras High Court in Suraya v. Lakshminarasamma (1) decided that the paternal uncle's son came before the brother's son; in 1891 was decided Kalian Rai v. Ram Chandar (2) which gave precedence to the brother's grandson over the grand-parental line; in 1912 the Madras High Court in Chinnaswami Pillai v. Kunju Pillai (3) confirmed their former view of the law. In 1912 the matter came again before the Allahabad High Court which once more adhered to its former opinion. The Bombay decisions, viz., Rachara v. Kalingapa (4) and Kashibai Ganesh v. Sitabai Raghunath (5) had nothing to do with the question. In Calcutta there was none decided on this point. The result was that the Madras rulings were in direct conflict with the Allahabad rulings. There was no authority for reading "son" as "grandson" and "great-grandson."

[Mr. AMEER ALI: As the High Court of Allahabad has decided according to Mitakshara, would it not be better to read the judgment and comment upon it?]

In the Mitakshara "son" did not include grandson, Subodhini. Apararka and Vajayanti were no authority on Mitakshara. The former was a commentary on Yajnavalkya.

[Mr. AMEER ALI: The whole law is from Yajnavalkya. Apararka is also a commentary on Yajnavalkya.]

Jolly dealing with Apararka said that certain matters peculiar to the Bengal School could be traced to Apararka whose view was to attach importance to oblations. This view was not accepted by the Mitakshara, which was based upon propinquity. The commentary by Nanda Pandita on the Institutes of Vishnu, who was the author of Dattaka Mimamsa, was directly opposed to Mitakshara. Smriti Chandrika said that this Chapter was included by Subodhini.

[Mr. AMEER ALI: The whole question is as to who the nearest sapinda is. Harrington says that that construction of sapinda in Subodhini is general.]

Sir Robert Finlay referred to Kureem Chand Gurain v. Oodung Gurain (6).

He referred to Kureem Chand Gurain v. Oodung Gurain (6); Musammatt Oorhya Kooer v. Rajoo Nye Sookool (7); Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (8); Suraya v. Lakshminarasamma (1). The Mitakshara did not provide for the son and grandson, but on principle they were included. But the brother's great-grandson was no sapinda at all as he did not make the necessary offerings.

[Mr. AMEER ALI referred to Parasara Bhattar v. Rangaraja Bhattar (9).]

Harrington's view was clearly wrong.

Reference was made to Mitakshara, Chapter II, sections 4 and 5; Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (10); Mayne on Hindu Law, pages 27 and 28, paragraph 504; Jolly's History of Hindu Law, page 13; Mandlik, page 380; Viramitrodaya, section 11.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., for the Respondents, contended that as the rule in section 5 (5) of the Mitakshara went to the descendants, it was absurd that three descents should not be taken from the grandfather. The Madras cases showed that they were based on the Mitakshara as interpreted in Madras.

Sir Robert was stopped in the middle of his argument and Mr. DeGruyther said that he had already said what he had to say on the point and could add nothing to it.

JUDGMENT.

Mr. AMEER ALI.—The question for determination involved in this appeal is one of considerable importance under the Hindu Law, and relates to the order of succession under the Mitakshara, as expounded in the Benares School, among the collateral kindred belonging to the same paternal stock as the deceased.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was brought by the appellant Buddha Singh alias Chaturi Singh to establish his right as the nearest reversioner to the estate of one Saheb Sahai, who died in 1873 without leaving any male issue. Saheb Sahai was a minor and unmarried at the time of his death; his mother, Rani Kishori Kunwar, who survived him, accordingly came into the possession of his estate, which she held for nearly 34 years. She died in 1907, when the succession opened to the male collaterals of Saheb Sahai.

The following genealogical table, on which both the Courts in India have based their judgments, will explain the relative position of the parties to this action:—

The plaintiff, Buddha Singh, is thus the grandson of Nainsukhmal, the great-grandfather of Saheb Sahai, whilst the defendant, Laltu, is the great-grandson of Saheb Sahai's grandfather, Nirpat, and the grandson of his paternal uncle, Pura. The plaintiff's contention is that under the law of the Mitakshara he has a preferential title to the inheritance of Saheb Sahai as against the defendant, who is admittedly in possession of the deceased's estate since Rani Kishori's death. He bases his right on the following text of the Mitakshara:—"On failure of the father's descendants the heirs are successively the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, the uncles and their sons." (Colebrooke's Translation, Chapter II, section V. v. 4.) And he contends that the expression "sons" occurring in this verse must be strictly construed, and so construed, the devolution of the inheritance in Nirpat's line ceased with his grandson, Buddha, and did not come down to his great-grandson, the defendant Laltu, and that after Buddha, by virtue of the immediately following verse he, as the grandson of the great-grandfather of the deceased, has become entitled to the estate. Their Lordships will refer presently a little more fully to this text and examine its meaning by the light of other texts.

Both the Courts in India have held against the plaintiff's claim; hence this appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in two separate and able judgments have exhaustively reviewed the authorities bearing on the subject, and as their Lordships agree in the main with their deductions and the conclusion at which they have arrived on these deductions, they find themselves relieved of the necessity of discussing the law in any detail.

The Mitakshara of Vijñaneswara, who flourished about the end of the eleventh and the beginning of the twelfth century of the Christian era, purports to be a Commentary on the Institutes of Yajñavalkya. Vijñaneswara analyses and discusses the text of his great predecessor, often at considerable length, explains the meaning of recondite passages, supplies omissions and reconciles discrepancies by frequent reference to other old expounders of the law. The best example of his treatment of Yajñavalkya's text is to be found in the commentary on the rule relating to the succession to the estate of a person who dies without leaving any male issue. After stating that the right of "sons, principal and secondary" to "take the heritage" had been already shown, he proceeds to quote the rule of Yajñavalkya declaring the order of succession in their default, which runs thus:—"The wife, and the daughters also, both parents, brothers likewise, and their sons, gentiles, a pupil, and a fellow-student: on failure of the first among these, the next in order is indeed heir of one who has departed for heaven leaving no male issue. This rule extends to all persons and classes." (Mr. Colebrooke's Translation of the Mitakshara, Chapter II, section I, paragraph 2.)

Mr. Mandlik's rendering of these two slokas of Yajñavalkya is more literal and is as follows:—

"The wife, daughters, both parents, brothers and likewise their sons, gotrajas (gentiles), bandhus (cognates), a pupil and a fellow-student. Of these, on failure of the preceding, the next following in order is heir to the estate of one who has departed for heaven, leaving no putra. This rule extends to all (males whether belonging or not to the four) classes." (Mandlik's Translation of the Institutes of Yajnavalkya, page 220, vv. 135, 136).

The compound word aputra, occurring in Yajnavalkya's text, has been rendered by Mr. Colebrooke as "leaving no male issue"; by Mr. Mandlik as "leaving no putra." He was evidently anxious to avoid any English synonym, as the word putra here, according to all the commentators, conveys a larger meaning than is usually implied by the term "son." The Viramitrodaya says clearly that the word "sonless," which is the literal equivalent of aputra, signifies "in default of son, grandson and great-grandson" (Chapter III, Part I, v. ii., Shastri Golap Chunder Sircar's Translation, page 154), that, in other words, it comprehends three degrees in the direct line of descent. In fact, it is not disputed at their Lordships' Bar that the word putra as used in relation to the last owner signifies and includes son, grandson, and great grandson. What is contended for is that the same word in connection with other relatives, such as brother, uncle or grand-uncle, must be construed in a restricted and literal sense.

The Commentary of Vijnaneswara on the above-quoted slokas of Yajnavalkya extends over several sections in Mr. Colebrooke's translation, and makes the work more a digest than a mere commentary. In section I of Chapter II the author deals exhaustively with the right of the widow to inherit the estate of "one who has died aputra." Her right of succession is dependent on his leaving no male issue to the third degree. In paragraph 3 the word putra is used again in the same generic sense. After treating of the rights of daughters and parents in sections II and III respectively, he deals in section IV with the succession of brothers and "their sons." Here, again, the word putra is used, whether in the literal or in an extended sense is a matter for consideration.

Section V relates to the right of collateral kindred of the same paternal stock or gotra, and, therefore, called the gotraja, to take the inheritance of the aputra in default of "brother's sons." Admittedly both the plaintiff and the defendant are Sahab Sahai's gotrajas. Reference, therefore, is necessary to the rules embodied in section V.

It is to be noted here that the word putra or more correctly put-tra, which literally means "one who releases from hell" (put), is used by Vijnaneswara at the very beginning of his Book on Inheritance. In paragraph 3, section I, Chapter I, describing the two kinds of property (daya, wealth) to which rights of inheritance attach, viz., the "unobstructed" and "obstructed," he speaks thus of the latter class:—

"but property devolves on parents (or uncles) and brothers and the rest, upon the demise of the owner if there be no male issue, and thus the actual existence of a son and the survival of the owner are impediments to the succession; and on their ceasing the property devolves [on the successor] in right of his being uncle or brother. This is an inheritance subject to obstruction."

And then comes the significant passage:—"The same holds good in respect of their sons and other descendants," meaning, clearly, the sons and descendants of uncles and brothers. And this is the construction which Balambhatta, one of the best known commentators of the Mitakshara, appears to have put on these words.

As pointed out in the case of Ramchandra Martand v. Vinayak Venkatesh (11), the right of collaterals to succeed to the inheritance of a deceased person is based on the rule of Mann, which has been translated differently by different writers, but which in substance amounts to this, that the estate of a deceased goes to his nearest sapinda. The right of collaterals, therefore, is dependent on the existence of the sapinda-relationship between the propositus and the claimant. It is now well settled by the decisions of this Board that under the Mitakshara [Lullubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (10); Ramchandra Martand v. Vinayak Venkatesh (11)] the sapinda-relationship arises "between two people through their being connected by particles of one body," viz., that of the common ancestor, in other words, from community of blood in contradistinction to the Dayabhaga notion of "community in the offering of religious oblations." But as will be shown later on, the Mitakshara, whilst holding that the right to inherit does not spring from the right to offer oblations, does not exclude it from consideration as a test of propinquity or nearness of blood.

Mr. Colebrooke has, in his translation of section V, erroneously rendered the word sapinda as "relations connected by funeral oblations," and samanodakas as those connected by "libations of water," which has led to some confusion of ideas. Their Lordships, therefore, propose to follow the translation which was before this Board in Lallubhai's case (10).

The first paragraph stands thus: "If there be no brother's sons, gotrajas share the estate. Gotrajas are the paternal grandmother and sapindas and samanodakas."

Their Lordships understand that the word rendered "sons" in this paragraph is putra in the original. Then follows paragraph 2, in which Vijnaneswara develops the position of the grandmother in the following terms:—

"In the first place, the paternal grandmother takes the inheritance. The paternal grandmother's succession immediately after the mother was seemingly suggested by the text before cited. And the mother also being dead, the father's mother shall take the heritage' (Section 1, paragraph 7). No place, however, is found for her in the compact series of heirs from the father to the nephew, and that text ('the father's mother shall take the heritage') is intended only to indicate her general competency for inheritance; she must, therefore, of course, succeed immediately after the nephew; and thus there is no contradiction."

Paragraph 3 then states in general terms that after the grandmother the sapindas of the same paternal stock, viz., "the paternal grandfather and the rest inherit the estate, for bhinmagotra sapindas (i.e., sapindas belonging to another stock) are indicated by the term bandhu" (dealt with in section VI),

Paragraphs 4 and 5 deal specifically with the succession of the samanagotra sapindas and run as follows:—

"(4) Here on failure of the father's descendant, the heirs are successively the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, and their sons."

"(5) On failure of the paternal grandfather's line, the paternal great-grandmother, the great-grandfather, his sons and their issue, inherit. In this manner must be understood the succession of the samanagotra sapindas."

It is clear from the observations of both Mr. Mandlik and Dr. Jolly (Mandlik's Hindu Law, page 379; Dr. Jolly's Tagore Law Lectures, page 124) that Mr. Colebrooke in his translation of paragraph 5 has omitted towards the end the important words "up to the seventh," which makes a material difference in the sense of the passage.

Mr. Mandlik translates the last sentence as follows: "In this manner up to the seventh (sapinda) the taking of wealth by the samanagotra sapindas should be known." Only instead of the expression samanagotra, which is in the original, he uses the abbreviated term sagotra.

Paragraph 6 then provides as follows:—

"6. If there be none such, the succession devolves on samanodakas, and they must be understood to reach the seven degrees beyond sapindas, or else as far as the limits of knowledge and name extend. Accordingly Vhrat Menu says: 'The relation of the sapindas ceases with the seventh person, and that of samanodakas extends to the fourteenth degree or as some affirm, it reaches as far as the memory of birth and name extends.' This is signified by gotra."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant on the strength of these several passages that the word "son" used in conjunction with brothers must be literally construed, for otherwise, it is urged, the position assigned to the grandmother in the order of succession would be displaced. The effect of this argument (which by parity of reasoning must apply also to uncles), if well-founded, is that the succession in the father's or grandfather's line must cease ipso facto on the failure of descendants of the second degree, and the inheritance must be diverted to another line ascending first to the female ancestor.

In their Lordships' opinion it begs the very question which they have to determine, viz., in what sense Vijnaneswara has used the term "son" in these passages; and that question can be answered only first by examining his own method of employing the word and secondly, by inquiring in what sense other Hindu Jurists of the same school or cognate schools have understood the expression. Before proceeding with their examination of Vijnaneswara's own words, their Lordships desire to make one observation, as it strikes them, regarding the place of the grandmother in his scheme of succession.

In Yajñavalkya's rule, already quoted, to which Vijnaneswara refers as "the compact series of heirs," the paternal grandmother is not included as an heir. Vijnaneswara finds a place for her among the gotraja, on the authority of an enunciation of Manu, which he quotes in paragraph 7 of section I, Chapter II, and which runs thus: "Of a son dying childless the mother shall take the estate; and the mother also being dead, the father's mother shall take the heritage."

According to Manu, then, if his words are to be literally construed, the paternal grandmother would take immediately after the mother. This difficulty Vijnaneswara himself recognises; in order to reconcile the conflict between Yajñavalkya, who omits the grandmother altogether from his "compact series of heirs," and Manu, who would place her directly after the mother, he places her somewhat arbitrarily, as Messrs. West and Buhler also indicate, after the "brother's sons." The question, however, whether he intended his declaration to be imperative can be solved only by a less free translation than Mr. Colebrooke's. Anyhow, the meaning to be attached to the word "sons" is left subject to explanation.

Now in paragraph I of section V, where Vijnaneswara says, "if there be not even brother's sons", the word used is putra; in paragraph 2, where the grandmother's place is declared, the expression employed is brother's suta, a synonym of putra. In paragraph 4 again the word putra appears to be used in connection with uncles. In paragraph 5, where the expression "his sons and their issue" occurs, the original words are said to be tat putras, "his sons," and tat sunavas (Plural of sunu "offspring." Sunu is the old Indo Aryan word which survives in the English "son"), "their sons."

The word "descendants" in Mr. Colebrooke's translation is in the original "santana," which means race, lineage, or posterity, and is still used among Hindus to mean male progeny without limitation. Mr. Justice Telang construes it as meaning "continuation": Rachava v. Kalingapa (4), other learned Sanscritists interpret it to signify "an uninterrupted series" (of progeny or heirs). Their Lordships have no doubt that Vijnaneswara has used it in the sense of lineal male descendants. Sunavas, translated by Mr. Colebrooke as "issue," connotes the same idea.

Having regard to the fact that this great legist, whose logical acumen judging from his work seems to have been remarkable, has used the term putra in previous parts of his book on inheritance in a comprehensive and generic sense, their Lordships find it difficult to conceive why he should arbitrarily and without any explanation have used the word towards the end in quite a different and restricted sense, or why, if his intention was to confine the descent in the case of the collaterals to the actual sons of brothers and uncles, he did not employ terms which would have exactly conveyed his meaning, such as atmaja or auras which, their Lordships understand, mean "son of one's loins." [See Mandlik, page 380; and Sutherlands' Translation of the Dattaka Mimamsa (Stcke's Hindu Law Books, p. 547).] Nor can their Lordships appreciate the argument that the meaning of such words as santana and sunavas, which mean lineal male progeny without limitation, should be arbitrarily cut down to two degrees.

There seems to be great force then in Sir Robert Finlay's contention that the limitation is to be found elsewhere. The rule of Manu supplies one limitation:—"To three (ancestors) water must be offered, to three funeral cake is given, the fourth (descendant is) the giver of these (oblations), the fifth has no connection with them." ("Sacred Books of the East," Vol. XXV, v. 186, p. 36.) The other is deduced by Mr. Harrington [see Rutchepetty Dutt Jha v. Rajunder Narain Rae (12)], the well-known author of the "Analysis," and one of the most erudite Judges of the old Sudder Court of Bengal, from the enunciations of Vijnaneswara himself in paragraph 6, section V, where he declares that the succession of the samanagotra sapindas extends 'in this manner' to 'the seventh degree.' It is not necessary in their Lordships' opinion to examine the force of the criticism that has been levelled at Mr. Harrington's construction of Vijnaneswara's dictum, for if the view based on Manu's doctrine or rule be well-founded, as the High Court has considered it to be, it would be sufficient to dispose of this appeal.

In this connection their Lordships desire to make another observation. If it be correct, as has been suggested, that the words putra-pautra ("son-grandson"), used by Vijnaneswara in section I, Chapter I, did not comprehend originally a great-grandson, but that it has been included by the commentators, as the Viramitrodaya shows, on the strength of analogical reasoning, then, in their Lordships' opinion, the objection to the High Court's reading of the text, based on the necessity of strict adherence to a literal interpretation, loses considerably its force, and the Courts are compelled to resort to other texts to extract the meaning of undefined expressions.

Turning now very briefly to the other authorities to which their Lordships' attention was called, they observe that Apararka, another scholiast of Yajnavalkya, who flourished about a century later than Vijnaneswara, dealing with the same text, on which the author of the Mitakshara has commented at such length, construes, as pointed out by the High Court, the expressions "brother's sons" and "uncle's sons" in a wider sense. That Apararka's authority is acknowledged by the expositors of the Benares School is clear from the fact, to which Mr. Mandlik refers, that Visweswara Bhatta, the author of the Subodh ni, a commentary on the Mitakshara, has used Apararka's work among others for the compilation of his Madanaparijata. Parts of (12) 2 M. L. A. 132 at p. 158; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 1; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 161; 18 E. R. 251, Apararka's treatise and of the Madanaparijata have been translated by Dr. Sarvadhikari and are to be found in his Tagore Lectures for 1880.

Nanda Pandita, "an esteemed writer of the Benares School," and the author of the noted work on the Law of Adoption, called the Dattaka Mimansa, a standard treatise among the followers of the Mitakshara, has written commentaries both on the Mitakshara as well as on the Institutes of Vishnu, a predecessor of Yajnavalkya, who is frequently quoted by Vijnaneswara. In this latter work, called the Vaijayanti, in giving the order among the sugotras, he states that "in the father's line, on failure of the brother's son, the brother's son's son is heir." And he bases this rule on the prescriptions of Manu already quoted. It is to be noted that this writer, who must have had Vijnaneswara's words in his mind, certainly did not limit the term putra to two degrees. Varadaraja, whose authority is said to be great in Southern India, and whose enunciations appear to be received with respect also by the expounders of the Benares School, has given expression to the same view. Vidyabhusan Shama Charan Sarkar, a learned Hindu scholar who for many years held the post of principal Oriental Interpreter in the High Court of Calcutta, and at one time occupied the chair of Tagore Law Professor in the Calcutta University, also deals with the subject in his well-known work called the Vyavastha Chandrika.

This learned Hindu writer states in Principle 153 that "a brother's grandson succeeds in default of a brother's son," and refers to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Kureem Chand Gurain v. Oodung Gurain(3) without taking any exception to its correctness. In the note to the Principle he states the reason why the brother's grandson succeeds on failure of a brother's son in these words: "Because the term brother's son is inclusive also of the brother's grandson, and because he is sapinda and the nearest of the persons understood by the term gotraja." The significance, however, of the statement lies in the question which Shama Charan Sarkar propounds in the footnote: "It may be asked that when in law the term 'son' (put-tra) is inclusive of the grandson, and great-grandson, why then the term 'brother's son' does not include also the 'brother's great-grandson?" The answer which he gives to his own question is both interesting and instructive. "The answer is," he says, "that in law calculation is made from the son of the common ancestor, which here is the father of both the deceased and his brother, consequently the term 'son' (of that ancestor, is inclusive of his great-grandson, who is the brother's grandson."

Dr. Raj Comar Sarvadhikari, whose authority as an expounder of the Hindu Law has been recognised by the Calcutta High Court and this Board, in his Tagore Law Lectures gives emphatic expression to the view that the word "son" includes three degrees of descendants.

Devananda Bhatta, the author of the Smriti Chandrika, whose doctrines, however, are not recognised in Northern India, holds the contrary opinion; and Visweswara Bhatta in the Subodhini certainly appears to say that the father's line ceases with the brother's son; and probably the same meaning is to be attached to his statements in the Madanaparijata. With regard to these two writers, their Lordships deem it necessary to observe that Devananda Bhatta, who is supposed to have been a contemporary of Apararka, admittedly differs from the author of the Mitakshara in several essential rules of law. It seems, to say the least, doubtful whether an enunciation in the Smriti Chandrika can be safely applied, except perhaps by way of analogy, to explain a dubious or indeterminate phrase or term in the Mitakshara. The Subodhini stands on a different footing; it no doubt professes to be a commentary on the Mitakshara, but it is equally clear that in several instances it diverges from the acknowledged interpretations of its doctrines. The views of Visweswara Bhatta and Devananda Bhatta have been propounded with much force by Mr. Mandlik and Golap Chunder Shastri, both of whom take their stand on the literal construction of the word putra. This thesis has been elaborately worked out by the former writer, but in substance it amounts to this, that as Vijnaneswara has used the expression "son", in conjunction with "brothers" and "uncles" it must be restricted to their direct male issue, and no extension of its meaning is permissible,

Their Lordships agree with the High Court of Allahabad that this reasoning proceeds on a very narrow basis and materially ignores the chief ground on which the opposite doctrine is based. Dr. Raj Comar Sarvadhikari's construction appears to them to rest on a logical foundation, and his views seem to be consistent and clear. In effect he says that the Mitakshara propounds a definite scheme of succession; lineal male descendants of the deceased owner down to and including the third degree, who constitute the first class of propinquous relations (the nearest sapindus) inherit in succession in the first instance. In their default the widow and daughter take by express provision of the law. The daughter's son comes in similarly. In their absence the inheritance ascends; each ascending line begins with a female, and each has to be exhausted in accordance with the rule of propinquous sapinda-relationship before the next in order can take; so that the parents and their three "successive descendants" take first; then the paternal grandmother and the paternal grandfather and "their three successive descendants" come next, and so on.

It may be noted here that two recent Hindu writers of repute (Dr. Jogendra Nath Bhattacharjee, M. A., D.L., in his Commentaries on the Hindu Law, page 444; Mr. Jogendra Chunder Ghose, Hindu Law, page 119) and Dr. Jolly, who was at one time Tagore Law Professor in the Calcutta University and is one of the translators of "The Sacred Books of the East," are in substantial agreement with Dr. Raj Comar Sarvadhikari.

As regards the decided cases, there seems to be a conflict of opinion between the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta on one side and that of Madras on the other. The latter High Court has upheld the narrow construction propounded by the Smriti Chandrika and the Subodhini, and though it purports to confine its interpretation to Southern India, the opinion it has expressed has a wider application and deserves, therefore, careful attention.

Their Lordships do not consider it necessary to refer to the earlier decisions of the Sudder Dewauny Adalat of the North-West Provinces; they think it sufficient to treat the judgment of Mr. Harrington in Rutcheputty Dutt Jha v. Rajunder Narain Rae (12) as a starting point in the current of decisions in Northern India. The question at issue in that case related to the right of bandhus or cognates under the Mitakshara to the succession to a deceased person in the presence of a gotraja. Mr. Harrington in dealing with the question examined exhaustively the meaning of the word putra, and came to the conclusion that it had been used by Vijnaneswara in a generic sense. His judgment was affirmed on appeal to this Board; and there appears to be no challenge of his interpretation of the law. It again received the approval of this Board in Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (8). Perhaps Mr. Harrington's view with regard to the continuation of each line of heirs to the seventh degree is open to the objection that it contravenes the rule of Manu. As already observed, their Lordships do not, however, consider it necessary for the purposes of the present case to consider whether the principle suggested by him is correct or not.

In Kureem Chanā Gurain v. Oodung Gurain (6) also the exact point in issue was not identical with the one involved here, but Mr. Harrington's construction of the word putra was accepted; and it was held that in the scheme of the Mitakshara the term "brother's son" includes "brother's grandson".

In Kalian Rai v. Ram Chandar (2) the point at issue directly concerned the position of the brother's grandson in the line of descent, and the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court (Burkitt and Chamier, JJ.) came to the conclusion that under the law of the Mitakshara, as accepted and expounded in the Benares School, the brother's grandson had the right of succession to the deceased before it ascended to the second line, viz., the grand-parental line.

This decision has been followed in the case under appeal.

In the Bombay Presidency also the doctrines of the Mitakshara are recognised subject to the interpretation of the Vyavahara Mayukha of Nilkantha Bhatta, and although on many points there is considerable divergence between the Benares and the Maharashtra Schools, as regards the question involved in the present case, one decision at least of the Bombay High Court indicates an agreement with the Allahabad High Court.

Mr. Justice Telang, a Sanscritist of high order, in Rachava v. Kalingapa (4), explains thus the order of descent among the gotrajas (enunciated in Chapter II, section V, paragraphs 4-5 of the Mitakshara), although, as he points out, each ascending line begins with a female (gotraja) ancestress:—

'In the Mitakshara, Chapter II, section V, pl. 4-5, it is laid down that the propinquity of gotrajas is to be determined by lines of descent—that is to say, the inheritance is to go first in the line" (the word in the original is santana literally, "continuation") "of the paternal grandfather, then in default of any one in that line, of the paternal great-grandfather, then of the paternal great-great-grandfather, and so forth.'

The Madras High Court in two cases, named respectively Suraja v. Lakshminarasamma (1) and Chinnwasami Pillai v. Kunju Pillai (3), has held, as already stated, the direct opposite. The ratio decidendi in both judgments, which are elaborate and closely reasoned, is of a two-fold character; in the first place, the learned Judges say that when a word purports to bear two meanings, one primary, the other secondary, it must be understood in the primary sense unless there is anything in the context to show that it was not used in that sense. In the second place, they seem to consider the opinions of Devananda Bhatta and of Visveshwara Bhatta in the Smriti Chanrika and Subodhini respectively as conclusively showing that the Mitakshara must be taken to limit collateral descent to two degrees in each line. Their Lordships have already made their remarks on these two authorities; they do not feel disposed to attach any canonical authority to the rule of the Subodhini. Curiously enough there is no reference in either of the Madras judgments referred to above to a previous decision [Parasara Bhattar v. Rangaraja Bhattar (9)] of the same Court to which Turner, C.J., was also a party. In that case the rule of the Smriti Chandrika was not accepted nor was the literal construction of the Mitakshara followed. It is usual in such cases where a difference of opinion arises in the same Court to refer the point to a Full Bench, and the law provides for such contingencies. Had that course been followed, their Lordships would probably have had more detailed reasoning as to the change of opinion on the part at least of one Judge.

In Suraya v. Lakshminarasamma (1) the Judges say they had "consulted their learned colleague, Mr. Justice Muttusami Ayyar," and acknowledged their obligations to him for his assistance. Their Lordships cannot help remarking that it is an undesirable course, which has not been approved of by this Board, to introduce the opinion of another Judge not a party to the judgment for the purpose of enforcing the conclusion arrived at. The recorded opinion of Muttusami Ayyar, J., would have been of great value had he been associated in the decision.

However, the two Madras decisions have received the respectful consideration of their Lordships. They have already given reasons for holding that in the Mitakshara, as expounded in the Benares School, the word putra and its synonym employed by Vijnaneswara in connection with brothers and uncles must be understood in a generic sense as in the case of the deceased owner, and that the descendants in each ascending line, up to the fixed limit, should be exhausted at any rate, to the third degree, before making the ascent to the line next in order of succession.

It seems to their Lordships that there is another ground on which the plaintiff must fail. It is admitted that the defendant confers greater benefit on the deceased by the offerings he makes to the manes of the common ancestor. Now it is absolutely clear that under the Mitakshara, whilst the right of inheritance arises from sapinda-relationship, or community of blood, in judging of the nearness of blood-relationship or propinquity among the gotraja, the test to be applied to discover the preferential heir is the capacity to offer oblations. Mitra Misra, the author of the Viramitrodaya (Golap Chunder Shastri's translation, page 91, Chapter II, Part I, section 23A), an authoritative commentary on the Mitakshara, lays down this doctrine in express terms. He says, "when there are many claimants to the heritage among gotrajas and the like, (Dr. Raj Comar Sarvadhikari construes the word "like" as meaning "other classes of heirs.") then the fact of conferring benefits on the proprietor of the wealth by means of the offering of oblations and the like only excludes those that do not confer such benefits." Dr. Raj Comar Sarvadhikari renders the last part of this passage thus: The benefit conferred on the late owner by the offering of the cake and the water determines the title to inheritance ("Tagore Law Lectures" for 1880, page 629).

In the case of Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (8) the Board affirmed this rule in the following words: "When a question of preference arises, as preference is founded on superior efficacy of oblations, that principle must be applied to the solution of the difficulty."

For these considerations their Lordships are of opinion that the conclusion arrived at by the High Court is wellfounded, and this appeal should be dismissed with costs. And they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

By that Will he left his property to his wife, B, for life, and after her death to his daughter-in-law C, for her life, and after her death the male children that should be born to his son, D, were, on attaining majority, to get the property in absolute right. B obtained Probate of the Will on 17th May 1894, and retained possession of the property during her life. She died on 11th June 1904. The appellant had obtained a mortgage dated 29th May 1904 and a bond dated 24th November 1905 against D and applied to be made a party to the proceedings:

Held, that the appellant had no locus standi to come in, as it was only in the event of a Will being put forward possibly to defraud creditors that a creditor would have locus standi to come in in Probate proceedings.

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 15th of September 1910.

Babu Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy, for the Appellant.

Babu Harendra Narain Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are presented by Akshoy Kumari Basu against two orders of the District Judge of Dacca. In Appeal No. 550, the appellant objects to the order of the District Judge who held that she had no locus standi in certain Probate proceedings. In the other appeal, the appellant objects to the order of the District Judge in which he said that the first Probate to Harimoni still obtained, and that there was no necessity for Prosonno Kumari to take out Probate again.

If the appellant has no locus standi in these Probate proceedings, it is obvious that both the appeals must fail.

Krishna Kishore Ghose died on 17th January 1892, leaving a Will dated 28th December 1887. By that Will, he left his property to his wife Harimoni for life and, after her death, to his daughter-in-law Prosonno Kumari for her life. After her death, he said, the male children that should be born to his son Ananda Kishore Bose should, on attaining majority, get the property in absolute right. "No property so left by me", said the testator, "will be liable for debt of my said son Ananda Kishore Ghose." No executor was definitely appointed by the Will, but the testator gave equal power to his wife and to his daughter-in-law and directed that, in case of death of one of them, the survivor of the two should continue to be in enjoyment and possession in the manner stated above. Harimoni obtained Probate of the Will on 17th May 1894 and retained possession of the property during her life. She died on 11th June 1904. The present appellant's claim on Ananda Kishore originated with a mortgage dated 29th May 1904 and a bond dated 24th November 1905.

From these dates which are given to us by the learned Pleader for the appellant, it is clear that the appellant has no locus standi. The Probate was granted in 1894. The money was not advanced to Ananda till 10 or 11 years after that. It is obvious that there could be no question of fraud upon this creditor in 1894, when she was not a creditor at all and apparently had no prospect of being one. It would only be in the event of a Will being put forward possibly to defraud creditors that a creditor would have locus standi to come in in Probate proceedings. This is in accordance with our decision in the case of Lakhi Narain Shaw v. Dhanada Kumar Ghose (1).

We may remark that the order against which Appeal No. 557 is directed appears to us to be incorrect. The Probate granted to Harimoni was revoked by her death; and if, the estate was not fully administered and further administration was necessary, it would be open to come in and apply for Letters of Administration for that purpose.

The appeals, however, both fail, and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur in each appeal.

Appeals dismissed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA
IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Bombay City Land Revenue Act (II of 1876)—Object of the Act—Register, maps and records under Act—Statements in register and records, value of—Estoppel—Omissions, errors or mistakes of Collector, whether can affect Government's interests,

MERWANJI MUNCHERJI CAMA v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

The Bombay City Land Revenue Act must be treated as defining the extent of the rights of any one who consults the Rent Rolls, i. e., maps, registers, and records kept at the office of the Collector of Bombay, and in order to ascertain these rights the Act must be read as a whole and its purpose ascertained. The Act sets up machinery only for the administration and collection of the land revenue of the Government in the city of Bombay. The object is to ascertain who is liable to pay. The Collector is a Revenue Official, and it is only in so far as the collection of revenue is concerned that he is entrusted with the duty of preparing a register and keeping records. The public are given access to these only in order to satisfy themselves that they are being properly assessed. The Act does not purport to establish a system of registration of title, which is to supersede other means of conveying or registering the title to land or to relieve purchasers or mortgagees from the ordinary obligation to see that they get what they have contracted to get. No doubt the register is of considerable use even for conveyancing purposes. But neither the language of the Statute nor the character of the Officials, who have the duty of keeping it, is such as to indicate an invitation to the public to rely on statements in the records as to title which may have to be made incidentally, but which are not expressed and do not purport to be decisive either of the rights of the Government or of those of the individual as to matters which go beyond liability to contribute to land revenue. [p. 543, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a person, relying on certain wrong statements in certified extracts from the Rent Rolls of Quit and Ground Rent Land, kept in the office of the Collector of Bombay, and on certain notices and bills issued by the Collector, took a piece of land situate in the city of Bombay as the land of quit and ground rent and not of sanadi tenure which was resumable by the Government on giving six months' notice and providing compensation for buildings and other improvements, and advanced a big sum of money on mortgage of the land:

Held, that the Secretary of State for India was not estopped by the Collector's action from denying that the land was of quit rent as distinguished from sanadi tenure. [p. 543, col. 2.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Bombay High Court, dated March 25th, 1912, affirming that of the High Court in its Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction, dated July 15th, 1911.

FACTS.—The old quit and ground rent tenures were situate in the old town of Bombay outside of and adjacent to the Fort. In or about the years 1803-1805, the Government decided to remove in large measure the occupiers of these holdings from that locality and those ejected were granted fresh tenures under sanads in the New Town or Camatipura. The land in question was originally so granted. A rent roll of all tenures, whether (1) pension and tax, (2) quit and ground rent, or (3) sanadi, were kept in the office of the Collector, under the heading "Rent Roll of Land situated at New Town or Camatipura" and this practice continued up to the year 1876, when Bombay Act II of 1876 was passed. A new rent roll was then opened under the heading "Rent Roll of Quit and Ground Rent Land", and in it were entered tenures held on sanads as well as the quit and ground rent tenures. No distinction was recognised between these two classes of tenures and it was generally believed that neither class was likely to be resumed. In 1904 the Government exercised its right to resume certain sanadi land in New Town in Bombay and succeeded in establishing its right which was contested in the Courts. In 1905-06 Government made a special investigation into the lands held under sanads and in 1908 opened a new and separate Rent Roll for such lands. The Collector altered the form of the rent receipt granted to those who held lands by virtue of sanads, by describing them as sanadi. The appellants through their Solicitor addressed the Collector and objected to this being done, and demanded that their land should continue to be described as quit and ground rent land, which the Collector declined to do. On July 2nd, 1909, notice of suit was given to respondent. The High Court in its original jurisdiction held that the defendant (respondent) would be bound and estopped by representations of the Collector made in negligent breach of his statutory duty, which were made with the intention or effect of inducing the appellants to believe that the land which in fact was sanadi was of a quit and ground rent tenure, but on the merits decided against the appellants who appealed to the High Court. The High Court on its appellate side disagreed with the lower Court and held that respondent would not be bound or estopped by acts or omissions of the Collector amounting to negligent representation in breach of his statutory duty and relied upon the following authorities, 21 Geo. III, Ch. 70, section 1; Gidley v. Lord Palmerston (1); Grant v. Secretary of State for India (2); Sullivan v. Spencer Earl (3); Viscount Cantenbury v. Attorney-General (4); *Palmer v. Mr. P. O. Lawrence, K. C., with Messrs. Raikes and Lowndes, for the Appellants:—By Bombay Act II of 1876, section 39, the Collector was under a duty to prepare and keep a separate register and rent roll of every description of land, according to the nature and terms of the tenure on which such land was held. Section 40 provided that the same would be open to inspection of the public and that certified extracts or copies thereof should be given to all persons applying for the same. Extracts were obtained which were legal evidence of the contents of the rents rolls under section 77 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. In these extracts the suit land was described as of quit and ground rent tenure. The representatives of the mortgagees, who were to investigate the title of the mortgagor, were misled by the these extracts and the notice which the Collector sent to the latter in respect of the rents due. The appellants deposed that they would not have advanced the amount if they had known that the land in question was sanadi and the Solicitor swore that he would not have advised his client to make the advance had he not been satisfied on inspection of the certified extracts and the receipts and notices, in all of which the land was described as of quit and ground rent tenure, and not sanadi. There was in the rent roll for the year 1878-79, on the page from which the said extract was taken, a note in red ink in the following terms: "Vide, sanad dated February 3rd, 1824" and in another of the public records of the Collectorate referring to the said land, viz., the Register of Revenue Survey of 1868-69 there had been another pencil note "as per sanad dated 3rd February 1824." These appeared to have been interpolated after the extracts were obtained. It was not until 1908 that there was any change in the form of the receipt. The mortgagees were led to believe that the land was not sanadi and on the strength of that belief they advanced the amounts. The Collector acting for the Government had had in his official capacity these representations made and therefore, the Secretary of State in Council was bound by those representations and estopped from denying that the land was not of quit and ground rent tenure.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Dunne appeared on behalf of the Respondent, but were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The facts in this case are really not in controversy. The appellants have advanced on mortgage of land in the city of Bombay Rs. 80,000. They claim against the respondent, the Secretary of State, that they advanced this sum to Abdu Hussein Ibrahimji, the mortgagor, relying on statements in certified extracts from the Rent Roll of Quit and Ground Rent Land, kept in the office of the Collector of Bombay, to the effect that the land was of quit and ground rent, and not of sanadi tenure. The question to be decided is whether the appellants, who were plaintiffs in the Courts below, are entitled to a declaration that the respondent is estopped from treating the land as of sanadi tenure. In Bombay both of these tenures exist. The land in question is in fact held under a sanad, which purports to enable the Government to resume possession for public purposes on giving six months' notice and providing compensation for buildings and other improvements. For the purposes of the question to be decided their Lordships assume, although the point is not conceded, that if the land were held on the other tenure it would be contrary to the practice of the Government, if not to the law, to resume possession, and that the land would be in consequence more valuable as a security. It is not, however, clear that such a view has always prevailed or that the difference between the two tenures was regarded as important at the time of the mortgage.

The sanad was granted by the Government of Bombay in 1824, a rent of 11 reas per square yard being reserved. Such a rent would have been the usual rent had the land been of the other tenure.

In January 1892 the mortgagor had granted a security over the land for an advance from the Chartered Mercantile Bank. A Mr. Gostling, partner in the firm of Gostling and Morris, land surveyors in Bombay, had been employed to report on the security and the title. He inspected certain entries in the Collector's Rent Rolls and in what was called Laughton's Revenue Survey Register, both of which were kept in the office of the Collector. In the entries which he inspected there were express references to the sanad with which the title originated. He applied to the Collector for "certified extracts" from the Rolls and Register. These extracts were, in accordance with the rules which obtained, made by his own clerk, and were formally certified by an assistant of the Collector as correct. The extracts were, however, inaccurate in certain points. In one of them the title given was "Rent Roll of Quit and Ground Rent" instead of, as it should have been in accordance with the book from which it was taken, "Rent Roll of Land situated in New Town or Camatipura". In another of the extracts, the entry in the Rent Roll from which it was taken contained a reference to the sanad of 1824, and this was omitted in the extract. Mr. Gostling, in addition, obtained from the mortgagor a notice in which the Collector required payment of a small sum as rent for "the quit and ground rent land situate at New Town". He also inspected the title deeds. These did not go back as far as the sanad of 1824, but on one of them, dated in 1843, there was an indorsement to the effect that the registration of deeds of transfer did not imply any relinquishment of the right of ownership in, or the power to resume, the land at the pleasure of the Government, but that the sole object of the register was to enable the Collector to apply to the proper person for the payment of the rent.

Mr. Gostling does not appear to have been deterred by this indorsement, or by the references to a sanad, from recommending the title. Their Lordships think that in 1892, when he made the investigation, importance was not attached in the same degree as later on to the difference between the two tenures. It appears to have been thought that in neither case was there substantial likelihood of the Government resuming the land.

On the 25th October 1892, some ten months after the first advance, the mortgagor obtained advances on second mortgage from the appellants. The latter employed a Solicitor named Shroff to investigate the title and advise as to the security. His evidence shows that he inspected the title deeds at the Bank and also got hold of the certified copies of the extracts from the Collector's rent rolls and the Collector's notice, to which reference has been made. He appears to have applied to the Collector for access to certain of the records and to have obtained it. At all events he searched the records, which not only did not indicate that the tenure was quit and ground rent, but which contained a reference to the sanad of 1824. It is probable that he was not paying more attention to the difference between quit rent and sanadi tenure than had Gostling or the Collector's clerk who checked the extracts made by Gostling's clerk. In the end he advised the appellants to proceed with the mortgage.

The case made for the appellants, who were plaintiffs at the trial, was that by reason of the references and omissions in the copies of the extracts, as well as in the Collector's notice and in certain bills sent in by the Collector for the rent due, the action of the Collector has estopped the respondent, the Secretary of State, from denying that the land is of quit rent as distinguished from sanadi tenure, and that the appellants are entitled to a declaration of title on that footing. In order to determine whether this is so, it is necessary to ascertain what was the duty of the Collector and his position in relation to the Government and the public. The Collector, prior to 1876, kept in his office what were called Rent Rolls of Land, on whatever tenure held. After 1876 this practice continued, but was regulated by the Bombay Act II of that year, known as the Bombay City Land Revenue Act, 1876.

Under this Act, which extends only to the City of Bombay, the controlling authority in all matters connected with the land revenue is vested in the Collector of Bombay, subject to the Governor in Council. The duty imposed on him is to fix and levy the assessment for land revenue. The liability is to be settled with the superior holder of the lands, subject to an appeal to the Revenue Judge, who is to be the Senior Magistrate of Police. There is a further appeal to the High Court on its appellate side. The existing survey and the demarcation of lands already made and all the records of this survey are to be prima facie evidence. Corrections of such demarcation or of entries in the records of the survey may be made by the Collector, or by order of a competent Court.

Part VIII of the Act relates to transfer of lands. Section 30 provides that whenever the title to immoveable property subject to the payment of land revenue to the Government is transferred, the transferor and transferee are to give notice to the Collector. Any transferor who fails to give notice is, in addition to being liable for a penalty, to continue liable for the payment of land revenue until notice is given or transfer is effected in the Collector's records. In case of dispute as to the making or completion of any entry or transfer, the Collector may summon the parties and take evidence and decide summarily what entry should be made. Section 35 provides that the registration or transfer of any title in the Collector's records shall not be deemed to operate so as in any way to affect any right, title, or interest of the Government in the property in respect of which such transfer is made or registered. In the final part of the Act, which is headed "Miscellaneous," it is provided that it shall be the duty of the Collector to prepare and keep, in such form as the Government shall from time to time sanction, a separate register and rent roll of every description of land, according to the nature and terms of the tenure on which such land is held. All maps, registers, and other records are to be kept in the office, and to be open to the inspection of the public, who are to be entitled to obtain extracts or certified copies.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the Act must be treated as defining the extent of the rights of any one who consults the maps, register, and records at the office and that in order to ascertain these rights the Act must be read as a whole and its purpose ascertained. When it is so read, their Lordships think that this purpose and the nature of the rights conferred are not doubtful. The Act is one which makes provision for the administration and collection of the land revenue of the Government in the city of Bombay. It is for this purpose only that it sets up machinery. The object is to ascertain who is liable to pay. The Collector is a Revenue Official, and it is only in so far as the collection of revenue is concerned that he is entrusted with the duty of preparing a register and keeping records. The public are given access to these only in order to satisfy themselves that they are being properly assessed. The Act does not purport to establish a system of registration of title, which is to supersede other means of conveying or registering the title to land or to relieve purchasers or mortgagees from the ordinary obligation to see that they get what they have contracted to get. No doubt the register is of considerable use even for conveyancing purposes. But neither the language of the Statute nor the character of the officials, who have the duty of keeping it, is such as to indicate an invitation to the public to rely on statements in the records as to title which may have to be made incidentally, but which are not expressed and do not purport to be decisive either of the rights of the Government or of those of the individual as to matters which go beyond liability to contribute to land revenue.

From this conclusion as to the scope of the Act it follows that what has taken place in the present case has not given the appellants any right to claim that the Government is prejudiced in any right it has to treat the land in question as of quit rent as distinguished from sanadi tenure. Nor are their Lordships satisfied that at the time of the investigation of the title in 1892 the parties themselves really attached much importance to the statements as to tenure in the extracts and other documents produced. They appear to have inspected the deeds in the usual fashion, and to have concerned themselves with the question of who was the owner of the land rather than with the question of the rights of the Government. In the view which has been taken, it is not necessary to deal separately with the question raised under section 35 of the Act as to whether any right, title, or interest of the Government could be affected by the registered entry.

Their Lordships will humbly advise his Majesty that the appeal fails and ought to be dismissed with costs.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the appellants' petition to set aside the decree of the Small Cause suit, because appellants having been called on to deposit money and the time granted for doing so having been extended until 3rd December 1912, no deposit was made before the petition was taken up for orders on that date. Dakins v. Wagner (1), Knox v. Simmonds (2), Isaacs v. Royal Insurance Company (3) are authorities for holding that, when time is given for the performance of any act till a certain date, it includes that date. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, had no jurisdiction to pass his order of dismissal before 4th December 1912. We must allow the Letters Patent Appeal and set aside the Subordinate Judge's order dismissing the petition before him; costs to abide the result of the Small Cause suit.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 10th February 1914.

CURSETJI DINSHAW BOLTON v. GANGARAM LIMBAJI GAIKWAD.

FACTS of the case appear fully from the judgment.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant:—The plaint was presented long after the lower Appellate Court's order. It ought to have been presented within limitation. The re-presentation of the plaint was a fresh institution of the suit and it ought to have been presented within time.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan (with him Mr. S. P. Ghosh), for the Respondent:—The suit having been initially instituted in the Munsif's Court and the lower Appellate Court having held that the Munsif had jurisdiction, it cannot be said that there was a fresh institution of the suit. The appeal to the lower Appellate Court must be deemed to be a continuation of the suit as originally instituted. The suit having been instituted in the right Court, no question of limitation arises.

JUDGMENT.—The first point raised in this and the connected Appeal No. 707 of 1914 is that the suit was barred by limitation. It appears that the plaint was presented within time, but the Court of first instance ordered it to be returned and then it was re-presented in accordance with the decision of the Court, which was affirmed by the Appellate Court. In our opinion the re-presentation of the plaint was a continuance of the suit and, therefore, no question of limitation arises. Upon the merits of the case the findings of the Court below are conclusive against the appellant. The lower Appellate Court says in its judgment that "the oral evidence does not satisfactorily prove that the money borrowed was really spent on the repairs, or that the repairs were quite necessary for the preservation of the math building". This is a finding of fact which must be accepted in second appeal. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Messrs. P. D. Bhide and D. A. Khare, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order made by the Subordinate Judge refusing to appoint a Receiver. A preliminary objection has been taken by Mr. Bhide on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lies.

Provisions for the appointment of Receivers are contained in Order XL of the Code, rule I, of that Order providing that the Court, when it considers it just and expedient to do so, may appoint a Receiver, remove any person from the possession of property, commit the property to the possession of a Receiver and confer upon the Receiver various powers there described. Order XLIII of the Code provides for appeals from orders, and it is admitted that a right of appeal, if it exists, must be given by the Statute or by some similar authority: Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (1). Clause (s) of rule 1 of Order XLIII provides that an appeal shall lie from an order under rule 1 of Order XL. The question, therefore, is, whether an order refusing to appoint a

ALI JAFAR v. PHULMANTA KOER.

Receiver is an order made under rule 1 of Order XL.

Mr. Bhide contends that inasmuch as it is an order not granting, but refusing, the prayer for a Receiver, it does not fall under rule 1 of Order XL. In support of his contention he calls attention to the difference of phraseology employed, on the one hand, in clause (s) of Order XLIII, rule 1, and, on the other hand, in clauses (j), (l) and (m) of that rule. The argument is that these last-mentioned clauses indicate that when the Legislature intended to give an appeal from an order merely refusing an application, that intention was expressed in plain terms, and that no such expression is to be found in clause (s). It seems to me that it would be dangerous to conjecture the expressions of the Legislature upon such a refined and subtle argument as this, seeing that, as has been more than once observed, the clauses of this Order or the corresponding provisions in the Code of 1882 have not been drawn with absolutely mathematical precision. Moreover, it is possible to retort the argument by observing that clauses (j), (l), (m) and (n) of Order XLIII, rule 1, indicate at least that in the mind of the Legislature an order refusing an application made under a certain rule is as much an order under that rule as would be an order granting the application. But I do not think that we are under the necessity of basing our decision upon these rather remote considerations. The point, which is now taken, was taken under the corresponding provision, that is, section 588 of the Code of 1882, and led at first to some difference of judicial opinion. Ultimately a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Venkatasami v. Stridavamma (2) placed upon section 588 the construction favouring the admission of an appeal in such cases. That view was adopted and followed by this Court in the case of Sangappa v. Shivbasawa (3) and by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Boidya Nath Adya v. Makhan Lal Adya (4) and Khagendra Narain Singh v. Shashadhar Jha (5). There was apparently no specific decision in Allahabad, so that we may say that under the Code of 1882 the Indian High Courts were unanimous in reading the provisions of the Code as allowing an appeal from such an order as we have now before us. Now the provisions of the old Code upon this matter have been re-enacted without substantial variation in Order XLIII, rule 1, of the present Code and since the Legislature has introduced no verbal change of importance, it must, I think, be inferred that the previous decisions of the Indian Courts, which I have noticed, have since received legislative sanction or approval.

That being so, I am of opinion that we must hold that this appeal is competent under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (s).

I may notice that the case of Narbada-shankar v. Kevaldas (6) was cited as being in the respondents' favour, but I am not able to understand how that decision has any bearing at all upon the point before us.

NOTE.—The rest of the judgment is immaterial for the purposes of this report.—Ed.

Mr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of jurisdiction depending mainly on the pleadings of the parties. The plaintiff alleges that he is the proprietor of certain land and that the defendants were in possession of the same as cultivators, but never had any proprietary right therein. In the course of certain Settlement proceedings the plaintiff tried to get an enhanced rent determined as payable by the defendants, and the defendants defeated his claim before the Settlement Court by pleading that they were in possession as proprietors. The plaintiff alleges that, whatever the defendants may once have been, they are now in wrongful possession of this land as trespassers. On this allegation he sues in the Civil Court for their ejectment. At the same time he claims an alternative relief; he says that, if it be found that the defendants are holding as tenants of the land in suit, the Court may make a declaration to that effect.

I think the suit is maintainable. It has been thrown out by both the Courts below, the lower Appellate Court relying on the decision of Ram Sukh v. Gokul Chand (1). Another case referred to in support of the decision of the Courts below is that of Narain Singh v. Gobind Ram (2). I think it may be conceded at once to the respondents that the mere fact that a tenant denies the existence of a tenancy and claims title in himself does not ipso facto terminate the tenancy. If the Court, in going into the issues of fact raised by the pleadings in this case, were to find that the defendants at one time held this land as the tenants of the plaintiff, it would probably also find that they did not cease to be tenants merely because they set up title in themselves. These considerations, however, seem to me by no means decisive as to the maintainability of the suit. Prima facie the plaintiff is suing to eject trespassers from his land, which he has a right to do in a Civil Court. In the alternative, he says that he is a person with a proprietary title to the land in suit upon which a cloud has been cast by the action of the defendants, and he asks the Court to make that title clear. Prima facie such a suit is maintainable under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The question is whether this suit is barred by the provisions of section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901). As was rightly laid down in the case on which the lower Appellate Court has relied, so long as the provisions of the Tenancy Act are available to give a plaintiff the relief sought by him the suit must be filed in the Revenue Court, and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court cannot be invoked to determine any dispute or matter in respect of which a suit or application under the Tenancy Act might be brought or made. With regard to the first relief sought, the suggestion for the respondents is that the plaintiff might obtain appropriate relief by moving the Revenue Court to eject the defendants as tenants and with regard to both the reliefs sought, it is suggested that the plaintiff could obtain appropriate relief by suing for a declaration under section 95, clauses (b) and (c) of the same Act. It is clear from the written statement put in by the defendants in this case that any such suit on the part of the plaintiff in the Revenue Court would be resisted by the defendants on the allegation that they were in proprietary possession of the land in suit. The question whether there is or is not tenancy in existence between the parties calls for determination in some Court or other. Strictly speaking, on the pleadings as they stand in the case now before me, the existence of a tenancy is denied by both parties. The plaintiff says that, whatever they may once have been, the defendants are now mere trespassers. The defendants say that they are in possession as rightful owners. It is conceivable that the Court, after trying out the issues of fact and examining the evidence produced by both parties, might come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's allegations as to the determination of the tenancy were based upon an error of law and that, as a matter of fact, the defendants were in possession as tenants. If so, I think, the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration. The case is not covered by section 95, clause (b), of the Tenancy Act, which refers back to section 6 of the same Act in which the different classes of tenants are specified. In any declaration which the Court may make it should certainly be careful not to trespass on the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court by declaring the class of tenency, but I think it is competent to give a declaration as to the existence or non-existence of a tenancy in accordance with the definition of a tenant in clause (5) of section 4 of the Tenancy Act. There is plenty of case-law on the side of the plaintiff. I may refer to the case of Zubeda Bibi v. Sheo Charan (3) and Chauharja Singh v. Sarabjit (4). See also on the question of a declaration the case of Rayaslam v. Moti Begam (5), decided on the 20th of June 1907.

For the reasons I set aside the decision of the Courts below dismissing the suit and remand the case through the lower Appellate Court to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

The inamdar claimed to take the payment of the kadim hakdars' dues in his own hands:

Held, that the inamdars' position was untenable inasmuch as the hakdar's right to deal direct with the Government was a valuable right of which he could not deprive them without any support from the sanad of the grant or from the practice of payment in the past. [p. 549, col. 1.]

Mr. Strangman, Advocate-General (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—I think that in this case the appellant who is the plaintiff has been very erroneously instructed regarding the manner in which, if indeed he has any genuine grievance, he should present that grievance before the Court. He is the inamdar of a village and in virtue of the grant to his ancestor he says, and for the purposes of this case we accept it, that there have become vested in him all the rights of Government, subject to this only that the rights of the kadim hakdars and inamdars are not affected. Now it appears that these hakdars receive certain allowances which are paid out of the land revenue collected in the village, before the surplus is paid to the inamdar. By surplus I mean what is left over after paying so much as is due for Government dues for village expenses and so forth.

The plaintiff was anxious to have the payment of these dues to the hakdars in his own hands, and he brought this suit mainly for a declaration that he was entitled to pay these moneys direct. He maintained that in the past he always had paid them directly, and the Assistant Judge of Poona, who tried the case, states that it is not denied that up to 1897 the inamdar paid these allowances direct to the recipients. That is an exceedingly misleading way of stating the facts, as is brought out in the judgment in appeal of the District Judge. It appears that in fact the payments were made by the village officers. But the appellant says the payments were made by them as his servants or agents. Seeing, however, that the village officers are appointed by Government, that they act under the orders of Government and that there is absolutely nothing in the case to show that they were not making these payments by the direction of Government, it is very difficult to understand how the plaintiff can claim that the village officers acted as his servants or agents in the matter. I think, therefore, agreeing with the District Judge, that the manner of payment in the past gives no support to the plaintiff's contention that he is entitled to pay direct.

Then an argument was advanced that the sanad, the evidence of the grant by the Peshwa considerably more than a century ago, lends support to the plaintiff's claim. As a matter of fact it does not do so, for it secures, in express terms, the rights of these hakdars. One of those rights, no doubt, was that they were privileged, as before, to deal directly with the Government. The plaintiff now seeks to deprive them of this right, and the circumstances of the case show that it is a valuable right.

I think, therefore, that the decision of the lower Court is correct and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Meerut.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamnath Mushran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on the basis of a simple mortgage-deed dated the 8th of January 1902.

The mortgagor was one Ismail and the mortgaged property is a house which belonged to him. Ismail was admittedly once a zemindar of the village when he built this house and lived in it. He subsequently lost his proprietary rights and became ex-proprietary tenant of his sir lands, and his successors also admittedly acquired occupancy rights in certain other land. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit on two grounds, the first was that the mortgage was illegal and contrary to law and, therefore, not binding on the mortgagor and, secondly, on the ground that under section 60, clauses (a) and (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the house cannot be sold. The second ground is clearly met by the decision of this Court in Bhola Nath v. Kishori (1). This is not a case of attachment and sale. It is a question of a decree for sale under a mortgage. In regard to the other ground, the learned District Judge has held that because Ismail lived in this house, this house was an appurtenance to his ex-proprietary holding and to his occupancy holding and that as under the Tenancy Act an ex-proprietary or an occupancy holding cannot be mortgaged, therefore, the mortgage of this house was contrary to law and illegal. In the first place the facts of this case seem to me to show clearly that this house cannot in any way be deemed to be an appurtenance to either of the two holdings in question. It came into existence long before either of these two occupancy holdings were acquired. The house was never allotted to Ismail by any landlord or any other person at the time at which his cultivatory holding was allotted to him, nor with the intention that he should reside therein so as to enable him to carry on his occupation as a cultivator. An "appurtenance" in common parlance and legal acceptance is something belonging to another thing as principal and passing as an incident to it. It is an appendage, an adjunct, an accessory or something annexed to another thing more worthy. I quote this from Webster's International Dictionary. In my opinion in the circumstances of the present case it is impossible to say that Ismail's house was an appurtenance to either of his holdings and that, therefore, the mortgage of this house is contrary to law. If a mortgagor, such as the present defendants, seek to go behind his solemn word and promise and to prove that the act done was illegal or contrary to law and, therefore, not binding upon him, it is for him to prove the facts clearly and beyond doubt. To merely prove that Ismail lived in this house and that he was a cultivator is insufficient to prove that the house was an appurtenance to the holding and, therefore, could not be mortgaged by him. In my opinion the decision of the Court below is contrary to law and certainly leads to injustice. I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 164—Suit for profits against lambardar—Burden of proof—Negligence.

In a suit for profits against a lambardar if the co-sharers give general evidence to show that the rents are greatly in arrear, that the tenants are solvent and that there are no special circumstances why the rents should not have been collected, the onus is shifted on to the defendant of showing that for some reason not connected with his own negligence or misconduct he was unable to collect the rents. [p. 550, col. 2; p. 551, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Judge of Moradabad.

Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by co-sharers against the lambardar. The Court of first instance held that the defendant had been guilty of negligence and decreed the plaintiff's claim on the basis of the gross rental. The lower Appellate Court varied the decree of the Court below. In the course of his judgment the learned District Judge says:—

"The next point urged is that the profits should be calculated on actual collections and not on the recorded rentals as has been done by the lower Court. This plea, in my opinion, must be allowed, for in a suit under section 164 of the Tenancy Act, profits must be allowed on actual collections, unless it is proved that the rents have remained uncollected owing to the negligence or misconduct of the lambardar. In this case as far as I can see, there is nothing to show that the rents were not collected through the negligence or misconduct of the defendant." The Court of first instance had stated: "The patwari further states that the amount of arrears is recoverable and the tenants are in a position to pay it. Accordingly on the plaintiffs' application the defendant lambardar was examined. When he was asked to state the cause of such heavy arrears, he did not give any satisfactory cause. On the other hand he stated that he knew nothing at all, that he had no account book of collections and arrears, nor could he state what amount of money was realised from what tenant and what amount of money was in arrears. The burden of proof that the money which is due by the tenants remained in arrears owing to unavoidable circumstances, lay on the defendant. But he did not prove it. The statement of the defendant that he did not know anything at all proves that he had not made his statement in good faith." It seems to us that if a co-sharer gives general evidence to show that the rents are greatly in arrear, that the tenants are solvent and that there are no special circumstances why the rents should not have been collected, the onus is shifted on to the defendant of showing that for some reason not connected with his own negligence or misconduct he was unable to collect the rents. It is very difficult to see what other evidence a co-sharer under ordinary circumstances could give. This view was taken by a learned Judge of this Court in the case of Mithan Lal v. Mizaji Lal (1). In the present case the evidence of the lambardar, as pointed out by the Court of first instance, was extremely unsatisfactory. If the defendant knew nothing about the circumstances of the village he should have produced his karindas. There seems to be no dispute about the expenses. We think before finally disposing of the appeal, we should refer the following issue to the Court below:

"What rents for the years in suit were left unrealised and how much of these arrears were unrealised on account of the negligence or misconduct of the lambardar?" We direct the Court below to order the lambardar (within a time to be specified in the order) to file an account showing the names of the tenants, the amounts that have been realised from each of the tenants, and the amounts left unrealised. In the case of rents unrealised the lambardar will give in a column of the account his reasons why these rents were not realised. When this account has been filed the plaintiffs will have a right to see the same, and they will then be entitled to go into evidence to show that in respect of the moneys not realised, the lambardar was guilty of negligence or misconduct. The lambardar will, of course, have a right to rebut the evidence, if any, produced by the plaintiffs. The usual ten days will be allowed to file objections on return of the finding.

Issue remitted.

ABDUL QAYUM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

FIDA HUSAIN—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court—Land let for pasturage—Ejectment, suit for—Estoppel.

Where in a suit brought in a Revenue Court the defendant pleads that the suit is not cognisable by the Revenue Court, he is precluded from raising a similar plea in the Civil Court when the suit is brought in that Court. [p. 551, col. 2.]

A suit for the ejectment of a tenant from pasture land is cognizable by a Civil Court. [p. 552, col. 2.]

Mohib Ali v. Surat Singh, 15 Ind. Cas. 743, followed

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Bareilly.

Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant sued in a Revenue Court for the ejectment of the respondent from plots Nos. 659 and 661. The Assistant Collector decreed the claim as regards No. 661 but dismissed it as regards No. 659 on the ground that the respondent had acquired a right of occupancy therein. The appellant appealed to the Commissioner who, after holding that the land had been originally let at a light rent for pasturage, and had only recently been cultivated by the respondent, ruled that the suit did not lie in a Revenue Court for the ejectment of a tenant from such land, and that the appellant's proper course was to give the respondent notice to quit, and, if he did not comply with it, to sue him in the Civil Court. The appellant then brought in the Court of a Munsif the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. The Munsif dismissed it on a ground which I am unable to understand. His decision was confirmed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Bareilly, who appears to have been of opinion that, whether the land was originally let for pasturage or not, it is now, and was, at the date of the institution of this suit, being cultivated by the respondent, and is therefore, a holding within the meaning of the Tenancy Act from which the respondent must be ejected, if at all, by suit in the Revenue Court. It might perhaps be sufficient to say that, as it was on the respondent's own plea that the Commissioner held that the suit could not be maintained in the Revenue Court, the respondent cannot say that the suit is not maintainable in the Civil Court. But apart from that I am of opinion that this appeal should be allowed.

In this plaint the appellant stated that the land was originally let for pasturage, that the respondent did not attempt to plough it up till after the settlement of issues in the previous case, when the appellant pleaded that a right of occupancy could not be acquired in pasture land and that in that suit the respondent himself admitted that he had ploughed up the land after the issues had been settled. The respondent in his written statement did not even evasively deny the appellant's allegations. All that he said was that the land was under cultivation. Under these circumstances the allegations of the appellant must be taken to have been admitted (see Order VIII, rule 5.)

The respondent does not dispute the correctness of my decision in Mohib Ali v. Surat Singh (1), that a suit for the ejectment of a tenant from pasture land is cognizable by a Civil Court. That decision is in accordance with several decisions of the Board of Revenue of which it is sufficient to mention that of Chowdhury Muhammad Mahmud Khan v. Ganga Ram (2). In the last resort, the respondent contends that as the land has been under cultivation for some years it must be taken that the appellant has consented thereto, and the land has now become a holding within the meaning of the Act, whether it was so or not before. It is sufficient to say that the appellant has for some years been trying to eject the respondent from the land, and even if it could be shown that he had accepted rent from the respondent since the land was brought under cultivation, I should hold that the appellant was still entitled to contend that it is not a holding within the meaning of the Act.

For the above reasons I allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the appellant's claim with costs in all three Courts.

Decree reversed.

(2) Selected Decisions No. 6 of 1910.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 47
OF 1915.

June 23, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chamier and

Mr. Justice Piggott.

KULSUM-UN-NISSA BIBI—DEFENDANT—

versus

DAURU NATH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—
RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Muafi resumed—Ex-muafidars recorded as tenants on payment of privileged rates of rent—Dispossession of such tenants—Suit to recover possession—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 79.

Certain persons were recorded as muafidars in respect of certain plots of land prior to 1838. In 1838 the land was settled with the zemindar and the ex-muafidars were entered as tenants on payment of a privileged rate of rent with a right of transfer in the holding. In the Settlements of 1861 and 1868, they were again recorded as tenants with a right of transfer in the holding. The tenants were dispossessed by the landlord from a portion of the land. They sued the landlord to recover possession in the Civil Court:

Held, that the ex-muafidars were tenants within the meaning of section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act and a suit to recover possession was not maintainable in the Civil Court. [p. 558, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

The Hon'ble Mr. Motilal Nehru, for the Appellant.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—In this case the defendant-appellant is the sole proprietor of Mauza Danpur in the Bulandshahr District. The plaintiffs-respondents are residents of that village. Their suit was for recovery of possession in respect of a particular plot of land, one bigha 15 biswas in area, situated in this village, from which they alleged themselves to have been wrongfully ejected by the defendant. The precise date of the alleged dispossession is not given in the plaint, but the plaintiffs dated their cause of action from an adverse decision of the Revenue Court on the question of mutation. The dispossession clearly took place somewhere towards the close of the year 1809. The case as stated in the plaint may be summarised thus. The plot of land in question was originally owned by one Param Sukh, from whom it descended to his grandsons, Baldeo Das and Tula Ram. Tula Ram predeceased Baldeo Das and the latter died somewhere about the year 1885. The plaintiffs are distant consins of Baldeo Das and Tula Ram, claiming descent from Durga Das, own brother of the father of the said Baldeo Das and Tula Ram. The plaintiffs nevertheless asserted that they were members of a joint undivided Hindu family with Baldeo Das and Tula Ram, so that the plot of land in question passed to them by survivorship on the death of Baldeo Das. They admitted, however, that, in the village records, whatever rights had belonged to Baldeo Das were entered after his death as belonging to Musammât Sundar, the widow of his predeceased brother, Tula Ram. They said that this was done with their consent "for the consolation" of this lady. In the plaint as drafted they clearly intended to claim that Musammât Sundar was not really in possession, except in so far as she enjoyed a Hindu widow's right of maintenance out of the joint family property. Musammât Sundar died in the year 1909 and the defendant, as proprietor of the mahal, took possession of the land in suit. The defendant's claim was that the land, in Musammât Sundar's possession at any rate, was a mere occupancy holding and that it escheated to the proprietor of the mahal because Musammât Sundar left behind her no heir entitled to succeed under section 22 of the Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901). The plaintiffs said that they fought the matter in mutation before the Revenue Courts, but the decision there was against them. It is fair to note, however, that in the plaint itself the claim was put in an alternative form. In paragraph 5 of the plaint it is distinctly stated that Musammât Sundar had no right in the property in dispute. There is, however, an alternative plea, that if the lady was in fact in possession in her own right, then her rights were those of a Hindu widow and the property came to the plaintiffs on her death as the nearest surviving reversioners of her husband. The nature of the defence set up has already been sufficiently indicated. Before issues were fixed in the Court of first instance, the learned Munsif found it advisable to examine the plaintiff Chaube Dauru Nath, who made a statement on the 10th of February 1913 on behalf of himself and of the other plaintiffs. This statement was obviously interpreted by the learned Munsif as considerably modifying the pleas taken in the plaint. It has been read to us in detail, and I think the learned Munsif was substantially right in so regarding it. Undoubtedly the plaintiff Dauru Nath was anxious to hedge as far as possible and to evade the attempts made by the Court while he was under examination to tie him down to definite pleadings of fact on certain points. In substance, however, he did admit that Musammât Sundar obtained actual possession in 1885, on the death of Baldeo Das, and that she was in possession for 24 years until her death. He went on to explain that he himself and the other plaintiffs really managed Musammât Sundar's affairs for her and claimed to have been in joint cultivation with her of the land in suit. He said that the Court might regard his position with respect to this cultivation as that of a servant or as that of a partner; but I have no doubt he did intend to plead that he was sharing in the cultivation of the holding at the time of Musammât Sundar's death, within the meaning of section 22 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The learned Munsif proceeded to fix a number of issues, of which he decided only two. The first of these was, "whether Musammât Sundar held the disputed plot in village Danpur as an occupancy tenant or as an absolute owner." The frame of the issue is, I think, justified by the fact that the plaintiff Dauru Nath in his statement before the Court had admitted Musammât Sundar's possession and had practically abandoned the plea put forward in the plaint that Musammât Sundar had never been in possession at all. On the issue thus framed the learned Munsif, after an elaborate discussion of the evidence and of the law which he considered applicable to the facts of the case, recorded a finding that the land held by Musammât Sundar was her occupancy holding and succession to the same was governed by the provisions of the Tenancy Act. This finding in itself was not conclusive against the plaintiffs, unless and until the Court had gone on to determine the question of their alleged sharing in the cultivation of the holding at the time of Musammât Sundar's death. This the learned Munsif did not do, but he proceeded to take up another issue stated by him in the following terms: "Whether the suit is cognizable in the Civil Court." The issue is not very happily framed. The suit as brought was based upon a claim of proprietary right, and was undoubtedly cognizable in the Civil Court. Nevertheless it is sufficiently clear what the learned Munsif meant by this issue and what he has actually found in respect of it. If Musammal Sundar was an occupancy tenant of the land in suit the plaintiffs, supposing that they proved their case so as to give them a right to succession under section 22 of the Tenancy Act, would have to prove that they were joint in cultivation with this lady at the time of her death. They were subsequently ejected by the defendant zemindar. They were, therefore, in the position of tenants ejected by the landholder otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Tenancy Act. That ejection would give them a right of suit for recovery of possession and for compensation under section 79 of the same Act, and inasmuch as they possessed that right of suit, the provisions of section 167 of the Tenancy Act (read with reference to section 79 aforesaid and serial number 30 in group (c) of the suits specified in the 4th Schedule to the same Act) would debar the plaintiffs from bringing a suit for recovery of possession in the Civil Court. This is what the learned Munsif obviously intended to find and has in substance found; and he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit accordingly. The latter appealed, and I shall have a few remarks to make presently regarding the position taken up by them in the memorandum of appeal. At present what I wish to notice is that, in the interval between the filing of the appeal and its determination, there had been a decision by this Court in Second Appeal No. 1456 of 1913, decided on the 17th of July 1914. This decision was laid before the lower Appellate Court and obviously determined the result of the appeal in that Court. It was another suit from the same village and the present defendant-appellant as proprietor of the village was a party to it. The other parties were different, and it has never been suggested that the decision had in any way the effect of res judicata upon the present litigation. It was, however, a decision respecting a plot of land held on substantially the same tenure as the land in dispute in the present case. The point for determination, however, was not quite the same in the suit which resulted in Second Appeal No. 1456 of 1913. The holder of the land had mortgaged it. The mortgagee brought a suit upon his mortgage, obtained a decree, brought the mortgagor's rights to sale and purchased them himself. While these proceedings were going on the mortgagor relinquished his rights, whatever they might be in favour of the proprietor of the village. On the strength of this relinquishment the proprietor succeeded in obtaining possession. The suit was by the mortgagee auction-purchaser for recovery of possession. The point which the Court had to determine was whether the rights of the mortgagor in the property in suit, whatever those rights might be, were or were not transferable. In that case the finding of the lower Appellate Court had been that the mortgagor's rights were those of an occupancy tenant and were not transferable. In appeal this finding was treated by this Court as a mixed question of law and of fact. The learned Judges who disposed of the appeal set forth in their judgment a statement of what were represented to them as being admitted facts with regard to the previous history of the land in suit. From those facts they drew an inference, as a point of law, that the rights of the mortgagor in the land then in question were proprietary rights, that the payments which the mortgagor had admittedly been making to the proprietor of the village could not properly be described as "rent" within the meaning of the definition in section 4, clause (3), of the Tenancy Act, and that consequently there was no question of the existence of tenancy, but the rights of the mortgagor being proprietary rights were transferable. On these findings the plaintiff's suit was decreed. In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has accepted this decision as a ruling laying down principles on which he was bound to act. He does not seem to have considered whether the recital of admitted facts in the decision of this Court to which he was referred as a ruling did or did not agree with the facts alleged by the parties and proved by the evidence in the present case. He did, however, give a brief recital of certain facts regarding the previous history of the land in suit, which is correct enough as far as it goes. On these facts he recorded a finding in the following terms: "That Param Sukh and Baldeo, &c., were not occupancy or non-occupancy tenants of the disputed plot but that they were owners thereof. The so-called rent which they have been paying is in reality the Government revenue and cesses." He went on to say that "even if those persons be supposed not owners of this land, they could not be said to belong to any of the classes of tenants specified in section 6 of the Tenancy Act." He found that they were "something more than tenants," and that their rights were transferable as well as heritable. On these findings he held that the suit was not barred by section 167 of the Tenancy Act but was maintainable in the Civil Court as brought. He was of opinion, however, that there remained other issues which ought to be tried out before the suit could either be decreed or dismissed. He accordingly treated it as having been dismissed by the Court of first instance upon a preliminary point and remanded it to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure, for decision on the merits. The defendant comes to this Court in appeal against this order of remand.

Two comments may be made at once on the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge. The first is that a finding to the effect that the rights of Param Sukh and Baldeo in the land in suit were proprietary rights was scarcely open to the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal. I have carefully considered the memorandum of appeal presented to that Court by the plaintiffs and it seems clear to me that the claim of proprietary rights was abandoned and was not intended to be pressed in the Court of first appeal. In the first paragraph the plaintiffs stated their case to be that Baldeo Das had held "transferable rights of occupancy" in the land in dispute. In the second paragraph it is pleaded that Musammāt Sundar was not a mere tenant under Act II of 1901, "the aforesaid land has nothing to do with Act II of 1901." There is nothing else in the memorandum of appeal to modify the position here taken up. The finding, therefore, which was really open to the lower Appellate Court was the alternative finding that the plaintiffs are something more than tenants, and this finding is based upon a certain finding of fact and an inference drawn therefrom. The finding of fact is that the rights possessed by Param Sukh and Baldeo were transferable as well as heritable. The inference drawn therefrom is that persons possessing such rights cannot be tenants within the meaning of that word as used in what for the purposes of this case is the critical section, namely, section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act. It is clearly open to us, therefore, to re-consider this question of the existence or otherwise of a tenancy as a mixed question of law and of fact in the present appeal.

The other comment which may be made at once on the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that it does not warrant the further decision of the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that the suit is not barred by section 167 of the Tenancy Act. The finding is limited to "Param Sukh and Baldeo, &c." I do not quite understand what the learned Subordinate Judge meant by "&c.", but it is clear that he did not consider the question of the rights of Musammāt Sundar. The defendant no doubt contended that Param Sukh and Baldeo and all other holders of similar tenures in this village were nothing more than occupancy tenants, but for the purposes of this suit she raised most distinctly a further plea as to the position of Musammāt Sundar. She pointed out that under no apparent principle of law could Musammāt Sundar have succeeded by inheritance to the rights of Baldeo Das, the brother of her deceased husband. From this the defendant desired to contend that the possession of Musammāt Sundar at any rate was merely permissive on the part of the zamindar and that, although she was an occupancy tenant of this land at the time of her death, she had only become so under the ordinary law in virtue of her long possession. This point was not determined by the lower Appellate Court, although it required to be determined before there could be a definite finding on the question whether the suit was or was not barred by section 167 of the Tenancy Act.

The question, therefore, to my mind is whether we ought to set aside the order of remand as passed and substitute for that order an order fixing necessary issues for preliminary determination under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 25, of the Code of Civil Procedure, or whether, while setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, we are in a position to affirm, on the record as it stands, the decision of the first Court dismissing the suit. On the whole I incline to the latter alternative, and I do so because on the facts established by the evidence it seems to me to follow as an inference of law that the rights, not only of Musammāt Sundar, but of Baldeo Das before her, in the land in suit were at any rate no higher than the rights of "tenants" within the meaning of that word as used in section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The land in suit formed part of some 300 bighas of land in this village, the previous history of which has been laid before us at considerable length. In dealing with this history we have to remember that the Revenue Records of the Bulandshahr district perished during the Mutiny, and that the information available as to events prior to 1857 is scanty. It appears, however, that in the year 1838 these 300 bighas were in the possession, as separate plots of land, of a number of persons who claimed to hold the same as muafidars under a grant anterior to the establishment of British Rule in the district in question. There was an inquiry of some sort and a decision was come to adverse to the claims of these muafidars. The muafi was resumed and the land was ordered to be assessed to revenue. So much of it as was not covered by groves was to be assessed at once and the groves were liable to assessment by degrees as they lost their character as such. In the judgment of this Court in the connected suit to which reference has already been made, it is stated as one of the admitted facts that when the muafi was thus resumed it was settled with the muafidars. This is certainly not an admitted fact in the present case: so far from its being an admitted fact, the evidence to the contrary seems to me perfectly clear. The plaintiffs-respondents rely upon an expression used in a petition presented to the Officer Settlement in 1861 which speaks of the muafi land as having been included in the khalsa and settled with the owner of the village "in the course of the Settlement now current". The inference sought to be drawn from this is that the land was so included and so settled for the first time in 1861. I am satisfied that the words will not bear that interpretation. They mean that the land had been so included and so settled during the currency of the Settlement which was being revised in the year 1861, and that the land was included in the khalsa and settled with the proprietor of the village in consequence of the order of resumption passed in the year 1838. At two subsequent Settlements the question of the rights of these ex-muafidars came up for determination. In 1861, and again in 1883, the ex-muafidars claimed to be proprietors and to be settled with as such. In both years the decision was against them. They were excluded from the khewat of the village and ordered to be recorded as maurusi tenants in 1861, and as kashtkaran dakhilkar in 1883. Another fact stated as one of the admitted facts of the case in the judgment of this Court in Second Appeal No. 1456 of 1913 is that, in the Settlement of 1861, the transferable rights possessed by these ex-muafidars were expressly recognized by the Settlement Officer. This is not an admitted fact in the present case, and there is no evidence on this record to prove it. The proceedings of the year 1861 need to be carefully considered. There was first of all a proceeding with regard to the drawing up of the khewat, which resulted in a decision that the ex-muafidars were not entitled to be recorded in the khewat. After this decision had been arrived at, there was a question as to the preparation of the jamabandi. This involved a variety of questions, such as the nature of the tenancy to be recorded in respect of these former muafi lands and the rent to be assessed thereon. These questions were settled by agreement between the parties, and largely on the strength of a petition presented by the authorised agent of the proprietor of the village. Great stress was laid on the wording of that petition by the learned Judges who decided the connected case. It does not seem to me in any way inconsistent with the rest of the evidence in the case, or with the fact that the ex-muafidars were recorded as occupancy tenants of these lands at the Settlement of 1861. The petition of the proprietor of the mahal, after reciting the facts regarding the resumption of the muafi grants and the settlement of these lands with the said proprietor, goes on to say that, out of consideration for the long possession of these former muafidars, he has come to an agreement with them that they shall only be required to pay him the land revenue assessed on these lands together with a percentage which he speaks of as "a haq malikana." If stress is to be laid on these words on behalf of the respondents, it is only fair to the other side to notice that the petition of the land-holder's agent expressly is that the money thus payable be recorded in the Rent Roll, that is to say, in the jamabandi. This is in fact what was done at that Settlement. The ex-muafidars were recorded as occupancy tenants holding at a rent representing the land revenue payable on these plots plus 10 per cent. The question was raised again at the Settlement of 1888, and it is to be noted that Musammam Sundar herself appears as one of the persons who raised this question. In the Settlement of that year again, the petition of the ex-muafidars claiming proprietary rights and asking for a Settlement direct with them was disallowed. The Settlement Officer, however, seems to have felt some difficulty about these ex-muafidars and to have regarded them as occupying a status of a somewhat peculiar kind. He directed that they should be recorded as occupancy tenants; but he appended to that order a direction, which was in fact carried out, to the effect that in the village Record of Rights there should be a note made to the effect that these ex-muafidars, of whom a detailed list was given, were occupancy tenants holding at privileged rates and that they had transferable rights in their holdings. It seems to me that this is practically all the evidence in the case with which we have to deal, and the real question to my mind is simply whether the payments which these ex-muafidars have during all these years been making to the proprietor of the mahal do or do not amount to rent within the meaning of the definition in section 4, clause (3), of the Tenancy Act. The money thus payable has been directed to be recorded as rent at two consecutive Settlements. In face of the refusal of the proper authorities at both those Settlements to recognize any sort of proprietary rights in these ex-muafidars it seems to me impossible to hold that the payments which they were to make to the proprietor of the mahal represented anything more than what the Settlement Officer in 1888 had held it to be, namely, a special or privileged rate of rent. The contention before us on behalf of the respondents was that the proceedings in 1861 and in 1888 should be treated as having been a sort of sub-settlement with the ex-muafidars, under the provisions of section 53, 54, 55 and 56 of the Land Revenue Act then in force, Act XIX of 1873. Special reliance is placed upon the provisions of section 56. If I thought it could reasonably be contended that the Settlement Officer in 1888 had recognized that these ex-muafidars possessed proprietary rights of some kind in the lands in their possession, I should have been prepared to hold that, as a matter of law, it is not impossible under these provisions of the Land Revenue Act for a Settlement Officer to recognize certain persons as holding a status substantially analogous to that of sub-proprietors in Oudh. It seems to me, however, that the Settlement Officer in 1888 followed, even though it may have been with reluctance, the precedent set by his predecessor in 1861 in refusing to recognize the existence of any kind of proprietary rights in these ex-muafidars.

The other principal point urged upon us on behalf of the respondents is that we ought not to have regard exclusively to the definitions of rent, land-holder, and tenant in section 4 of the Tenancy Act, but we ought to consider further the classification of tenants given in section 6 of the same Act. As I understand the position, the respondents wish us to record definitely, one way or the other, a finding whether the rights possessed by these ex-muafidars were or were not transferable, and if we find that the rights were transferable, then to hold that this fact alone makes it impossible for them to be tenants within the meaning of the Tenancy Act. When the Settlement Officer in the year 1888 was considering substantially this very question, it was urged upon him that he ought not to make any entry of a custom under which the ex-muafidars had transferable rights in their holdings, because such a custom would be in contravention of Statute Law. On this he remarked that it might be for the Courts hereafter to determine whether the Statute Law, beginning with the Rent Act of 1873, had or had not taken away from these particular tenants the rights of transfer which they previously enjoyed or whether it was not possible that, in spite of the Statute Law, there should be a body of occupancy tenants who, by reason of the manner in which their tenancy had come into existence and had been recognized by the proprietor of the mahal, had succeeded in acquiring and retaining transferable rights in spite of the statutory prohibition. In any case the Settlement Officer said, "I shall record the existence of custom if I find it fully established" and he proceeded to do so. In the view which I take of this case it is not necessary for us here to determine this question of the transferability of these holdings. It is possible that they are not transferable; but to my mind it is conceivable that they may be transferable and that their transferability may be established hereafter by other decisions besides the one of this Court in the connected suit to which I have already referred. I am of opinion, however, that even though it were proved that, by reason of special local custom or of the previous history of these holdings and of the manner in which they came into existence, the tenants thereof have retained transferable rights, they would nevertheless continue to be "tenants" within the meaning of that word as defined in section 4, and as used in section 79 of the Tenancy Act. For these reasons, in my opinion, the proper order for us to pass is one setting aside the order of remand passed by the lower Appellate Court and restoring the order of the first Court dismissing the suit with costs.

CHAMIER, J.—I, too, am of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and the suit dismissed. I desire to add only a few words with regard to what took place in 1838 and the contention that the holding is transferable and, therefore, the persons entitled to it are not tenants within the meaning of the Tenancy Act. The Gazetteer shows that the pargana in which the land now in question lies became part of British India in or about the year 1803. Between that year and 1838 there were several Settlements in the district. Regulation after Regulation had been passed for the purpose of ascertaining the nature and extent of muafi grants in the Province. Arrangements had been made to have all such grants entered in a register and every effort had been made to induce persons claiming to hold as muafidars to come forward with their claims. When the claim of the holders of the land now in question was put forward in 1838 it was summarily rejected, both because the claimants were unable to produce any documentary evidence, and also because the alleged muafi grant had not been entered in the prescribed register. Most of the old records have disappeared, but it is clear to me from the extracts from records of 1861 which have been put in evidence that the Court in 1838 not only decided that the claimants were not entitled to hold the land as muafidars but went on to settle the land with the zemindar of the village, and it appears that as long ago as 1842 or 1843 the holders of the land in question were recorded as tenants. It is important, I think, to remember that in 1838 a person holding under a muafi-grant which the Government declined to recognise was presumed to be the proprietor of the land until some one else was able to establish title against him. It is also important to notice that Regulation VII of 1822 contained provisions for the recognition and recording of persons found to be holding heritable and transferable proprietary rights in a mahal in subordination to the zemindar and those provisions were repeated and amplified in section 53 to section 56 of Act XIX of 1873 and again in section 75 and the following sections of the present Land Revenue Act. Notwithstanding the presumption referred to above and the existence of these provisions from before 1838 up to the present time, no official has recorded the holders of these lands as being entitled to heritable and transferable proprietary rights in subordination to the zemindar of the village. The holders of these lands have all along been recorded as hereditary tenants holding on favourable terms. It seems to me that if we were to hold that they were proprietors of the land, we should be setting aside all that has been done regarding these lands since 1838. In my opinion it is quite clear that the holders of these lands, whatever they may have been prior to 1838, have not since that date been proprietors thereof.

I now turn to the question of the transferability of the rights of tenants. Prior to the Rent Act of 1859 there was no legislative enactment recognizing or conferring a right of occupancy upon cultivators. But the elaborate inquiries which preceded the passing of that Act showed that there was a consensus of opinion that 12 years; occupancy conferred at least a prima facie right of occupancy and a provision to that effect was inserted in the Act. But that Act left the question of the transferability of tenures unprovided for. There were numerous and conflicting decisions as to the transferability of the rights of occupancy tenants, and to judge from a very recent decision of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhuri (1), the conflict of opinion still continues in Bengal. The Full Bench concluded their judgment with the remark: "We would only add that the uncertainty as to the transferability of holdings has been one of the most fruitful sources of litigation, and it is urgently necessary that it should be set at rest by the Legislature." Many years ago it was held by a Full Bench in Calcutta that an occupancy right was prima facie not transferable but could be shown to be transferable by custom. That was understood to be the law in the North Western Provinces also previous to the Rent Act of 1873. In a Circular of the Board of Revenue of 1856, I find the following statement regarding the transfer of occupancy rights: "It is to be understood that the Government is not opposed to the growth in the free course of private transactions of a transferable cultivating title, and no impediment should be thrown in the way of the admission by the zemindars of such title, or of its tacit creation, according to the wishes and interests of the parties concerned." Between 1856 and 1873 it came to be recognized that the continual transfer of tenants' holdings was an unmixed evil, and in 1873 the Legislature by section 9 of the Rent Act of that year declared that no right of occupancy should be transferable by grant, Will, or otherwise except in certain specified cases. This prohibition was repeated in section 9 of the Rent Act of 1881 and is to be found in an amplified form in the present Tenancy Act. It seems to me quite clear that proof that the rights of the persons who held the lands now in question were transferable would by no means lead to the conclusion that they were other than tenants. It may be that it is not open to an occupancy tenant now to plead and prove that by custom his holding is transferable, but, even if he is entitled to do so, it is quite clear that proof that his holding is transferable will not convert him into a proprietor. I am satisfied that the holders of these lands have since 1838 been nothing more than tenants and that what they have paid to the zemindar has been rent, although the amount of that rent has all along depended upon the amount of revenue assessed on the land. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs in the present case has relied strongly upon some proceedings of the Board of Revenue dated February and March 1892. Those proceedings were held upon an application for revision of an order passed by the Commissioner of Meerut on appeal against an order passed by the Settlement Officer. It appears that the Settlement Officer was asked to fix the rent payable in respect of these lands, and he did so. Mr. Kaye, Junior Member of the Board, gives a short sketch of the previous history of the case and says that the applicants were in 1861 found to be tenants with a right of occupancy liable to pay only a privileged rate of rent. He says as to the first contention advanced before them, namely, that the applicants were proprietors and not tenants "however curious and unusual the applicants' status may be it is unquestionably a fact that they have been declared by judicial proceedings to be tenants and not proprietors and that question cannot now be re-opened." He then goes on to consider the rate at which the jama assessable as rent should be fixed. In conclusion he says "I would set aside the Commissioner's order and fix rent at 42 per cent. of the soil rents plus ten per cent." Mr. Reid, Senior Member, agreed with him but in his opinion the holders of the land were liable to pay local rate also. Mr. Reid refers to the proceedings of the last Settlement and says "from the proceedings of the last Settlement it would appear that the lands were resumed muafi upon which the landlord of the mahal admitted that the muafidars had acquired a full proprietary title with rights of inheritance and transfer. There was consequently assessed upon them the Government revenue of the land together with a ten per cent. malikana allowance."

NARAYAN VITHAL v. JANKIBAI SITARAM.

This is the passage upon which the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs has relied. We have been unable to find in the proceedings of the Settlement to which Mr. Reid refers any admission by the landlord of the mahal that the muafidars had acquired proprietary rights in the land. On the contrary, it seems to us that the landlord has all along maintained that the holders were tenants. Even if the reference to the Settlement proceedings by Mr. Reid is correct, and will bear the construction put upon it by the plaintiffs, his remark does not decide the question of title. He had no authority to decide that the holders of the land were proprietors, and it is quite certain that his colleague, Mr. Kaye, was satisfied that they were tenants. In my opinion there can be no doubt that the holders of these lands were tenants and paid rent as such. I, therefore, agree that the suit should have been dismissed.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance is restored with costs.

It is not competent to a single Judge of the High Court, exercising the Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction of the Court, to stay the hearing of a suit pending for trial in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mofussil unless authorised so to do by rule. [p. 562, col. 2.]

Per Macleod, J.—A single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court is not competent to make an order for a stay of proceedings at the instance of a party to a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court, nor is he competent at the instance of a party in a suit pending before him to issue a prohibition to a Subordinate Judge against proceeding with a suit between the same parties; but he is competent, under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to restrain the parties in a suit before him from proceeding with a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mofussil, and so in effect stay proceedings. [p. 563, col. 2; p. 564, col. 1.]

Obiter.—There is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code for the consolidation of suits, but a Court has inherent jurisdiction under section 151 to consolidate two or more suits pending before it. The High Court, however, has no jurisdiction to entertain an original application for the consolidation of suits pending before a District Court, and the case is still stronger when the suits are pending in different Courts. [p. 563, col. 2.]

FACTS of the case appear from the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

SCOTT, C. J.—The applicants pray that a suit instituted and now partly tried on the original side of the High Court may be removed for trial to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri along with certain other suits now depending between parties to the original side suit in the Court at Ratnagiri.

The reason of the application, which is of a very usual nature, rests upon the necessity to which the applicants in Ratnagiri have been reduced by an order in the original side suit passed by a single Judge staying the suits in the Ratnagiri Court.

It is contended by the applicants that the order was ultra vires and should be disregarded, and a decision to that effect would satisfy them as it would enable them to proceed with their suits.

It is clear beyond argument that the High Court can stay the hearing of a suit in a subordinate Court, but the question is whether any Judge sitting alone is entitled thus to exercise the functions of the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction.

The High Court is established by Royal Letters Patent under 24 & 25. Vict. c. 104. Section 2 of the Statute provides that the High Courts respectively shall consist of a Chief Justice and a limited number of Judges. Under section 9 each High Court is to have and exercise such jurisdiction as the Crown by Letters Patent may grant and direct and, unless otherwise directed, all jurisdiction and power and authority of the old Supreme and Sudder Courts.

The only provision for delegation by the High Court of the exercise of its Original and Appellate Jurisdictions by one or more Judges or Benches of Judges is contained in section 13.

Such delegation is to be effected by rule.

Where the rule empowers a single Judge or a Bench of two Judges to exercise any of the jurisdiction of the High Court, such Judge or Judges become the Committees of the High Court to the extent to which the rule empowers him or them to act.

In accordance with the statutory authority the High Court has since long provided for the exercise of jurisdiction by such Committees.

Rule 1, Chapter 1, of the Appellate Side Rules says: "The civil and criminal jurisdiction of the Court on the Appellate Side shall, except in cases where it is otherwise provided for by these rules or ordered by the Chief Justice, be exercised by a Division Court consisting of two Judges".

Rules 2 and 3 enumerate the Appellate Side matters which may be disposed of by a single Judge.

Rule 5 states that applications for the transfer of suits from Civil Courts in the Mofussil to the High Court under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code shall be made to, and disposed of by, a Division Court of two Judges and when the application is granted, the record and proceedings shall be sent to the Original Side where the suit will be tried.

It is noteworthy that such an application was made to a Division Bench of the Appellate Side by the present opponents for the transfer of the Ratnagiri suits under section 24, but it was rejected and after such rejection a single Judge of the Original Side passed an order staying the further hearing of the suits.

It is, we think, clear that such an order appertains to the Appellate, and not to the Original Jurisdiction of the High Court; and the contention that this jurisdiction may be exercised by a single Judge charged with the exercise of Original Jurisdiction appears to us to be exposed to doubt. The only cited authority in favour of this contention is to be found in the judgment of Phear, J., in Queen v. Ameer Khan (1), where that learned Judge held that a single Judge, sitting on the Original Side of the Court, had power to entertain an application for the removal of a criminal case from a mofussil Court to the High Court in the exercise of the latter Court's Extraordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction. It is true that this judgment was referred to with approval by Batty, J., in a criminal case [Emperor v. Comley (2)] which came up to this High Court from Aden, but the reference was made in apparent ignorance of rule 6 of the Appellate Side Rules which provides that applications for the withdrawal of a criminal case to the High Court for trial shall be made to, and disposed of by, the Division Court to which criminal appellate business is allotted. And, in considering the effect of such a rule upon the present question, we have to reckon with the view taken by a Judge of the Court in Maganlal v. Bombay Co. Ltd. (3) where Tyabji, J., held that a single Judge's power to exercise the functions of the High Court was limited to the cases where, by the Rules of the High Court, the exercise of such functions was entrusted to the single Judge. If this view is sound, it suggests further that the true principle is that the jurisdiction of the High Court is properly exercisable by the High Court alone as a body, except in so far as the exercise of such jurisdiction has been committed by lawful delegation to some, or to one, of the Judges composing the Court.

But as the matter is of considerable practical importance and appears to be involved in much uncertainty of judicial opinion, we think it desirable that a reference should be made to a Full Bench. The question referred will be, whether it is competent to a single Judge of this Court, exercising the ordinary original

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

BATCHELOR, J.—This question referred to the Full Bench should, in my opinion, be answered in the negative.

The jurisdiction of this Court, and of the Judges composing the Court, is determined by the Statute 24 & 25 Vic., c. 104, by the Letters Patent issued thereunder, and by the rules framed by the Court under the authority conferred by section 13 of the Act. By section 9 of the Act, it is provided that the Court shall have and exercise all such jurisdiction as Her Majesty may by Letters Patent grant and direct. Primarily, therefore, it is upon the Court that the jurisdiction is conferred, and section 2 of the Act provides that the Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and as many Judges, not exceeding fifteen, as Her Majesty may appoint. Section 13 empowers the Court by its own rules to "provide for the exercise, by one or more Judges, or by Division Courts constituted by two or more Judges, ... of the Original and Appellate Jurisdiction vested in such Court in such manner as may appear to such Court to be convenient for the due administration of justice." In the exercise of this power this Court has made rules for the exercise of jurisdiction by the Judges both on the Original and the Appellate Side.

The intent and effect of these provisions seem to me to be that the jurisdiction conferred is conferred on the Court as a body: it is the Court which is to "have and exercise" the jurisdiction granted; but, inasmuch as it would not be "convenient for the due administration of justice" that the entire Court should have to sit for the valid determination of every suit and appeal and application, power is given to the Court to make rules for the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction by one or more Judges within the limits and subject to the conditions prescribed by the rules. The powers so delegated would thus fix the limit within which such Judge or Judges would be competent to exercise the Court's jurisdiction, and any order made by a Judge or Judges in excess of this authority would be void as being beyond the jurisdiction which the Judge or Judges were legally authorized to exercise.

Now the particular order with which we are here concerned is an order made by a single Judge, sitting in the exercise of the Court's Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, for the stay of a suit pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri. But, by clauses 11 and 36 of the Letters Patent and rule 62 of the Original Side Rules of this Court, the local jurisdiction of the learned Judge was confined to the town and island of Bombay. It is clear, therefore, and it was scarcely contested in argument, that the order under discussion appertains to the Appellate Side of the Court. The same result would follow if the order could properly be attributed to this Court's general powers of superintendence conferred by section 15 of the Act, for under that section, the powers granted are powers of superintendence over all Courts subject to this Court's Appellate Jurisdiction. This being so, the case falls under rule 1 of the Appellate Side Rules, which provides that, with certain exceptions not now material, the Civil Jurisdiction of the Court on the Appellate Side shall be exercised by a Division Court consisting of two Judges. It follows, therefore, that the order now in question was made by the learned Judge in excess of the jurisdiction which he was legally empowered to exercise.

If that be so, it seems to me unarguable that the Judge acquired jurisdiction by the mere circumstance that the order was passed on an application made in a suit which the Judge had jurisdiction to try. And as to the contention that substantially the same result could have been secured by an order in personam restraining some of the parties from proceeding with the Ratnagiri suit, and that an order of this nature would have been within the Judge's competence, it is enough to say that that is not the order which was made, or which arises for consideration on the question submitted to this Bench. I think, therefore, that we should refrain from expressing any opinion as the validity which might attach to any such order in personam, and should content ourselves with returning a negative answer to the question referred to us.

SCOTT, C. J.—I agree.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

HAYWARD, J.—I agree.

MACLEOD, J.—The applicants presented a petition to a Division Bench on the Appellate Side of the High Court praying that a suit, No. 246 of 1913, instituted and then partly tried on the Original Side of the High Court might be (1) removed for trial to the Court of the first Class Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri, and (2) consolidated with two suits pending in that Court.

A preliminary objection to the granting of the latter prayer was constituted by the fact that an order had been made on the 21st December 1914 in Suit No 246 of 1913, whereby the proceedings in the two suits in the Ratnagiri Court had been stayed. The applicants contended that this order was ultra vires and could, therefore, be disregarded. If they obtained a decision to that effect they could proceed with their suits.

The question, therefore, arose whether the Judge had jurisdiction to make the order of the 21st December 1914. The Division Bench being of opinion that the authorities on the point were conflicting referred the following question to a Full Bench.

"Whether it is competent to a single Judge of this Court, exercising the ordinary civil jurisdiction of the Court, to stay the hearing of a suit pending for trial in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mofussil, unless authorised so to do by rule?"

I should like to point out that the question seems to arise not on the application for a transfer of the High Court suit to the Subordinate Judge's Court, for if that application were granted the suit would be transferred and all interlocutory orders made in the suit would go with it, but on the application for a consolidation of the suit, when transferred, with other suits pending in the same Subordinate Judge's Court, since if the Subordinate Judge could not proceed with these suits, it would be of little use consolidating another suit with them.

There is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code for the consolidation of suits, but a Court has inherent jurisdiction under section 151 to consolidate two or more suits pending before it. The High Court, however, has no jurisdiction to entertain an original application for the consolidation of suits pending before a District Court and the case is still stronger when the suits are pending in different Courts.

The applicants have really adopted this novel procedure in order to get rid of the order of the 21st December 1914, and I venture to submit that on the facts before us anything that we may say regarding the jurisdiction of the Judge to make that order will be obiter.

However, this point was not taken by the opponents' Counsel in his argument and I, therefore, proceed to deal with the question referred to us on its merits.

I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my brother Batchelor and while I am in accord with the greater part of it it seems to assume that the order in question was a prohibition, nor can I agree that the question is so concise and free from ambiguity as to admit of a direct answer. For the question may refer to three possible orders which a Judge might make.

A Judge sitting on the original side might make an order for a stay of proceedings at the instance of a party to a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court. It is beyond controversy that such an order would be without jurisdiction.

Secondly, a Judge at the instance of a party in a suit pending before him might issue a prohibition to a Subordinate Judge against proceeding with a suit between the same parties.

Such an order would clearly be without jurisdiction.

Thirdly, a Judge might restrain the parties in a suit pending before him from proceeding with a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mofussil. Such an order would, in my opinion, be with jurisdiction under section 151 of the Code.

In Mungle Chand v. Gopal Ram (4) under the Code of 1882, Sale, J., went so far as to restrain the parties in a suit before him from proceeding with a suit pending in the Court at Bareilly, but his attention does not seem to have been drawn to the provisions of section 56 of the Indian Specific Relief Act.

An order in personam to stay proceedings is, in effect, an injunction, for though it may be desirable it is not always necessary that an order, which prevents the parties from doing certain acts, should contain the word 'enjoin' or 'restrain.' For instance, an order appointing a Receiver of certain property is also an injunction restraining the parties from dealing with that property. Nor is an order in personam limited to the acts of the parties within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court except by express enactment.

In my opinion, therefore, a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court is competent to restrain the parties in a suit before him from proceeding with a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mofussil, and so in effect stay the proceedings.

A person who purchases by private treaty from an auction-purchaser of the rights of the original mortgagee is entitled to rely upon Article 134 of the Limitation Act, 1908, if he purchases in the bona fide belief that he is purchasing an absolute title. [p. 565, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Bareilly.

Mr. Haribans Sahai (with him Mr. Gokul Prasad), for the Appellants.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for possession of property which was mortgaged as long ago as September 6th, 1856, by Shambhu, under whom the plaintiffs claim, to a man named Hulasi. The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to redeem the mortgage. They said that defendants Nos. 1—7 were owners of the mortgagee rights. Those defendants resisted the suit on the ground that they had become proprietors of the property. In April 1877, the rights and interests of the mortgagee were put up to sale and purchased by one Ghasi. In January 1884, Ghasi sold to defendants Nos. 1—3 half the rights which he had acquired at the auction-sale, and in December 1888, he sold to the predecessor-in-title of defendants Nos. 4—7 not only the mortgagee rights which he had acquired at the auction-sale, but what he represented to be an absolute proprietary interest in the property, for a sum of Rs. 100. The suit has been decreed as against defendants Nos. 1—3 on the ground that they are not entitled to the protection of Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act; but it has been dismissed against defendants Nos. 4—7 on the ground that what Ghasi purported to sell to them and what they purchased from him was an absolute proprietary interest in the property which they held. Here I may note that they have been in possession of the property since December 1888. This appeal is brought only against defendants Nos. 4—7.

It is contended that Article 134 does not apply to the case, because defendants Nos. 4—7 did not purchase from the original mortgagee of the property. It is conceded that a purchaser from the son or other heir of the original mortgagee of the property would be entitled to rely upon Article 134, but it is contended that a person, who purchases from the auction-purchaser of the rights of the original mortgagee, is not entitled to rely upon that Article. Several cases, supposed to bear upon this question, have been cited to me; but on examination they are all found to be totally irrelevant, and it is useless to discuss them. I have no hesitation in holding that a person who purchases by private treaty from an auction-purchaser of the rights of the original mortgagee is entitled to rely upon Article 134. The auction-purchaser of the rights of the mortgagee steps into the shoes of the mortgagee. Next it is contended that Article 134 affords protection only to a person who purchases property from a mortgagee in the bona fide belief that he is purchasing an absolute proprietary title. The words in good faith which appeared in Article 134 of the Limitation Act of 1871 were struck out of that Article when Act XV of 1877 was passed and do not appear in the present Limitation Act of 1908. My view is that the words were advisedly struck out in order to put a stop to the instituting of inquiry into the knowledge or state of mind of a purchaser of the property. That was the view expressed by Mr. Justice Tudball in Dal Singh v. Gur Prasad (1), and it is said to have been repeated by him in an unreported decision by him in Second Appeal No. 547 of 1914. The case is referred to in a judgment of Mr. Justice Piggott but a wrong reference is given, the case actually referred to being a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. But it seems that this Court has in several cases either held or assumed that notwithstanding the alteration in the language of Article 134 the purchaser must show that he purchased in good faith. There seems to have been some difference of opinion on the subject in the Bombay High Court. See Yesu Ramji Kalnath v. Balakrishna Lakshman (2) and Pandu v. Vithu (3). Sitting as a single Judge I must follow the decisions of this Court and I therefore, direct that the record of this case be returned to the lower Appellate Court for a finding on the question whether the predecessors-in-title of defendants Nos. 4—7 purchased the property now in their possession from Ghasi in the bona fide belief that they were acquiring an absolute interest in the property. Further evidence may be admitted. Ten days will be allowed for objections on return of the finding.

Case stated, under section 20, Act IV of 1869, by the District Judge of Bellary, in Original Suit No. 42 of 1914, for the confirmation of the decree nisi passed by him in the said suit by the High Court.

Mr. A. D. Zachaus, for the Plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—In order to support a suit for nullity of marriage in this country on the ground of impotence on the part of one of the parties, such impotence must of course be proved, or there must be facts from which impotence, that is, physical unfitness for consummation may be inferred both at the date of the marriage and at the date of the institution of the suit. The only evidence here is that the respondent never attained puberty and that the petitioner never had intercourse with her. Nor are the allegations in the plaint any more satisfactory. In the circumstances, we think it best not to confirm the decree and to dismiss the suit, but with liberty to bring a fresh suit as the whole nature of the proceedings appears to have been misconceived.

Where an occupancy tenant plants a grove on his holding with the permission of the zemindar, the character of the holding is not changed. The tenant has no right to transfer the trees nor can they be sold in execution of a decree against him. [p. 567, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal from Mr. Justice Rafique's following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by a zemindar for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from cutting down trees of a grove or otherwise interfering with his (zemindar's) possession over it. It was alleged in the plaint that Moulvi Wazir Ahmad, the plaintiff, was the zemindar of the village of Shitabnagar, and that Bhopal and others were his tenants in respect of plots, among others, numbered 74, 81 and 89. There was a mango grove on the said plots, which was in the possession of Bhopal and others merely as his tenants whose sole right in the grove was that of taking fruit. They had no right of transfer in respect of the trees of the grove nor could the said trees be sold in execution of a decree against them. One Daya Kishen in execution of his decree against them had some of the trees of the said grove put up to auction and purchased them himself on the 28th of June 1911. The said sale was void at law and put an end to the rights of the tenants in the grove and the plaintiff became entitled to its possession. He entered on possession but Daya Kishen, the purchaser, with the help of two others attempted to cut down the trees purchased by him and was prevented by the plaintiff. The plaintiff, therefore, sued for perpetual injunction restraining Daya Kishen and his friends from cutting down any trees of the grove in question or otherwise interfering with the plaintiff's possession over the said grove. The claim was resisted on various grounds. The pleas with which we are concerned in this appeal were that the plots Nos. 74, 81 and 89 were granted to Debi Singh, ancestor of Bhopal and others, by the zemindar of the village for planting a grove and Debi Singh accordingly planted a grove, and his descendants had a proprietary right in the grove which they could transfer either privately or which could be sold in execution of a decree against them. Moreover, under a custom obtaining in the village and also under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz tenants have a transferable right in the trees in their possession. The learned Munsif held that the land of the grove in suit had not been granted to Debi Singh for planting a grove, but was his occupancy holding over which he had planted a grove. He further held that the custom set up by the defence was not proved and that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz were not applicable to the present case. The claim was accordingly decreed. Daya Kishen, the auction-purchaser of the trees, preferred an appeal. The only point urged on his behalf before the learned Subordinate Judge was that under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz of the village of Shitabnagar tenants had a transferable right in the trees planted by them. In order to dispose of the question raised in the appeal the learned Subordinate Judge framed a fresh issue and remitted it for trial to the first Court. The finding of the first Court on the fresh issue did not support the contention of the appellant that under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz a tenant had a right of transfer in the trees planted by him on his holding. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the finding of the first Court, but for other reasons held that the tenants of the grove in suit had a right of transfer in the trees. He accordingly accepted the appeal and dismissed the claim of the plaintiff. The latter has come up in second appeal to this Court. He contends that an occupancy or non-occupancy tenant who plants trees on his holding has no right of transfer in the trees in the absence of a custom or contract to the contrary. The following cases are relied upon in support of this contention: Kasim Mian v. Banda Husain (1), Imdad Khatun v. Bhagirath (2), Kausalia v. Gulab Kuar (3), Janki v. Sheodhar (4), Wahida Khatun v. Bulagi Das (5). For the respondent the reply is that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the land of the grove in suit was given to Debi Singh on a fixed rent for the purpose of planting a grove and, therefore, the principle laid down in the cases relied upon by the appellant does not apply. It is said that when a zemindar grants land on rent to a persons to plant a grove, that person has a right of transfer in the trees. In support of his argument, the respondent refers to the following cases: Muhammad Ismail Khan v. Mithu Lal (6), Habibullah v. Kalyan Das (7). The case-law, no doubt, makes a distinction between the rights of a tenant, occupancy or non-occupancy, who plants trees on his holding and of a person who is given land at a specified rent solely for the purpose of planting a grove. The contention of the respondent must prevail if it has been found that the land of the grove in suit was granted to Debi Singh for the purpose of planting a grove. It is true that the learned Subordinate Judge does say that he thinks that the land of the grove in suit was let to Debi Singh on a fixed rent for the purpose of planting a grove. But there does not seem to be any evidence in support of this finding. The defendant-respondent produced evidence to prove that the plaintiff-appellant had granted the land of the grove in suit to Bhopal and others who had planted the grove. The first Court disbelieved that evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge did not accept it also, for he holds that the land was granted to Debi Singh. He means presumably that the land was granted by the former zemindars, as the plaintiff-appellant was not the zemindar in the life-time of Debi Singh. In fact the learned Subordinate Judge in an earlier part of his judgment accepts the finding of the first Court that the grove in question was planted with the permission of the former zemindars. The revenue papers show that the land of the grove was the occupancy holding of Debi Singh for a long time before any trees were planted by him on it. The reason for the finding seems to be that the learned Subordinate Judge thought that the permission of the former zemindars, which was assumed in the absence of any protest by them, to Debi Singh to plant a grove, amounted to the grant of a fresh lease to him of the land for the purpose of planting a grove. If that were a valid reason the cases referred to above by the appellant were erroneously decided. But I do not think that it can be said that the permission by a zemindar to his occupancy or non-occupancy tenant to plant trees on his holding cancels the original lease and is a fresh lease for the purpose of planting trees. The finding under discussion being unsupported by any evidence cannot be accepted. The character of the grove in question then is that it was planted by an occupancy tenant on his holding. He or his successors have, therefore, no right of transfer in the trees. They cannot be sold privately or in execution of a decree against Bhopal and others.

(6) 17 Ind. Cas. 656; 11 A. L. J. 649.

(7) 25 Ind. Cas. 169; 12 A. L. J. 1080,

But it is further contended for the respondent that as soon as the grove was planted by Debi Singh, the land lost its character as an occupancy holding and the zemindar could have ejected him. The zemindar having failed to do so, Debi Singh became a trespasser and his possession became adverse to the zemindar. Debi Singh and his successors have been in adverse possession for more than twelve years prior to the sale of the trees, and hence the plaintiff-appellant cannot question the sale to Daya Kishen. No such plea was taken by the latter in his defence. But apart from that the case of Daya Kishen was and the finding of the lower Court is that the trees were planted with the permission of the former zemindars. No question of adverse possession can, therefore, arise. The appeal prevails, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the first Court is restored. Costs are allowed to the appellant throughout.

Mr. Abdul Raof, for the Respondent.

Under no circumstances can childless widows inherit the property in Bengal.

Sreemuty Bimola v. Dangoo Kansaver, 19 W. R. 189, reversed.

Petition to review the following judgment of the High Court, dated the 24th February 1873, reported in 19 W. R. 189:—

JACKSON, J.—It seems to me there was really no valid defence to the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs did not sue to recover, as the Subordinate Judge supposes, a particular part of the premises in which Juggurnath, the father of Amrita and grandfather of the husband of Bimola, resided. They simply sought to establish their right to that portion of the joint family premises which descended by right to Juggurnath. They put their claim a little too high in asking for a half share of those premises when it seems they were really entitled to a fourth share, and no more. The Subordinate Judge taking a mistaken view of what, as I have just stated, the plaintiffs asked for, went on to say that they had not been in possession of the particular premises of Juggurnath, and consequently their suit was barred by limitation. It is clear that they had been residing as members of a joint family on joint premises, and on the occurrence of disputes between them and their co-sharers, they were certainly entitled to come into Court and ask to have their proper share assigned.

As to the exclusion of Amrita under the Hindu Law, there seems to be no ground for that, because although a widow at the time of her father's death, still she could certainly, as the law now stands, re-marry and have issue. I think the decision of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside, and the Munsif's decree for a fourth share restored with costs.

GLOVER, J.—I concur.

ORDER.—We think the passage in our judgment, "as to the exclusion of Amrita under the Hindu Law, there seems to be no ground for that, because although a widow at the time of her father's death still she could certainly, as the law now stands, re-marry and have issue", should be struck out but we do not think it neces ary to alter the decree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 9—Cause of action—Suit for profits dismissed in default—Second suit for profits of other years including previous profits, maintainability of—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 164

A co-sharer brought a suit for profits of the years 1313, 1314, 1315 fastis against the lambardar. The suit was dismissed for default of appearance. Subsequently another suit was brought by the same co-sharer for the profits of the years 1316, 1317, 1318 Fastis. In this suit the plaintiff included also sums recovered during the years in suit in respect of the years 1313, 1314, 1315:

Held, that the suit was not barred by Order IX, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the causes of actions of the two suits were different [p. 569, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 10th August 1914.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought a suit for profits for the years 1313-1315. That suit was dismissed for default. He then brought the present suit for profits collected in the years 1316—1318 and claimed the profits relating to the years 1313—1315 fastis which the lambardar had realised in the years now in suit. The first Court dismissed the suit as barred by Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code. The lower Appellate Court decreed the suit.

Mr. Vishnu Nath, for the Appellant:—The previous suit for profits relating to the years 1313—1315 fastis having been dismissed for default of appearance, the present suit for profits so far as it relates to rents realised for the years 1313—1315 fastis is barred by Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code. The cause of action in the previous suit was the refusal of the lambardar to pay the profits and the present suit is also based on the same cause of action.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan, for the Respondents:—The cause of action for the present suit arose when the arrears of rent were realised. If the previous suit had not been dismissed for default one of two things would have happened—either the plaintiff's suit would have been decreed on the basis of actual collections or on gross rental. In the former case, no cause of action for rents not collected could have then arisen and in the latter case the present suit, so far as it related to the profits of those years could, not have been brought. Moreover, in every suit for profits the plaintiff would not be able to sue for profits if he happened to sue for the same on the basis of gross rental in any previous year.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case is a co-sharer in a patti of which the defendant is lambardar. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for the profits of the years 1313, 1314 and 1315 fastis. That suit was dismissed for default of appearance on the part of the plaintiff under Order IX, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code. Some years later the plaintiff brought the present suit against the same person for profits of his share for the years 1316, 1317 and 1318 fastis and he has obtained a decree. Included in those profits are sums recovered during the years in suit in respect of the years 1313, 1314 and 1315 fastis. It is contended that the present suit is barred by Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, so far as the plaintiff seeks to recover any portion of the rents recovered on account of the years 1313, 1314 and 1315 fastis. In the Court below and here the defendant relied strongly on the fact that in the previous case the plaintiff claimed profits on the basis of the gross rental on the ground apparently that a large amount of profits had remained uncollected owing to the negligence or misconduct of the defendant. This fact does not appear to me to affect the question which I have to decide. Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, provides that where a suit is dismissed under Order IX, rule 8, the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. The cause of action for the previous suit was made up of the plaintiff's title to the share and the profits thereof and the failure of the defendant to give him those profits at the end of each of the years 1313, 1314 and 1315 fastis. The plaintiff's cause of action for the present suit is made up of his title to the share and the profits thereof and failure of the defendant to give the plaintiff those profits at the end of each of the years 1316, 1317 and 1318 Fastis. The causes of action for the two suits appear to me to be totally different. The contention of the defendant in the present case seems to confuse two questions, namely, the question whether the two suits are based upon the same cause of action and the question whether the plaintiff is entitled in the present suit to sue for and recover any moneys which, if his suit had not been dismissed for default, he might have recovered in the previous suit if the Court had applied to the case the provisions of section 164, sub-section 2 of the Tenancy Act. If as I hold, no portion of the present suit is barred by Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff is entitled to the decree which he has obtained from the lower Appellate Court. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—A vendee from the original mortgagors brought this suit for redemption. The suit document is termed 'swadina tanaka meddatu sharatu pattiram,' which may be translated as a possessory mortgage-deed containing a condition for a period fixed. It recites that the mortgagors have received Rs. 10 and have mortgaged their house site with a thatched house standing thereon, that they undertake to pay the principal and interest of these Rs. 10 within a year and take back possession of their house and site, and that, if they do not act according to these conditions, they will surrender the house and land treating the transaction as a sale.

This suit for redemption was brought seventeen years after the term expired.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the 3rd defendant had had adverse possession for over 12 years, following Usuman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (1). The facts of that case were somewhat different. The parties agreed to treat the possession of the mortgagee as the possession of a full owner after possession had been enjoyed for eight years under the mortgage, and nine years after the execution of the deed they showed by their actions that they wished to act upon that agreement. It is, of course, always open to a mortgagor and a mortgagee to enter upon a fresh transaction independent of the mortgage extinguishing the mortgage and passing the property to the mortgagee as a purchaser. See Kanhayalal v. Narhar (2). But here we are concerned only with the terms of the document. The District Judge has treated it as an anomalous mortgage, in which case under section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act the rights and liabilities of the parties have to be determined strictly by their contract. The appellant's Vakil maintains that it is a usufructuary mortgage or a combination of a usufructuary and a simple mortgage with a clog on the equity of redemption, and he quotes Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (3) in support of his argument.

I am of opinion that the District Judge was right. Simple mortgages, mortgages by conditional sale and usufructuary mortgages are defined in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. This cannot be treated as a simple mortgage as there is delivery of the property to the mortgagee, as there is no personal covenant of the mortgagor to pay, and as there is no provision that the mortgagee may sell the property and apply the proceeds in payment of the mortgage-money. Nor is it a mortgage by conditional sale as there is no ostensible sale; nor is it a usufructuary mortgage as there is no condition that the mortgagee should receive the rents and profits and appropriate them in lieu of interest. In fact, the document does not provide any rate of interest. Moreover, the possession of the mortgagee is not to continue until payment of the mortgage-money, but for a fixed period of one year after which the transaction is to become a sale. In Visvalingha Pillai v. Palaniappa Chetti (4) a mortgage for a fixed period was treated as an anomalous mortgage.

It is argued that, if the document be treated as a combination of two forms of mortgage, such, for instance, as a simple mortgage and a usufructuary mortgage combined, all the distinguishing features, such as possession by the mortgagee, necessarily cannot be retained; but at least, we may expect to find such features present as are not contradictory to the features of the other kind of mortgage with which it is combined. But that is not the case here. Taking the document to be an anomalous mortgage the parties must, by the provisions of section 98, be strictly bound by the terms of their contract, and neither the conditions of section 60 as to the survival of the rights of redemption nor the English principles of equity can be applied. [Vide Gopalan Nair v. Kunhan Menon (5).]

A number of other decisions have been cited, in which by applying the principles of English equity the right of redemption has been held to subsist even after the document declares it to have ceased. Such are the decisions in Thumbusamy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (6), Ramasami Sastrigal v. Samiyappanayakan (7) and Kola Venkatanarayana v. Vuppala Ratnam (8), in which the document was described as 'meddatu krayam' and contained terms similar to those in the documents before us. These decisions relate to documents executed before the year 1882, when the Transfer of Property Act was introduced and settled the law on the subject of mortgages. Between 1858 and 1882 the Courts of this Presidency and of Bombay applied doctrines which the English Courts of Equity applied to mortgages in England; but in dealing with documents executed since 1882 the Courts are bound to apply the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. [See Neelakandhan v. Tirunilai Ananthakrishna Ayyar (9) and Ramayya v. Gururua (10).]

The second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. He sued to redeem a mortgage dated 20th March 1894. The material portion of the document runs as follows: "Within these limits a house site together with a thatched house thereon we have mortgaged, that is, we have kept it as a possessory mortgage and have received Rs. 10 (ten rupees) from you. So having paid the principal and interest pertaining to these ten rupees within the end of a year from the said date we shall take possession of our house and site. If we do not act according to the said condition we shall quit the land and house as if this is a sale." The deed purports to be a meddatu sharatu tanaka.

Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit was barred, as the mortgagee became the owner and was in possession as owner of the property from 1895 and that there was consequently no mortgage to redeem. It is argued by Mr. Nagabhushanam that the rule of law, "Once a mortgage always a mortgage", applied to the present case and that it was not competent to the parties to contract themselves out of the rule by a stipulation which is invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption.

Reference has been made to section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act and to Samuel v. Jarrah Timber and Wood-Paving Corporation (11), Perayya v. Venkata (12), Ramasami Sastrigal v. Samiyappanayakan (7), Kola Venkatanarayana v. Vuppala Ratnam (8), Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (3), Neelakandhan v. Tirunilai Ananthakrishna Ayyar (9), Bapuji Appaji v. Senavaraji Ma wadi (13).

Whatever doubts may exist, when the position of mortgagee was converted into that of a purchaser by a distinct subsequent contract between the parties, the decisions referred to above show that a clause covenanting for an absolute title in default of redemption within the stipulated period in a deed of mortgage falling within any of the kinds of mortgages defined in section 58 of the Transfer of Pro-

erty Act, a combination thereof referred to in section 98 is governed by section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, is invalid and does not prevent the mortgagee from redeeming. The following observations of Justices Muttusami Iyer and Shephard in Perayya v. Venkata (12) are clear and in point: "According to this argument the stipulation in the mortgage instrument, that if the money is not paid within the date fixed, the instrument shall itself be considered as an absolute sale-deed, coupled with the fact of failure to pay within the time fixed, must be deemed to be an act of the parties extinguishing the right of redemption. In our judgment this is not a tenable position, and the act of parties, a phrase used here and elsewhere in the Act in contradiction to 'operation of law', must denote a release or other such transaction standing apart from the mortgage transaction under which the right of redemption comes into existence. There is no extinguishment of the right by act of parties when, by virtue of a stipulation contained in the very contract under which the right is created, that right ceases to exist."

Reference has been made by Mr. Ramadoss for the respondent to Usuman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (1) first reported in (1912) M. W. N. 995 and referred to by the lower Appellate Court and it is argued that possession by the mortgagee for 12 years after the date referred to in the deed of mortgage confers on him title as purchaser. It appears from the facts reported that there was a separate release-deed for a fresh consideration. Their Lordships Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Aiyar were of opinion that though the release-deed owing to want of registration would not confer immediate ownership, yet it operates to change the character of possession of mortgagee into possession as owner. There is nothing in the judgment to indicate that their Lordships were overruling the decision of Perayya v. Venkata (12) or laying down the rule that a recital in the mortgage-deed itself would alter the nature of the possession.

I am of opinion that if the mortgage in question can be brought under any of the clauses defined in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act or can be said to be a combination referred to in section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act, the clause in the deed of mortgage to the effect that it shall operate as a sale, is invalid as being a clog on the equity of redemption and that the plaintiff's right to redeem is not affected.

The next question is whether the mortgage in question can fall under any of the above clauses.

It has been argued by Mr. Nagabushanam for the appellant that the mortgage is one by conditional sale or at least a combination of a simple and a usufructuary mortgage and reference has been made to Kola Venkatanarayana v. Vuppala Ratnam (8) and to Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (3). Meddatu krayam has been defined by Wilson in his Glossary as "land mortgaged with the option to the lender to consider it as his property if the mortgage is not redeemed within a stipulated period," and the words "meddatu sharatu tanaka" in the suit document mean the same thing. In Kola Venkatanarayana v. Vuppala Ratnam (8) above referred to, the terms of the document were similar to those of the suit bond. Their Lordships the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Benson held that there was a mortgage by conditional sale. Though the document was executed before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, their Lordships were inclined to the view that the instrument in question, which provided for the payment of the sum due within a fixed date and in default constituted the mortgagee owner, fell within the definition of a mortgage by conditional sale in section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. If the definition given in section 58 is strictly applied, it is doubtful whether a transaction which at its inception is a deed of mortgage with possession and which is to ripen into a sale on the happening of a certain contingency, can be said to be a mortgage where the mortgagor ostensibly sells the property with a covenant for redemption or reconveyance if the mortgage-money is paid. In Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (3), Sadasiva Aiyar, J., was of opinion that such a mortgage was not a mortgage by conditional sale but "a mortgage with a clause for providing for future conditional sale". Though the 29 Madras case was referred to during the course of the argument, it has not been referred to and distinguished. Spencer, J., was not disposed to place a strict interpretation on section 58, clause (c), and refers to cases where mortgages like those in question are described as mortgages by conditional sale.

All the cases where mortgages like the present were treated as mortgages by conditional sale were cases of mortgages created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. I agree with Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in thinking that a mortgage like the present one is not a mortgage by conditional sale. It also does not fall within the definition of either a simple or a usufructuary mortgage. It is not a simple mortgage as possession has been given and there is no covenant to pay or a right given to the mortgagee to bring the property to sale; nor is it a usufructuary mortgagor as there is no provision for the appropriation of the rents and profits towards the principal or interest due and possession as mortgagee is to be only for a year. I do not think that the mortgage can be said to be a combination when the essential ingredient of each of the classes is wanting, at least when such elements do not contradict each other and so can find place in the document.

I am of opinion that the mortgage in question is an anomalous mortgage falling within the provisions of section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act. It has been argued that the principles of equity, which form the basis of a series of decisions between 1858 and the date of the passing of the Transfer of Property Act whereby any agreement entered into at the time of the mortgage having the effect of clogging the right of redemption was declared inoperative, should be applied to anomalous mortgages, even though section 98 of the Act enacts that in cases of anomalous mortgages the rights and liabilities of the parties shall be determined by their contract as evidenced by the mortgage-deed. It is contended that the Court ought not to enforce illegal or invalid stipulations.

I do not see any sound reason for departing from the language of section 98 and importing an exception not mentioned therein. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pattabhiramier v. Venkatarow Naicken (14), mortgages like the (14) 13 M. L. A. 560; 15 W. R. P. C. 35; 7 B. L. R. 136; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 410; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 623; 20 E. R. 660.

mortgage in question were long common in India and were recognized and enforced according to their letter both by Hindu and Muhammadan Jurists and that what is known in English Law as the equity of redemption was unknown to the ancient law of India. In Thunbuswamy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council observe that the decision in Pattabhiramier v. Venkatarow Naicken (14) was based on sound principles and that the course of decisions which imported into the consideration of Hindu mortgages principles founded on the maxim, once a mortgage always a mortgage, of the English Court of Equity, were radically unsound, and involved very mischievous consequences.

It is thus clear that there is nothing opposed to the Hindu Law or to the general principles of equity or good conscience in giving effect to the terms of the contract, and it seems to me that the Legislature in enacting section 98 intended to take such mortgages as did not fall within the classes specified therein out of the rule which prevents clogs on the equity of redemption, a rule which their Lordships of the Privy Council thought was erroneously imported into Hindu mortgages. Neelakandhan v. Tirumilai Ananthakrishna Ayyar (9), Ramayya v. Guruva (10) support the view that the terms of the contract ought to be strictly enforced in cases of anomalous mortgages.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 908), Sec. I, Art. 164—Decree before the Act—Execution—Application to set aside ex parte decree—Law of limitation applicable.

Where an ex parte decree was passed when the Limitation Act of 1877 was in force but an application to execute it was made after Act IX of 1908 came into force:

Held, that an application to set aside the decree by the judgment-debtor would be governed by Act IX of 1908.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh, rejecting an application for setting aside a decree passed ex parte against the appellant in 1904. Her case was and is that she did not come to know of the decree in question until a proclamation of sale was brought to the village in December 1912, that is less than 30 days before she presented her application. The evidence shows that the plaintiffs in the suit made repeated efforts to serve her personally with notice of the suit and of subsequent proceedings. Substituted service was effected and declared to be sufficient by the Court. She has herself sworn that she did not come to know of the decree against her until a few days before she made her application. Evidence has been produced on behalf of the respondents, which has been accepted by the Court below, that she was aware of the suit at the time when it was pending and was anxious to enter into a compromise. It is almost inconceivable that she should have remained ignorant of this suit, as she says, for eight or nine years. She says that she has been quarrelling with her son-in-law for the last twenty years. She must have other relatives who must have come to know of the suit, and we think there can be little doubt that she knew of the suit while it was pending. We accept the evidence which has been produced by the respondents to prove that she was aware of the suit. It is contended that the application should be governed in the matter of limitation, not by Article 164 of the Limitation Act which was in force at the time when the appellant made her application but by Article 164 of the Limitation Act of 1877, which provided that an application, to set aside a judgment ex parte might be made within 30 days from the date of executing any process for enforcing the judgment. It is conceded that no such process was executed before the passing of the new Limitation Act. It has been repeatedly held that in a case of this kind the law of limitation to be applied is the law existing at the time when the application is made. It is sufficient to refer to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Hope Mills Ltd. v. Vithaldas Pranjivandas (1). There can be no doubt that the application is governed by the present Limitation Act and is barred thereby and was rightly dismissed both on the merits and also on the ground of limitation. This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam in Small Cause Suit No. 692 of 1913.

Mr. K. Bhashyan Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, V. S. Govindachariar and V. S. Kallabhiran Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The finding in this case is that the mother of the defendant as his guardian borrowed from the plaintiff the amount sued on, and that it was spent for purposes binding on him. The question of law argued very strenuously by Mr. Bhashyam Iyengar is that as the promissory note executed by the mother was not signed by her as guardian, she alone is liable on the note and that the decree against the defendant is wrong. He relies on the language of section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and contends that the principle which renders the agent personally liable on a contract entered into on behalf of the principal applies to the case of guardians also. The short answer to this contention is that, as the Act contains no provision relating to notes signed by guardians whereas it specifically legislates for the case of agents in section 28 and of legal representatives in section 30, Courts should not by analogy extend these provisions to a deliberately unprovided case. The learned Vakil drew our attention to section 26 of the Bills of Exchange Act as enunciating the principle applicable by law merchant to all cases of representation. Apart from the question whether section 26 was intended to apply to documents executed by guardians, it is evident from the omission of the general section and the inclusion of specific provisions like those to which we have already referred, that the Indian Legislature has not thought fit to lay down any general rules applicable to all cases of representation. The case of one person signing for another who is sui juris is not in pari passu with that of a person executing a document on behalf of another who is incapable of contracting.

The decisions in Koneti Naicker v. Jutu Gopala Aiyar (1), Govindan Nair v. Nannu Menon (2) and Yinugantti China Venkatarayanim v. Katagiri Venkata Narasimharayanim (3) construe the provisions relating to agents. They can afford no assistance to us in deciding the present case. Ramaswami Mudaliar v. Muthuswami Ayyar (4) is not a pronouncement on a question of law. The learned Judges were not prepared to accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the debt was contracted by the mother in her capacity as guardian.

As we are not hampered by any legislative provision regarding documents executed on behalf of a minor, we must be guided by the principles of Hindu Law in deciding such case. The true test regarding the binding nature of a guardian's contract was laid down in the well-known case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonwecree (5). Even where the relationship of principal and agent was found to exist in transactions entered into by managers of Hindu families, it was decided by a Full Bench of this Court that section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act did not affect the liability of the junior members. The true principle is that where the validity of a transaction has to be looked at from two standpoints, each of them should be regarded as supplementing the other. The doctrine of Hindu Law is not to be ignored because a contract coming under its purview is also regulated by another provision of law. The decision of Subba Narayana Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Iyer (6) does not differ from the ruling in Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (7). On the other hand the decision of Subramania Iyer v. Arumuga Chetty (8) is directly in point.

RAJMANGAL MISIR v. MATHURA DUBAIN.

Mr. Bhashyam Iyengar sought to distinguish this case on the ground that the claim in it was for the debt evidenced by the note and not on the note itself. We do not think this distinction has any substance. Moreover paragraph 4 of the plaint in this case refers to the binding character of the debt; Vide Sobhanadri Appa Rau v. Sriramulu (9). We must, therefore, hold that the estate of the minor is liable for the debt.

We think the decree of the Court below must be modified, as there can be no personal decree against the defendant. Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma Ltd. (10).

Subject to this modification the civil revision petition will be dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 33, 70—Statement made by witness in ex parte proceedings, whether admissible in evidence in subsequent proceeding of the case—Admission made before Registering Officer, if proves execution.

A witness was examined in a suit on a bond to prove its execution. The suit was decreed ex parte. At the instance of the defendant the decree was set aside and the case was restored to its original number. In the meantime the witness died. His statement was sought to be relied on to prove execution:

Held, that the fact of the service of process before the passing of the ex parte decree, not having been proved, the statement of the witness as to the execution of the document was not admissible in evidence under section 33 of the Evidence Act. [p. 577, col. 1.]

The "admission" referred to in section 70 of the Evidence Act is an admission in the course of the very proceedings, for example, made in the pleadings or by a party himself in his examination. The admission of the execution of a document by the executant before the Sub-Registrar contained in the certificate endorsed on the document is not sufficient proof of its execution when a suit is brought on it. [p. 577, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Gorakhpur.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju (for Mr. Iswar Saran), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit on foot of a mortgage, dated the 3rd of February 1888. The original amount secured was Rs. 251. The amount claimed for principal and interest is Rs. 1,384. There is no allegation of any payment upon foot of principal or interest from the time of the execution of the deed, and the suit was not instituted until the 10th of August 1909, that is to say, in or about twenty-one years after the alleged execution of the mortgage. Defendant No. 1 is the widow of the alleged original mortgagor, one Bandhu Dube. Defendant No. 2 is alleged to be a subsequent transferee at an auction-sale held on foot of another mortgage alleged to be pious to the mortgage in suit. An ex parte decree was obtained on the 30th of November 1909. This ex parte decree was set aside on the 21st of January 1913 on the applications of Musammil Mathura, the plaintiff No. 1, who satisfied the Court that she had not been served with the process. When the Court was granting the decree ex parte, a witness of the name of Baldeo was produced who stated that he was the sole surviving attesting witness to the mortgage and that he had seen the bond executed by Bandhu. He identified the signature of Bandhu and his own. The ex parte decree having been set aside, as already stated, the plaintiff was called upon to prove his case as in a contested suit. Meanwhile Baldeo had died. A witness was produced who attempted to prove that the signature of Baldeo was in the hand-writing of the latter. He was unable to say that he had ever seen Baldeo write or that he had ever received documents purporting to have been written by Baldeo in answer to documents written by him or that documents written by Baldeo had in the ordinary course of business been habitually submitted to him. In other words, he was unable to say that he was "acquainted" with the hand-writing of Baldeo. Under these circumstances the Court of first instance held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the mortgage sued upon and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance.

In second appeal to this Court it has been contended that the evidence of Baldeo given at the time the ex parte decree was granted should have been admitted as evidence of the due execution of the document. Section 33 of the Evidence Act provides, amongst other things, that the evidence given by a witness in a judicial proceeding is relevant for the purpose of proving in a subsequent judicial proceeding, or at a later stage of the same judicial proceeding, the truth of the facts which it states when the witness is dead. It is under this section that the appellants contend that the evidence of Baldeo should have been admitted by the Courts below. There is, however, a proviso to the section that before the evidence of a deceased witness can be admitted, it must be shown that the adverse party in the first proceedings had the opportunity of cross-examination. So far as Musammatt Mathura is concerned it is clear that she had no such opportunity, it having been found by the Court that she was never served with the process prior to the granting of the ex parte decree. It is contended that as defendant No. 2 did not apply to have the ex parte decree set aside, it must be taken that he had an opportunity of cross-examining the witness. The affidavit of the process-server, made in the absence of defendant No. 2 when the suit was first instituted, is relied on. In our opinion this is not sufficient. If it was intended to use the statement of Baldeo as evidence against defendant No. 2, it would at least have been necessary to prove by the oral evidence of the witness who had served him with the process, or the fact of service. It was not sufficient to refer to the ordinary affidavit of service made by the process-server. It is unnecessary to decide whether if the process-server had been produced, his evidence would have been sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to put the evidence of Baldeo, but it seems to us clear that without the evidence of the process-server the evidence of Baldeo was not admissible against either of the defendants. There was no evidence of the execution or due attestation of the document sued upon.

It was next contended that the certificate of the Registrar endorsed upon the bond proves an admission by Bandhu that he executed the document, and reliance is placed upon section 70 of the Evidence Act. This section provides that the admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested. It seems to us that the admission referred to in this section is an admission in the course of the very proceedings, for example, made in the pleadings or by a party himself in his examination. The contention is that the certificate contains an admission by Bandhu and that under the provisions of section 60, clause (2), the certificate of the Registrar is sufficient proof that Bandhu made the admission. In our opinion this contention goes much too far. The certificate endorsed by the Registering Officer upon a document which requires registration is evidence that all the provisions of the Registration Act have been duly performed.

It may be said that the plaintiffs have been somewhat unfortunate. They have themselves to blame in the first place, because they waited so long before instituting their present suit. But for the period of grace allowed by the recent Limitation Act the suit would have been barred by time. If the finding of the Court below was correct that the defendants or at least one of them was not duly served, this also was the fault of the plaintiffs.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where there has been no relinquishment in favour of a reversioner, nor is any such relinquishment alleged which would accelerate the estate in his favour he cannot successfully maintain a suit for immediate possession of the estates. [p. 580, col. 1.]

A claim to a declaration of right is governed by Article 120 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act and the time begins to run from when the right to sue accrues. [p. 580, col. 2.]

A relinquishment by daughters of their right of inheritance to their father's estate does not amount to waste of the original estate to justify the Court in considering whether the estate should be taken out of their hands. A Hindu lady, in such a position has an absolute right and full power to alienate the estate for the period of her enjoyment, to an outsider. That will not give a reversioner the right to come in and plead waste and insist on the estate being brought into possession by the Court. [p. 581, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff, Sarabjit Pratap Bahadur Sahi, from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saran dismissing his suit. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain properties as heir of his maternal grandfather, Sri Kishun Singh. The genealogical table attached to the plaint shows the relationship between the parties. Sri Kishun Singh died on 29th July 1872 leaving a widow, Kamalbas Koeri, and two daughters, Ram Kawal Koeri, defendant No. 3, and Raj Kishori Koeri, defendant No. 4. The plaintiff is one of the sons of Ram Kawal Koeri. His elder brother, Raja Shatrugit Protap Bahadur Sahi, died on 8th October 1898. Kamalbas Koeri, the grandmother of the plaintiff, died on 9th September 1899. Raj Kishori Koeri had one son, Ram Narayan Singh, who died on 12th December 1910. The plaintiff's suit was filed on 2nd September 1911. During the pendency of the suit, namely, on 25th January 1913, the plaintiff's mother, defendant No. 3, died. The parties defendant are No. 1 Bhagwat Koeri, the widow of Mahabir Prosad Singh, No. 2 Babu Ragheswar Inder Sahi, minor son of Babu Harihar Inder Sahi, and defendants Nos. 3 and 4 mother and aunt of the plaintiff.

The case was argued and decided in the Court of first instance on what may be called a "demurrer," that is to say, the learned Subordinate Judge, assuming all the facts alleged by the plaintiff to be correct, decided that the plaintiff's present suit could not succeed. The defendants had put in written statements traversing many of the allegations of fact made in the plaint. It will be unnecessary to go into these questions of fact if the learned Subordinate Judge's decision is correct. The case has been argued in this Court on the same footing.

The claim of the plaintiff as shown by the prayer of his plaint was as follows: (a) That it be declared that Babu Sri Kishun Singh died while separate from his brothers, Bachu Singh and Jugal Kishore Singh, and that the plaintiff is the heir of the said Babu Sri Kishun Singh. (b) That it be declared that, after the death of Kamalbas Koeri, plaintiff as heir of Babu Sri Kishun Singh is entitled to possession of the disputed properties which appertain to his estate on the ground stated in the plaint, and the possession of the defendants as derived from Babu Bachu Singh and Babu

SARABJIT PRATAP BAHADUR SAHII v. BHAGWAT KOERI.

Mahabir Prosad Singh who had no title thereto be declared wrongful and without title. (c) That it be declared that the alienations mentioned in paragraphs 38, 39 and 40 of this plaint are invalid in so far as they relate to the estate of Babu Sri Kishun Singh and are of no binding effect on the plaintiff. (d) That a decree for recovery of possession of the disputed properties mentioned in schedule IVA by ousting the defendants be passed in favour of the plaintiff and the plaintiff be put in possession thereof. (e) That in case the Court be pleased to hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to immediate possession of the properties in suit as absolute owner thereof, the same may be reduced into proper possession and the plaintiff be placed in charge of the same as manager during the life-times of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and a declaration of plaintiff's right to possession as an absolute owner from such date as under the circumstances of the case the Court thinks proper be made in favour of the plaintiff. (f) That leave may be granted to the plaintiff to join the claim for Rs. 45,000 with the claim for the rest of the estate of Babu Sri Kishun Singh and a decree for the said Rs. 45,000, representing the price of kothis Bunwar and Basoila mentioned in paragraph 26 of the plaint appertaining to the estate of Babu Sri Kishun Singh and appropriated by the husband of the defendant No. 1, together with interest as detailed in schedule VI be passed against the defendant No. 1 to be realised from the estate of the defendant No. 1's husband. (g) That a decree for Rs. 1,05,494-5-3, being the mesne profits of the disputed properties for three years prior to the institution of the suit as detailed in schedule VII, and also for the future mesne profits from the date of suit till delivery of possession be passed in favour of the plaintiff against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. (h) That the costs of the suit with interest be awarded to the plaintiff. (i) That such other appropriate reliefs be granted to the plaintiff to which he, under the circumstances of the case, is entitled to obtain in law and equity.

That is in effect a suit for possession on declaration of the plaintiff's title with an additional prayer that, if the plaintiff be not entitled to immediate possession of the property in suit as the absolute owner thereof, he (the plaintiff) should be given possession as manager during the life-time of defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The case of the plaintiff resolves itself into three claims, first, a claim for immediate possession; secondly, if he cannot get that, a claim for declaratory relief; and thirdly, a claim to be put in possession as manager during the life-time of defendants Nos. 3 and 4.

Now, it is not disputed by the appellant that, under ordinary circumstances, his maternal grandfather's estate would not fall into his possession until the deaths, first, of his grandmother, Kamalbas Koeri, and secondly, of the daughters of Sri Kishun, namely, defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The plaintiff's suit was brought on 2nd September 1911, about a week before the twelve years from the death of Kamalbas Koeri expired. He was thus, so far as that lady is concerned, just within time in his suit for possession. But he could not hope or expect to get possession during the life-time of his mother and aunt who would take the estate before him as the daughters of Sri Kishun Singh. It would be, therefore, necessary for him to show that the estates of these ladies had expired by their deaths or in some other way. They were both alive at the date of the institution of the suit.

The plaintiff, however, alleges that by certain ekrarnamas, dated 9th July 1873, these ladies relinquished their estates in favour of Bachu Singh a brother of Sri Kishun Singh and father-in-law of defendant No. 1. In point of fact the plaintiff alleges, and this is not disputed, that there were three ekrarnamas executed on 9th July 1873, one in respect of the estate of Kamalbas Koeri, one in respect of the estate of Ram Kawal Koeri and the third in respect of the estate of Raj Kishori Koeri. The plaintiff glosses over the fact that, if the ekrarnamas of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 operated as a relinquishment of their estates, the ekrarnama of his grandmother, Kamalbas Koeri, would have the same effect. However that may be, the allegation is that the execution of those ekrarnamas was procured by Babu Bachu Singh with a view to create evidence of his jointness with his brother, Sri Kishun

SARABJIT PRATAP BAHADUR SAHI v. BHAGWAT KOERI.

Singh, and to prevent these defendants from asserting a claim as heirs of their father, Sri Kishun Singh. The question whether, Sri Kishun Singh was joint with his brothers, Bachu Singh and Jugal Kishore Singh, at the time of his death is a question of fact which would arise in the suit. We may, however, assume for the purposes of the present argument that Sri Kishun was separate from his brothers. Those ekrarnamas were executed about a year after the death of Sri Kishun Singh. The plaintiff alleges that by those ekrarnamas, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 relinquished their heritable right and in consequence, accelerated the succession of the plaintiff to the estate of his maternal grandfather. Now, in point of law, this is wholly incorrect. The estate of a Hindu widow or, as in this case, of a daughter might be determined in various ways; but as these ekrarnamas are set out in the plaint, they clearly do not amount to more than an alienation in favour of Bachu Singh. Now an alienation in favour of a third party clearly does not have the effect of accelerating the estate and entitling the next reversioner to immediate possession. The learned Pleader for the appellant in his reply referred us to certain remarks made by the learned Judges in the case of Debi Prosad Chowdhury v. Golap Bhagat (1). He argued that there had been a disclaimer at the death of Sri Kishun which would put an end to the estates of these ladies. The plaintiff, however, does not allege any such disclaimer in his plaint; on the contrary, he says that these ladies, well knowing that they had the right of inheritance to their father's estate, gave it up by these ekrarnamas a year after their father's death in consideration of certain villages granted to them by Bachu Singh in lieu of maintenance. There has been no relinquishment in favour of the reversioner in this case; nor is any such relinquishment alleged which would accelerate the estate in favour of the plaintiff as such reversioner. It follows, therefore, that during the life-time of his mother and aunt, the plaintiff could not successfully maintain a suit for immediate possession of the properties left by his grandfather Sri, Kishun Singh. His mother died pending the present appeal; but his aunt, the defendant No. 4, is still alive and her estate stands in the way of his immediate inheritance.

In the Court below, the learned Pleader for the plaintiff saw the difficulty in which he was placed and endeavoured on the principle, as Sir Rash Behari has put it; that "half a loaf is better than no bread," to obtain from the Court a declaration of the plaintiff's right as such reversioner in anticipation of the deaths of his mother and aunt, the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. As above stated, the suit is not, strictly speaking, brought for such a declaratory relief. Assuming, however, that it might be granted on the plaintiff's present prayer and that it would be proper to grant it, the question arises whether the claim in that respect can be said to be in time. In our opinion, it is clearly barred by limitation. The claim to such a declaration would be governed by Article 120 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act. The time from which the period of limitation begins to run is from when the right to sue accrues. Now, these alienations or acts of the ladies which gave the plaintiff a cause of action took place as long ago as 1873. The plaintiff was then a minor; but, assuming that a certificated guardian was appointed and his minority would extend until he was 21 years of age, as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, he would have attained majority some time in 1889. Allowing three years from that date, the suit would have had to be brought by 1892. It is thus hopelessly out of time. Even if the time were to run from Kamalbas Koeri's death, the suit would be long out of time as she died in 1899 and the suit was not brought until 1911. That disposes of the second point.

As in the Court below the plaintiff fell back upon the right to a declaratory relief on failure of his claim for immediate possession, so here an attempt was made to save the plaintiff's suit by arguing that the question of his appointment as manager should be gone into. Nothing appears to have been said in the Court below with regard to this paragraph of the plaintiff's claim. It seems to have been raised here for the first time. On the allegations of the plaintiff iff as contained in paragraph 34 of his plaint, it is clear that the relinquishment by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 of their right of inheritance to their father's estate would not amount to waste of the estate of Sri Kishun Singh, which would justify the Court in considering whether the estate should be taken out of their hands. A Hindu lady in that position has an absolute right and full power to alienate the estate for the period of her enjoyment to an outsider. That will not give the reversioner the right to come in and plead waste, and insist on the estate being brought into possession by the Court. There are no allegations in the plaint which point to anything like spoliation of the estate or indicate that the estate has, in any way, suffered or will, in any way, suffer from its being held by defendant No. 1, who is said to be in possession claiming under defendants Nos. 3 and 4. There is, therefore, no possible advantage to be gained by prolonging this litigation and opening up an inquiry which, on the allegations contained in the plaint, must necessarily prove infructuous. This is not one of that class of cases referred to by the learned Pleader for the appellant in his reply in which the denial of her own and the reversioner's title by a Hindu widow may give the reversioner an immediate cause of action, because it is necessary that he should, at the earliest stage, be allowed to support that title by adducing evidence and getting an adjudication of the Court upon it. We are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in the course that he took and in the conclusion to which he came.

It was suggested here that the case ought not to have been argued on the preliminary issue without all the issues, both of fact and of law, in the suit having been properly framed. It appears, however, that the course which was adopted was adopted by consent of both the parties and that Pleaders on both sides were taken from Calcutta before the Subordinate Judge to argue the case on these lines. There would have been no possible advantage in framing a number of issues which, in the view that the Subordinate Judge took of the case, would not have to be considered.

Agreeing, therefore, with the Court below, we dismiss the appeal with costs, two sets, to defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 4.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Saharanpur.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the appellants in this Court. They come to Court as zemindars of a village in Dehra Dun. They say that the defendant, Dhum Singh, is a tenant of a certain plot of land in that village that the defendant, Dhum Singh, and his son, Balbir Singh, members of a joint Hindu family, have cut down a number of kokat trees which stood on the land belonging to the appellants. They prayed for a decree for Rs. 50 on account of the price of trees cut down, Rs. 25 as actual and deterrent damages and for perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from interfering in any way in future with the jungle. The respondents plead that there is a custom whereby the tenants are authorized in this village to use the jungle of the zemindars. They say that they have all along cut wood from the said jungle for their own use and stored it. This cutting is confined to kokat trees which I understand to mean trees mainly used for firewood. Both the Courts have found the custom set up by the respondents not proved. Behind that finding in second appeal I cannot go. At the same time the question raised is a very big question and it may be doubted whether the decision about custom has been rightly arrived at, but as I said before I cannot go behind it in second appeal and I am bound by it so far as this case is concerned. Both the Courts have found it proved that the tenants in this village have been allowed by the predecessor-in-interest of the appellants to cut firewood free of charge in land belonging to the appellants, and out of this they have construed a license granted by the appellant's predecessors to the respondents to go upon the land in possession of the then zemindars and to cut firewood free of charge. The lower Appellate Court then went on to consider whether that license has been specifically revoked. It came to the conclusion that it had been specifically revoked when the present suit was brought. It accordingly decreed the claim for injunction but dismissed the claim for damages.

The appellants come into this Court and take the plea that after the transfer from the predecessor of the present appellants, the action of the defendants in cutting firewood was unauthorized and they are liable to pay damages found due by the first Court. I do not quite understand why they took the first plea in their memorandum of appeal, viz., that under section 62 of the Easements Act the license granted by the former zemindar may be deemed to have been revoked when he sold his rights in the village to the plaintiffs. This plea has, however, been taken and I go on to consider it. It has been contended on the opposite side that the license in the present case is not a mere license, such as would be the case if the respondents had been granted permission merely to go upon the land of the zemindar. There was, the contention runs, a license coupled with a grant, license to go upon the land coupled with the grant to cut and take firewood from the land. In support of this contention I was referred to a passage in the Tagore Law Lectures of Mr. Peacock on the Law relating to Easements in British India. Reference is there made to the case of Thomas v. Sorrell (1). Apparently the Court's library does not possess a copy of Vaughan, but the passage in question will also be found in the case of Wood v. Leadbitter (2) in which Lord Chief Justice Vaughan is reported as saying in the course of his judgment:—"A dispensation or license properly passeth no interest, nor alters or transfers property in anything, but only makes an action lawful, which without it had been unlawful. As a license to go beyond the seas, to hunt in a man's park, to come into his house, are only actions which, without license, had been unlawful. But a license to hunt in a man's park, and carry away the deer killed to his own use, to cut down a tree in a man's ground, and to carry it away the next day after to his own use, are licenses as to the acts of hunting and cutting down the tree, but as to the carrying away of the deer killed and tree cut down, they are grants." This case has been applied in Prosonna Oommar Singha v. Ram Oommar Ghose (3). Chief Justice Petheram in that case held that the law in this matter (this was anterior to the passing of the Indian Easements Act) "is the same in this country as it is in England, there being so far as we can see no common law in this country on the subject and no statutory law either. The law in England is clearly laid down in the case of Wood v. Leadbitter (2). The Courts have acted upon the law as there laid down ever since, and it has always been held to be good law and binding upon them. That case decided that the license to go upon another man's land, unless coupled with a grant, was revocable at the will of the grantor, subject to the right of the other to damages if the license were revoked contrary to the terms of any express or implied grant." I notice that in that case the very point taken in this case was also taken for the first time before the High Court.

Holding as I do that this is the law on the subject even after the passing of Act V of 1882, the case appears to me to come within section 60 of Act V of 1882. When the transfer was made, the transferee had no higher right than his transferor. The transferor was not in a position to revoke the grant or the license, because the latter was coupled with a transfer of property and such transfer is in force. I am all the better able to hold this, because as I said in the beginning of my judgment the contrary holding would be a matter of great importance in the Dun.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all Courts. Under the circumstances I do not think it necessary to take up the memorandum of objections. They fall and disappear with the result of the case.

JUDGMENT.—It is admitted that the bara taraf and cho'ta taraf were two co-sharer landlords in possession of an occupancy holding measuring 14 bighas 5 cottas through certain tenants, Torap, Dinn, Juman and Jarip. Torap transferred his half share in the holding to Ananda and Dinu's share was inherited by his son, Enait. We next find that Juman and Jarip had somehow dropped out of the holding and that there was some kind of division of the lands of the holding, and that Ananda paid rent separately of his share to the bara taraf and Enait for his share to cho'a taraf. We are concerned in the present suit with Ananda's portion of the holding. It is admitted that Ananda by a Will bequeathed his land to Bipin, the son of his mistress, Dhonomoni, and that defendant No. 3, Bonalata, the widow of Bipin, made a dar-jote settlement in favour of defendant No. 2. The plaintiff, who is the bara taraf landlord, sued defendants in this case for ejectment on the allegation that Ananda had no right to bequeath to defendant No. 3 the occupancy holding which is not transferable by custom, and that consequently the other defendants who claim as under-tenants have also no right. The basis of the plaintiff's case is that there was a division of the holding as between the landlords on the one hand and the tenants, Ananda and Enait, on the other, by which a separate non-occupancy-holding was created in favour of Ananda for an area of 7 bighas 2½ cottas with a rental of Rs. 4-12-0. Defendant No. 2 in his written statement said that he was a bona fide tenant and could not be ejected without notice. Defendant No. 1 said that he had no concern with the case and had been wrongly impleaded. Defendant No. 3 said that the tenancy had not been split up and that as the original tenant was still in possession of a part of the holding, she could not be ejected.

The learned Munsif found that there had been a splitting up of the tenancy but that upon the plaint, as framed, no decree for ejectment could be given. It appears that in the plaint the land from which it is sought to eject defendant No. 1 is not described by metes and bounds. It is merely stated that plot No. 1 consists of a certain area out of the total area of 2 bighas 8 cottas. After the evidences of both sides had been recorded, an application was made for amendment of the plaint by describing by metes and bounds the parcels from which an ejectment was sought. The learned Munsif found that the statements in the application for amendment were inconsistent with the evidence given in the case. For instance, in respect of plots in which according to the application Ananda and Enait were said to be joint, the evidence showed the exclusive possession of one party alone. It was clear, therefore, that even if he allowed the amendment of the plaint, he could not grant ejectment according to the terms, and so he dismissed the plaintiff's suit for that part of the land which is in schedule ka. We are not concerned with the lands in schedule kha and ga in this case. We need not, therefore, refer to them.

In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge found that there had been no splitting up of the tenancy at all. He, therefore, refused to eject the defendants.

The plaintiff prefers this second appeal and the only ground of law taken is that upon the facts found the Court of appeal below was bound to draw the inference that there had been a splitting up of the tenancy. Now what the learned Subordinate Judge found is this. He says that there was a division of the land, but he does not say whether each plot was divided into two equal shares or whether some plots were given to one party and some to another party. Again, he says that for the sake of convenience Ananda paid half share of the rent on account of the jote to the plaintiff. But he goes on to say that during certain punia ceremonies Enait paid some rent to the bara taraf, that is, to the plaintiff. Again he goes on to say that in a certain road-cess return the plaintiff has described Torap, the predecessor of Ananda, and Dinu, the predecessor of Enait, as his tenants; and again that, in a rent suit brought by the chhoti taraf for their share of rents, Miru, the son of Torap, and Enait, the son of Dinu, were both impleaded as tenants. It also appears even in the present case that Enait has been impleaded as a tenant. Upon all these facts, the learned Subordinate Judge has declined to come to the finding that there was a splitting up of the tenancy and I cannot interfere in second appeal. Reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants on the following cases:—Gobind Chandra Pal v. Hamidulla Bhuian (1); Panchanan Banerji

v. Raj Kumar Guha (2); Bhabatarini Dasi v. Ekabbar Malita (3) and Sailendra Nath Mitter v. Karali Charan Singh (4). These cases do not really touch the point. They merely show that it is open to a tenant, notwithstanding the terms of the section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to hold separate tenancies under co-sharer landlords in respect of their shares in the holding. If then the tenancy has not been split and the original tenant still remains on the land, there can be no abandonment within the meaning of the section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore, the plaintiff cannot eject the defendants. The appeal is dismissed with costs, only one set of costs is allowed to the different defendants.

Appeal dismissed.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Contract of sale—Breach of conditions—Penalty imposed by contract to be enforced—Damages not agreed in contract, if allowable.

The defendant purchased a site from the plaintiff at an auction under the following conditions:—

"Purchaser shall immediately after the sale pay into the Municipal Office...a deposit of 10 per cent. of the purchase-money and shall sign an agreement...and shall pay the residue of the purchase money to the vendors within a period of nine months from the date of the sale and on payment of the said amount the purchase shall be completed. If the purchaser fail to comply with any of these conditions his deposit shall be forfeited and the vendors shall be at liberty to re-sell the lot either by public auction or by private contract." The defendant made a deposit of Re. 1 only at the time of the auction-sale and failed to comply with the rest of the conditions:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover only 10 per cent. of the purchase-money which the purchaser was bound to deposit and not the loss which might accrue to the plaintiff on re-sale of the site. [p. 585, col. 1.]

ALLAHABAD IMPROVEMENT TRUST v. TIKANDRA JANG BAHADUR.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge of Allahabad, dated the 22nd January 1915.

FACTS appear fully from the judgment.

Mr. B. B. O'Connor, for the Appellant:—The defendant having refused to pay the balance, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for damages to the extent of the loss sustained. The right to sue for such damages was not limited to the conditions in the notice. The conditions of the sale clearly show that the defendant is liable. The clause as to forfeiture is not a penalty and section 74 of the Contract Act does not apply. He relied on Howe v. Smith (1); Noble v. Edwards (2); Soper v. Arnold (3); Icely v. Grew (4); Manian Pattar v. Madras Railway Company (5); Gour on Law of Transfer, 4th Edition, page 619.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent, distinguished the rulings cited by the appellant's Counsel and submitted that where a contract is silent as to the right to recover the balance of the deficit money on a re-sale, the law does not give the plaintiff any legal right independent of the contract. Section 74 is clearly applicable to the facts of this case. He also referred to and discussed In re Pettit's Estate (6); Nothard v. Proctor (7); Cornwall v. Henson (8); Leake on Contract, 6th Edition, page 771; Dart on Vendors and Purchasers, Volume I, Edition 7th, page 179; Williams on Vendor and Purchaser, Volume I, pages 42-45; Pollock and Mulla's Contract Act, page 332.

Mr. O'Connor replied.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the Allahabad Improvement Trust represented by the Municipal Board of Allahabad under the following circumstances. For the improvement of the town of Allahabad a road called the Hewett Road was opened out and land was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. Portions of the land so acquired not used for the road were sold by auction under certain conditions set forth in a document, which was signed by the Chairman of the Municipal Board and the person bidding at the auction-sale. The defendant purchased a plot of land for Rs. 3,900. He made a deposit of Re. 1 only and did not pay the balance of the price. The Municipal Board after issuing notice to the defendant re-sold the land. The amount realized at the re-sale was Rs. 875. The present suit was accordingly brought to recover the difference, namely Rs. 3,024, from the defendant. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. Upon appeal the learned District Judge modified the decree of that Court and passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour for the amount of the deposit which the defendant was bound to make under the terms of the contract. In our opinion the whole case turns upon the true construction of the provisions of the instrument called "the conditions of sale", which was the contract between the parties to which we have referred above. Clause 4 of this document provides that each purchaser shall immediately after the sale pay into the Municipal Office, Allahabad, to the credit of the Allahabad Improvement Trust, a deposit of 10 per cent. of his purchase-money and shall sign an agreement in the form sub-joined, and shall pay the residue of the purchase-money to the vendors within a period of nine months from the date of the sale and on payment of the said amount the purchase shall be completed." Clause 8 provides that "if any purchaser fail to comply with any of these conditions, his deposit shall be forfeited and the vendors shall be at liberty to re-sell the lot or lots sold to him either by public auction or by contract". As we have stated above, the deposit required by rule 4 was not made nor was the residue of the purchase-money paid within the term fixed. There was thus a failure to comply with the conditions laid down in the document, and the provisions of clause 8 could be enforced. As we understand that clause it gives the vendor the right to re-sell the lot, but the penalty which it provides is the forfeiture of the deposit which the purchaser was bound to make. The Municipal Board, upon the purchase by ing made by the defendant, was entitled to obtain from the defendant the deposit of 10 per cent. of the purchase-money. This amount they were entitled to recover under clause 8 as soon as a breach of the conditions of the document was committed. They also acquired the right to re-sell the property, but under clause 8 the right of re-sale did not carry with it a right to recover damages sustained by reason of any deficiency arising in the amount of purchase-money realized by the re-sale. The parties must be bound by the contract which they entered into, and we have to consider what their intention was when clause 8 was inserted in the document. If it had been intended that upon failure to perform any of the conditions of sale, the vendee would be liable to pay damages arising upon re-sale, one would have expected that such a condition would find place in the document. The absence of such a condition leads to the inference that the only penalty incurred by the vendee is the forfeiture of the 10 per cent. of the purchase-money which he was bound to deposit. In this view the English cases and other authorities cited before us have no bearing on this case and need not be considered. In our opinion the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right and this appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss it with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for a declaration that certain properties which were in the plaintiffs' possession were their property. The properties, it is found, had been in the possession of their relation one Roshan Ali, through whom the defendants claim, until his death when they were taken possession of by the plaintiffs. The plaint alleged that they were originally the property of one Mirja Mahommed Beg and that on the death of his widow they were inherited by the children of Imam Ali Khan, from whom the plaintiffs, Roshan Ali and the 5th defendant are descended and alleged that defendants Nos. 1 to 4, who are the descendants of Roshan Ali, were disentitled to share in the inheritance by reason of their illegitimacy, but their legitimacy is not now questioned. The defendants denied that the plaintiffs ever had any right to the suit properties and alleged that they had dispossessed the defendants after Roshan Ali's death in 1909. They alleged that part of the suit properties had belonged to Mahommed Beg who had bequeathed them to Roshan Ali, but it is not necessary to go into this question, because it appears that Mahommed Beg was only related to the wife of Imam Ali by virtue of an alleged adoption not recognized by Muhammadan Law and that, therefore, the plaintiffs are not in his line of heirs and have no claim to succeed to his property. This claim is not now pressed. The written statement, however, alleged that Imam Ali Khan owned 71.25 acres in the same village which are also part of the suit lands and set up in effect that the 1st plaintiff and the father of the other plaintiffs, who as well as the defendants are heirs of Imam Ali, had abandoned these lands and left them to Roshan Ali, the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 4, in 1875. Thus whereas the plaintiffs mistakenly set up that the suit lands had all been the property of Mirja Mahommed Beg, the defendants claimed some of them on the ground that they were the property of Imam Ali and that the 1st plaintiff and the father of the other plaintiffs had abandoned their share in them. The parties joined issue (issues 5 and 6) on these allegations and went to trial on them, and in these circumstances we think it is too late for the defendants to object that the plaintiffs did not in their plaint claim any of the suit properties by inheritance from Imam Ali.

It would, no doubt, have been more correct if the plaint had been amended, but it is clear that the parties went to trial on the question whether the 1st plaintiff and his brother had relinquished their claim to share in the suit lands which had belonged to their father, Imam Ali, and abandoned them to Roshan Ali, the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 4.

Exhibit M shows that in 1842 the suit village had been partitioned between Imam Ali and the widow of Mahommed Beg. Imam Ali would appear to have died about 1861 and Exhibit B of that year is an inam statement, which would appear to have been drawn up as if to be presented by Imam Ali himself but is signed by his son Roshan Ali. It shows Roshan Ali in actual enjoyment and gives the other members of his family. Exhibit C is a power-of-attorney taken by him from his sisters in respect of their shares. Exhibit 3 is the plaint in a pauper suit of 1882 in which the 1st plaintiff and the father of the other plaintiffs sued their brother, Roshan Ali, alleging that Imam Ali had died about 20 years ago and that Roshan Ali and they lived together until 1873 when Roshan Ali took possession of all the lands and had been enjoying the shares of the plaintiffs therein. In his counter-petition, Exhibit 12, which was in lieu of a written statement, Roshan Ali admitted the right of the plaintiffs in that suit to share in the property of their father, but alleged that he had been in management and incurred debts to the extent of Rs. 3,000 for the purposes of the family and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover their shares until this debt was paid off. Exhibit K is his deposition in which he stated that the village had been partitioned between Moosa Bi, widow of Mohammed Beg, and Imam Ali, that at the time of Imam Ali's death it was in the sole possession of Moosa Bi, that at the time of the Inam Commission in 1861 he obtained a separation of their share, that from 1863 they had divided profits and that he was willing to give the plaintiffs their share in the 71 acres if they paid their share of the debt. Exhibit 4 shows that the suit of 1882 was dismissed at settlement of issues, on the ground that the plaintiffs had no right to sue without joining the other heirs of their father, Imam Ali. The Subordinate Judge has found, and the evidence shows, that from 1882 and earlier Roshan Ali was in exclusive possession and enjoyment of 71.25 acres of the suit lands which had belonged to Imam Ali, but his own admissions above set out show that he got into possession of these lands on behalf of the whole family, and this being so, his possession enured for their benefit and he could not make it adverse to them. See Corea v. Appuhamy (1). We are, therefore, unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge that the suit is barred by limitation and as regards the 71.25 acres, we reverse the decree of the lower Court and remand the case for disposal according to law. There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed; Suit remanded.

MA SEIN TON v. MA SON.

A judgment-debtor had previously obtained a money-decree against his decree-holder in another Court. In the execution of his decree he got the decree against himself attached under Order XXI, rule 53, of the Civil Procedure Code. The execution petition was eventually dismissed for default but on that date the decree against him which had been attached by him was barred by time. The decree holder applied for the execution of his decree:

Held, that the attachment of the decree operated as stay of the execution by order of Court and the period during which the decree remained attached should be excluded in commutation of the limitation for execution of that decree.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Mozafferpore, dated the 17th of July 1913.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtors against an order of the Subordinate Judge ordering execution of a decree against them. It appears that this decree was passed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on 16th February 1910. Before that, the judgment-debtors had obtained a decree also for money in the Munsif's Court for presumably a lesser amount. In execution of that decree, the judgment-debtors, instead of applying as they should have done for a set-off, attached the present decree under Order XXI, rule 53, Code of Civil Procedure. The decree being passed by a different Court from that in which the judgment-debtors had obtained their decree, the attachment must have been made under clause (1) (b) of that rule, that is to say, by a notice by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed requesting the other Court to stay the execution of the decree unless and until the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed cancelled the notice or the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor applied to the Court receiving such notice to execute its own decree. The effect of that attachment would be to stay the execution of this decree unless and until these events happened. Now, in this case those events never did happen and the execution case lasted until 26th July 1910, when it was dismissed for default. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that this period must be excluded under section 15 of the Limitation Act; and, if the period be excluded, admittedly the present application for execution of this decree which was made on 18th April 1913 would be in time.

We are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was right in the conclusion to which he came. The effect of the attachment was to stay the execution. Is that a stay of the execution by an order of Court as stated in section 15 of the Act? It is argued for the appellants that that order must be made by the Court which passed the decree. In such a case of attachment there is really no necessity for the Court to make any separate order. The stay operates automatically on the receipt of the notice from the Court which attaches the decree. We think that it must be regarded as a stay by order of Court.

So far as the merits of the case are concerned, there are no merits whatever in favour of the appellants. What, of course, should have been done in this case was to set off the decrees of these two parties—the one against the other.

We dismiss the appeal with costs. Hearing fee three gold mohurs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Burmese Buddhist Law—Widow's right of disposal of joint property of herself and her husband.

Subject to any claim by the eldest son to a certain specified property, such as his father's elephant, pony, betel box, etc., and to a quarter share of the joint property as orasa son, a Burmese Buddhist widow has an absolute right of disposal over the whole of the joint property of herself and her late husband as against the children of their marriage. [p. 592, col. 2; p. 593, col. 2.]

Ma On v. Ko Shwe Tha Dun, L. B. R. (1872-92) 378, dissented from.

MA SEIN TON v. MA SON.

FACTS appear from the following order of reference, dated the 24th February 1915, made by TWOMEY, J.—In 1908 Ma Dun, the widow of U E, mortgaged a certain house and a piece of garden land measuring 6.60 acres to one J. D'Cruz, alias Po Maung. Both house and land were the joint property of Ma Dun and U E having been acquired during their married life. The mortgagee brought a suit on the mortgage and obtained a decree for sale against Ma Dun.

The four children of Ma Dun and U E then brought this suit against D'Cruz's widow, Ma Son (who has Letters of Administration to his estate) praying for a declaration that one half of the mortgaged property is the ancestral property of the four children. They pleaded that as the property was mortgaged without their consent and without "necessity" their interest in the property is not affected by the mortgage. The widow, Ma Dun, was joined as co-defendant.

The Township Court decided that the property was the joint property of Ma Dun and her husband, that on her husband's death Ma Dun had absolute power of disposal over only one half of the property except in case of necessity, that the mortgage in this case was not for necessary subsistence, that the oldest daughter, Ma Hmwe On, was aware of and assented to the mortgage and was, therefore, bound by the transaction, but that the remaining three children (a son and two daughters) did not assent and were not bound. A decree was given declaring the rights of these three children in the property. Ma Shwe On did not appeal and so far as she is concerned, there is an end of the matter. But the mortgagee's representative, Ma Son, appealed to the District Court, which decided in his favour that the three children were also privy to the mortgage and that they were bound by it as much as their elder sister, Ma Hmwe On. These three younger children have now appealed to this Court.

On the facts, I think, the District Judge has come to a wrong conclusion. It is beyond dispute that the three appellants were not parties to the mortgage and even if they took no steps immediately when they heard of the transaction, that would not deprive them of any rights they may have had in the property. One of them was a minor at the time of the mortgage and as regards her the District Judge says: "her mother's acts, if not contrary to her interest, might be taken as binding her". But Ma Dun did not purport to mortgage the property on her own behalf and her children. She mortgaged it as sole owner. Moreover the respondent did not plead that Ma Dun's children assented to the mortgage. Her plea was that the property was mortgaged to raise money for the necessary subsistence of the family. The District Court did not deal with the question of necessity at all, but there is no reason to question the finding of the Township Court on this issue. According to Ma Dun herself the mortgage-money was required for her step-brother, Mg. Gyi, while Ma Son, the respondent, says that it was for Ma Dun's son-in-law, Mg. Nyein. Ma Son failed to prove that it was spent for necessary subsistence. Her case was that she believed Ma Dun to be sole owner. It is clear, therefore, that if Ma Dun's absolute right of disposal was restricted to one half of the property, it would be necessary to set aside the decree of the District Court.

But the correctness of the rule laid down 30 years ago in Ma On v. Ko Shwe Tha Dun (1) has lately been questioned in the Upper Burma case Mi Saw Myin v. Mi Shwe Thin (2), in which the learned Officiating Judicial Commissioner (Mr. McColl) held that under the Buddhist Law on the death of a husband his widow succeeds to the estate, with the exception of certain specified property and one-fourth of the estate which goes to the eldest daughter, that with the exception of this portion the widow is at liberty to spend the whole of the estate, if she chooses to, and not merely for necessities, and that the texts of the Dhammathats on which the doctrine that the widow can only spend the estate for necessities is based, refer to the spending of the specified property set apart for the eldest daughter and not to the spending of the bulk of the estate. The Lower Burma rule, as stated in Ma On's case (1), is that:—

"A Burmese Buddhist widow has an absolute interest in the whole of the family property on the death of her husband, but she has an absolute right in respect of her own share (i.e., one-half) and a life-interest in the remainder and she has not the right of absolute disposal of the remainder but only a power of sale in case of necessity." That rule was to a great extent based on the authority of an earlier case Nga Shwe Yo v. Mi San Byu (3), in which the Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Jardine, held that on the death of the father the children take an interest in the family property and that the widow cannot dispose of the interests of the children except in case of necessity. But as Mr. McColl points out, the learned Judges who decided Ma On's case (1) seemed to have overlooked the fact that Mr. Jardine in the later judgment of Maung Po Lat v. Mi Po Le (4) expressed considerable doubt as to the correctness of the doctrine he had laid down in Nga Shwe Yo's case (3). It appears indeed that the doctrine was evolved from Richardson's incorrect translation of section 5, Book X, of the Manukye. In the passage "if the mother uses the property for necessary subsistence" are an interpolation. The Burmese text is * * * * *

Similarly the words "from necessity" are interpolated in the translation of section 3 of Book X, which is referred to by the Judges in Ma On's case (1). The Burmese words are * * * * *

Section 5 deals with partition between a widow and the eldest son; section 3 with partition between a widower and the eldest daughter. It is only in section 4, dealing with partition between a widow and the eldest daughter, that the words reading necessity * * occur. There is nothing to show how the interpolations in the English translation of sections 3 and 5 came out. But the opinion may be hazarded that the words relating to necessity were introduced by the translator merely to affect a specious symmetry in the three sections 3, 4 and 5. I think Mr. McColl has given very good reasons for his opinion that in section 4, book X, of the Manukye and the Dhamma and Amwebon extracts given in section 31 of the ex-Kinwun Mingyi's Digest, the restriction as to spending only in case of necessity applies merely to the specified property, female slaves, cattle, etc. which is mentioned in these texts as the share of the eldest daughter, and does not apply at all to the residue of the property which goes to the widow. This appears to me to be a reasonable interpretation of the texts and I am in favour of adopting the rule as propounded in Upper Burma. Apart from these texts there is nothing in the Dhammathats to warrant the inference that the surviving parent is restricted to a life-interest as regards any portion of the family property. On the contrary Mr. Burgess in Ma Min Tha v. Ma Naw (5) quoted the following passage from the Manu Wannana as indicating clearly that children cannot stop their parents from doing as they choose with their property:—

"And if during the life-time of heirs, sale and purchase be effected by parents against the will of heirs, and if after the land shall have come to the possession of the others, and after the death of the parents, the heirs are desirous of redeeming the land, they shall have the right to do so."

It was held in that case that the heir of the deceased husband under Buddhist Law is his widow and not any of his children (except the eldest son in respect of a fourth of the estate) until the death of the widow and that the children have no such interest in the estate as is contemplated in the section 91, Transfer of Property Act. Mr. Burgess clearly considered, moreover, that this view was in accordance with the spirit of the Dhammathats which give great prominence to the parental authority.

The question arises, therefore, whether the ruling in Ma On v. Ko Shwe Tha Dun (1) restricting the widow's right of disposal of the family estate should not be reconsidered and whether the conclusion arrived at in Mi Saw Myin v. Mi Shwe Thin (2) should not be accepted as regards Lower Burma also.

The matter is one of great importance to Burmese Buddhists and I, therefore, refer the following question to a Bench of the Court:—

"What right of disposal has a Burmese Buddhist widow in the joint property of herself and her late husband?"

Mr. D. N. Palit, for the Applicants.

Mr. N. C. Sen, for the Respondents.

Mr. May Aung, Amicus Curiae.

(5) U. B. R. (1892-56,) II, 581.

MA SEIN TON V. MA SON.

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

TWOMEY, J.—Mr. May Aung appeared as amicus curiæ at the hearing of this reference and gave the Court advantage of his wide knowledge of Buddhist Law. He pointed out that the terms of the reference are wider than the facts of the case warrant, and it has been agreed that the question for decision should be narrowed down as follows:—

What right of disposal has a Burmese Buddhist widow in the joint property of herself and her late husband as against the children born of their marriage?

The matter was decided in 1885 by the Special Court's ruling in Ma On v. Ko Shwe Tha Dun (1) which has been followed ever since in Lower Burma, but the correctness of that ruling has been seriously questioned and further consideration of the Buddhist Law on the subject has become necessary.

According to the Special Court's ruling, the widow's absolute right of disposal would be restricted to "her own share" and as regards the remainder, she would have a "life-interest" with a power of sale in case of necessity.

At the outset, it may be noted that the use of the term "life-interest" to describe the widow's interest in the remainder is open to criticism. The following passages from Mr. Mayne's Hindu Law (8th Edition, pages 846 and 870) have been quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Vasonji Morarji v. Chanda Bibi (6) in dealing with the subject of a Hindu widow's interest in property inherited from her husband:

"Hindu Law knows nothing of the estates for life or in tail or in fee. It measures estates not by duration but by use. The restrictions upon the use of an estate inherited by a woman are similar in kind to those which limit the powers of a male holder but different in degree. The distinctive feature of the estate is that, at her death, it reverts to the heirs of the last male owner.

"It is not a life-estate because under certain circumstances she can give an absolute and complete title. Nor is it in any sense an estate held in trust for the rever-sioners. Within the limits imposed upon her, the female holder has the most absolute powers of enjoyment." Much the same arguments might be used with regard to a Burmese Buddhist widow's interest in the moiety of the joint property inherited by her from her husband. This has already been pointed out in Mr. Burgess's judgment in Ma Min Tha v. Ma Naw (5).

The grounds of the Special Court ruling may be briefly examined. A great part of the judgment is devoted to disposing of the extreme proposition that the surviving parent takes nothing but a life-interest in any part of the children's interest. The learned Judges thought that none of the authorities went to this length and they decided that after giving the eldest son or daughter his or her share of the property, the remainder vests in the surviving parent for himself or herself and the younger children, under Manukye, sections 4 and 5 of Book 10. They held that the surviving parent has an "ascertainable interest" in this remainder and apparently thought on the authority of Manu Wannana, section 26, that this interest was one-half. This half is at the absolute disposal of the surviving parent, but he or she could not dispose of the other half of the remainder without necessity. They accepted Mr. Jardine's ruling in Nga Shwe Yo v. Mi San Byn (3) as showing that without necessity, the surviving parent cannot dispose of the interests of the children, i. e., the interests of the younger children in the remainder.

To sum up, the younger children are referred to as receiving the remainder of the joint property with the widow in only two of the texts in section 30 of the Digest and in section 31; many of the texts say that the widow may exhaust the property in her life-time; only three of the texts in section 31 restrict the widow's power of disposal to necessitous circumstances and it is at least highly probable that the restriction in these texts applies only to the specified property assigned to the eldest daughter; the Dhammathats expressly debar the younger children from sharing in the inheritance till their mother's death and the Manu Wannana, a Dhammathat of the highest authority, lays down that the widow has not to share with the younger children, but has only to provide for them in a suitable manner; it is nowhere laid down that the younger children have "an ascertainable interest" in the joint property while their mother lives.

(6) 29 Ind. Cas. 781; 19 C. W. N. 873; 17 Bom. L. R. 556; 18 M. L. T. 31; (1915) M. W. N. 449; 2 L. W. 676; 22 C. L. J. 180; 37 A. 369; 29 M. L. J. 130.

MA SEIN TON v. MA SON.

Although the Manukye and two other Dammathats associate the younger children with the widow in taking three shares out of four when the eldest son claims partition, this provision must, I think, be interpreted as merely emphasizing the widow's natural duty of bringing up the younger children in a becoming manner, not as conferring on them any vested right in the joint property or as constituting the widow a trustee of some unascertained part thereof for their benefit.

Mr. May Aung draws attention to the extracts from Kungya in section 30 of the Digest as explaining why the widow gets three shares out of four. It runs as follows:—

"Husband and wife own property equally, that is to say, the husband is entitled to half the property and so is the wife. On the death of either husband or wife, the survivor is entitled to half of the share of the deceased. The other half is inherited by the children. In view of the above principle it is said that when the mother gets three shares out of four the children shall get one share."

This statement of principles is, however, at variance with the general rule by which the one-fourth share is assigned to the eldest son and not to the children generally.

The real principle appears to be that the widow, who owned the one half of the joint property in her husband's life-time, inherits his half when he dies, and having thus become possessed of the whole can do as she likes with it, subject to the claims of the eldest son and the eldest daughter.

As regards the eldest son, the Dammathats allot to him certain specified property (his father's elephant, pony, betel box, etc.), property appertaining to the head of the family, in addition to a quarter share of the bulk of the joint property. There appears to be no reported case of an eldest son claiming anything more than his quarter share and it may be doubted whether the rule as to the specified property is not now obsolete. The question has not yet judicially been considered. It must also be noted that the eldest son can claim a quarter share from his mother only if he has attained the full status of orasa at the time of his father's death. Also, even if there is a son who is a competent orasa the widow has to give him the quarter share only, if he claims it from her in time and does not elect to wait till her death and then share with the younger children.

As regards the eldest daughter's specified property also, there is no reported case of any such claim and the extent to which such a claim could be judicially recognised has yet to be decided. The provisions of the Manukye and other Dammathats in section 31 of the Digest are definitely in favour of such a claim; but there is reason to doubt whether the specified property was intended to be given in all cases. The nature of the property (slaves, cattle, seed grain and according to some texts, a piece of land) seems to indicate that the daughter would get it only on marrying and setting up house apart from her mother and not so long as they lived together and I have referred to certain texts which support this view (including the Manu Wannana). As noted above, it seems that the mother is allowed to exhaust the specified property for necessary subsistence and from this it would follow that the mother can retain it in her possession in case the necessity for consuming it should arise. The daughter's claim is, therefore, at best a precarious one, and there are some texts in sections 26 and 38 of the Digest which go so far as to say that the daughter is entitled only to what has been actually given to her by her parents.

I would answer the reference in this case as follows:—

Subject to any claim by the eldest son to certain specified property and to a quarter share of the joint property, a Burmese Buddhist widow has an absolute right of disposal over the whole of the joint property of herself and her late husband as against the children of their marriage.

PARLETT, J.—Having had the advantage of reading Mr. Justice Twomey's judgment I can find but little to add to his exhaustive analysis of the texts of the Dhammathats dealing with the question referred. Those which have the most important bearing upon it are collected in sections 30 to 33 of the Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest. Those in sections 30 to 31 are directly in point, dealing as they do with partition between mother and son and mother and daughter respectively on the death of the father. The texts not only prescribe the manner in which the partition should be effected but also indicate the conditions under which the right to claim it arises, and show, I think, clearly that the death of one parent is not the only condition necessary. Several of those in section 30 commence with some such proviso as "if the son is an orasi" or "if the son is one who is competent to assume the duties and responsibilities of his father". The nature of the property to be given to him also shows that the rule presupposes that the son succeeds to his father's position as head of the family and to his office, if he holds one. Thus he is allotted the household furniture and according to Mann Wannana, the family house and house-site; he also gets land, held as an emolument of office. In this connection I may note that most of the texts specify no other classes of lands than these, though some of them give the son in addition the lands worked by his father and some refer merely to lands in general. On the other hand I find only two texts Dhammathat Kyaw and Kyannet, which mention any land at all going to the mother. I think this points to a condition of affairs, not, I believe, very remote in some parts of Upper Burma, when all land was held either in return for service to the State or on a village communal system, in either of which cases it would naturally pass to a son succeeding to his father's position.

Similarly in several of the texts in sections 31, 32 and 33 in more of them than the English version indicates, the son or daughter entitled to partition is given as the eldest. Section 32 explains that the reason for allowing the son a share is to give him a fitting start in life. Nothing I think could be plainer than that these texts give no right to claim a partition to any but a grown up son or daughter, and that the eldest. Several of them refer distinctly to the existence of other children than the one whose right to a share is declared. In some, the English translation does not accurately reproduce the plural number which is used in the Burmese version. This, I think, is made even clearer by the provisions of section 34 and 35 which lay down that the children other than the eldest son or daughter are entitled to a partition only when both parents are dead; an exception to this, however, is made when one parent having died, the survivor re-marries: sections 44 to 46.

Sections 36 to 43 profess to deal with partition between a surviving parent and children living together or separately, but it can hardly be said that they really confer any such right. In the case of children living with the parent they can get nothing whilst he or she lives, nor can they protest if the estate is exhausted and nothing is left for them to inherit on the second parent's death. A son or daughter living separately is merely allowed to retain property already given by both parents; the surviving parent obtains all the joint property and any residue there may be on that parent's death goes to the children living with him or her.

I think, therefore, that the following rules may be deduced. On the death of one parent the surviving parent inherits all their joint property; if, however, the eldest son or daughter is grown up he or she is entitled to certain specified property of the deceased parent and in the case of the eldest son to a 1/4th share of the bulk of the estate. Unless the surviving parent re-marries none of the other children are entitled to claim anything until that parent's death, nor do the texts indicate that such children have an interest in the property, though their right to partition is postponed till the death of the surviving parent. Such a principle would, I think, be foreign to Burmese Buddhist Law and on the contrary many of the texts make it clear that the children cannot protest if the property is exhausted before the right to claim a partition accrues.

I concur in Mr. Justice Twomey's answer to the reference.

Fox, C. J.—I also concur in the answer proposed by Mr. Justice Twomey to the modified question under reference.

My learned colleagues are in a more advantageous position by reason of their knowledge of the Burmese language than Sir John Jardine, Mr. Mells and Mr. MacEwen were in, when they had to consider the meaning of the texts bearing on the question. The Kinwun Mingyi's collection of texts from various Dhammathats was not available when the hitherto leading case of Ma On v. Ko Shwe Tho Dun (1) was decided. Errors in Richardson's translation of the Manukye have been discovered. Under the circumstances I do not think we are offending against any principle or rule of law in re-considering the question decided in that case.

The exhaustive examination of the texts in the judgments of my learned colleagues justifies departure from a ruling which, although given nearly thirty years ago and followed in Lower Burma ever since, is now shown not to be accurate in all respects.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, J.—The appellant Ma Ein applied to the District Court of Pyapon for Letters of Administration to the estate of her daughter Ma Shwe Myit and son-in-law Maung Tun Tha who died without issue, the former on the 22nd January 1913 and the latter on the next day. Ma Ein alleged in her application that the deceased couple lived with her from the time of their marriage and had property in common with her, and that the property valued at over Rs. 22,000 was in her possession as joint owner.

The only other relatives left by the deceased are Maung Tun Tha's brother and sister, and they assigned their interest in the property to a stranger named Maung Meik. This assignee opposed the grant of Letters of Administration to Ma Ein, claiming that as Tun Tha survived his wife he inherited as her sole heir and that Ma Ein is not entitled to any part of his estate. The respondent, Maung Meik, has died and his legal representatives have been substituted on the record.

The District Judge in a very brief order accepted the caveator's plea and dismissed Ma Ein's application. The Judge entirely failed to consider the rules of Buddhist Law regulating the devolution of the inheritance in cases of this kind.

The appellant relies on section 56 of the 10th Book of Manu Kye, which is headed "The Law of Inheritance as regards the six relations of the husband and the six of the wife." The cognate texts in other Dhammathats are collated in section 308 of the ex-Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest. Section 55 of the Manu Kye provides for the case of a husband and wife dying without issue and leaving no children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren or parents surviving. In such cases certain specified distant collaterals (maternal and paternal uncles and aunts of the deceased husband and wife) are to divide the joint estate between them, but only if the two deceased have died simultaneously or within a short interval of one another. If on the other hand one shall die "before the other," the inheritance goes to the relatives of the spouse who died last in accordance with the ordinary rule. Having regard to the context, it is plain that "before the other" means "a considerable time before the other." With reference to this text Mr. Burgess remarked as follows in Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kywe (1):—

(1) U. B. R. (1897-1901), II, 66.

MA EIN v. TIN NGA.

"The apparent reason of this distinction seems to be that when husband and wife die within a short interval of each other, their joint interest in the estate is regarded as predominant, whereas when one lives long after the other, the presumption arises that the joint interest has completely merged in the sole interest of the survivor, and there is no doubt a certain amount of plausibility about such a distinction."

And Mr. Justice Irwin thought that the balance of authority is plainly in favour of such a construction, which he stated in the following words Ma Kadu v. Ma Jon (2):—

"While the husband and wife are both alive and childless the relations of both have reasonable expectations of inheriting. When they die within a short interval, the succession would seem to be governed by accident, or by the caprice of fate, rather than by a rule of law, if the relatives of the survivor exclude those of the spouse who died shortly before. After the lapse of some time, the interests of the latter naturally pass out of sight."

This construction appears reasonable and the same construction would apply to section 32 of the Manu Kye, which deals with another case of a husband and wife dying within a short interval of one another and without issue. Section 32 expressly provides for the case where parents are surviving.

£ "32nd. Parents having given their children in marriage, and in a separate residence, they both shall die, the law for the partition of their property between the parents of both."

When the parents on both sides have given their son and daughter in marriage, and they, dwelling apart from their parents, shall both die, the law by which the partition of their property is made between the parents of both is this: if any husband and wife, living in a separate dwelling, shall both die without issue, let the parents of the wife have what she brought with her at marriage; let the parents of the husband have what he brought with him originally, and let the property acquired during the marriage be divided equally between both. If they had no property originally, let the parents divide equally what they have acquired. If the wife had no original property, and the husband had, let it be divided into three shares, and let his parents have two, and the wife's parents one. If the husband had no original property, and the wife had, let it be divided into three shares, and let the parents of the wife have two, and of the husband one. If the wife dies first, and the husband after her, let the parents of the one who died first have one and those of the person who died last two shares, and pay the debts in the same proportion."

(2) U. B. R. (1905), Bud. Law, Inheritance, p. 7.

The special provision in the last sentence for the case where "the wife dies first and the husband after her" would indicate that the earlier part of the section relates to cases where the two persons die simultaneously or within a short interval of one another, while the last sentence refers to cases where a considerable interval elapsed between the two deaths.

The cognate texts are abstracted in section 347 of the Digest. They do not differ substantially from the Manu Kye.

It will be noticed that these texts do not mention co-heirs, i. e., brothers and sisters of the deceased couple, at all. The explanation may be (1) that in the case contemplated there are no surviving brothers or sisters or (2) that though surviving, they are postponed to the surviving parents of the deceased couple. We are precluded from accepting the latter explanation as a general rule, in view of the recent decision of the Privy Council in Ma Nhin Bwin v. U Shwe Gon (3) that the right of succession of brothers and sisters in preference to parents is established beyond doubt. But their Lordships were careful to distinguish the special case of parents living with the deceased. They said that Ma Nhin Bwin's case (3) "should not be held as dealing with or affecting parental rights in cases where the family continues to live together." Accordingly, though the rule given in section 32 of the Manu Kye may not now be applied to cases where the parents and children lived apart from one another, it is still applicable where they lived together, as in the present case. The correctness of this view appears to be confirmed by the provisions of various texts in the Dhammathats which prescribe schemes for partition between the parents of a person who has died childless on the one hand and the surviving husband or wife on the other. (See sections 28, 29, 30 and 31, Manu Kye, and the cognate texts of which abstracts are given in Chapter XIX of the Digest.)

The ordinary rule of inheritance under the Buddhist Law is that the husband is sole heir to the wife and the wife sole heir to the husband, whether there be issue of the marriage or not. The texts cited above show that in certain cases the surviving parent of a childless son or daughter is allowed to share with the surviving wife or husband, while brothers and sisters do not come in at all. It would seem a fortiori that when both husband and wife die within a short interval of one another and the estate is treated as the joint estate of both, a surviving parent must be recognized as having a substantial interest in the estate, if indeed he does not altogether oust all other relatives including brothers and sisters of the deceased persons, at any rate in cases where the deceased couple lived with the parent. The present case belongs to the latter class, and I would hold that Ma Ein clearly has rights of inheritance under section 32 of the Manu Kye. If Tun Tha as well as Ma Myit had left a parent surviving, then under section 22 the parent of Tun Tha would take Tun Tha's ancestral property the parent of Ma Myit would take Ma Myit's ancestral property, and the jointly acquired property of the husband and wife would be divided equally between the two parents. But as the parent of only one of the deceased is left surviving, the question will arise whether that parent entirely or only partially excludes the brothers and sisters of the other deceased. We are, however, not called upon to decide this question. It is sufficient to find for the purposes of section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, that Ma Ein is entitled to the whole or at any rate to some part of the estate of the two deceased.

It is curious that the Dhammathats should lay down definite rules for the two special cases (1) where the childless couple leave parents and (2) where they leave the six distant collaterals. In both these cases we find provisions which can only mean that, if the husband and wife die one shortly after the other, the estate is to be regarded as retaining its joint character and is to be divided accordingly. But the principle deduced by Mr. Burgess and Mr. Justice Irwin might fairly be applied generally, i.e., to all cases where a childless couple die within a short time of one another. For example, if there are no parents surviving but the husband and wife leave brothers and sisters, it would seem reasonable to deal with the estate by analogy as a joint estate.

I would set aside the order of the District Court and direct that Letters of Administration to the estate of her deceased daughter and son-in-law should be issued to the appellant Ma Ein on her furnishing security in the ordinary course. The appellant's costs in both Courts should be borne by the respondent. Advocate's fee in this Court—five gold ma-hurs.

ORMOND, J.—I concur.

Order set aside.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver. As the question is one of considerable importance and as the decisions bearing on it are not consistent with each other, I think it desirable to state my views on the subject shortly.

The lease to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is a permanent one. The plaintiff says that the produce was set apart for a religious service. I take it that the grantor was only anxious that he should be paid the rent. He gave up rights of possession, etc., when he granted this permanent lease. The original grantees paid the rent regularly for 16 years. It was after the transfer of their interests to the 3rd defendant in 1907 that default was made. There were three years' arrears of rent when the suit was brought. The document in question provides for the payment of the first year's rent with that of the second year. If rent remained unpaid even then, the lessees were liable to be evicted. The question is whether, under the circumstance above set forth, the defaulting lessees are entitled to be relieved from forfeiture. There is no statutory provision for forfeiture on non-payment of rent regarding agricultural leases. It is open to Courts to look at legislative provisions regarding the liability of other lessees and tenants as embodying the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. I cannot accede to the proposition that such a guidance should be sought only from English decisions and not from statutory provisions in this country.

Let us first see how the Legislature has treated tenants under the Estates Land Act. Chapter VI of the Act deals exhaustively with the remedies open to the landholder. He can sue for the rent or distrain. The proceedings to be taken on distraint are hemmed in with strict conditions. The landholder has to exhaust all available sources before he sells the defaulter's interest in the holding. The distress will have to be withdrawn, if the arrears are deposited or security given for their payment. Even after the commencement of the sale, the tenant is given a locus penitentiae to save his property. It is thus clear that the Legislature has provided very salutary restrictions against turning out a tenant from his fields. As regards other lessees, the Transfer of Property Act lays down that the forfeiture clause must be express. Section 114 provides for relief from the forfeiture incurred even after the institution of the suit. The Indian Statute Law, therefore, distinctly leans against forfeiture for non-payment of rent. I may also refer to section 74 of the Contract Act, which has abolished the distinction between penalty and liquidated damages and has enacted a general rule affording relief to the defaulting party under certain limitations. Now, turning to the English Law, the course of decisions leaves no room for doubt that Courts have striven against evicting tenants from their holdings. The case of Peachy v. Duke of Somerset (1), to which our attention was drawn by Mr. Sitarama Row and which was followed in the earlier decisions of this Court, enunciates the proposition that where the intention of the parties is only to enforce punctual payment, the forfeiture clause will be relieved against. In Bowser v. Colby (2) the tenant applying to redeem a forfeited lease was not required to pay the rent and costs into Court before being decreed possession. All the cases have been reviewed in Peachy v. Duke of Somerset (1) and the result of the authorities is stated to be that the proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent is regarded in equity as merely a security for the rent and that relief will be given on payment of the arrears and of the expenses incurred. In England, there can be relief after suit is brought and before judgment. There is a further indulgence given even after judgment, provided the costs of the suit are paid in addition. The period within which this latter remedy is available is now restricted to six months after judgment (15 & 16 Victoria, Chapter 76, section 210). Relief after decree may not be granted in India, as the effect of it will be to enable the executing Court to vary the decree. The decision in Nagappa v. Venkat Rao (3) proceeded on the footing that the compromise decree was only evidence of the contract between the parties and that the Court was not varying the decree in such cases. Balambhat Ravjibhat Joshi v. Vinayak Ganpat-rao Patwardhan (4) is to the same effect.

The rule to be deduced from an examination of legislative provisions and authorities bearing on the subject is that prima facie the clause for re-entry on non-payment of rent is intended only as security for the payment of the rent. Therefore, Courts should relieve against this clause, if the arrears and expenses are paid and if the parties can be placed in status quo ante. In Kilmer v. British Columbia Orchard Lands Ltd. (5) it was pointed out that Courts should not encourage the enforcement of the strict letter of the contract which contains a penal provision. The payment of the money being the principal aim of the contract, the proviso is designed to hold out a threat relating to its fulfilment. As has been concisely put in Story's Equity Jurisprudence, section 1316: "In reason, in conscience, in natural equity, there is no ground to say, because a man has stipulated for a penalty, in case of his omission to do a particular act (the real object of the parties being the performance of the act), that, if he omits to do the act, he shall suffer an enormous loss, wholly disproportionate to the injury to the other party. If it be said that it is his own folly to have made such a stipulation, it may equally well be said that the folly of one man cannot authorise gross oppression on the other side. And law, as a science, would be unworthy of the name, if it did not to some extent provide the means of preventing the mischiefs of improvidence, rashness, blind confidence, and credulity on one side; and of skill, avarice, cunning, and a gross violation of the principles of morals and conscience, on the other. There are many cases in which Courts of Equity interfere upon mixed grounds of this sort." In no country is there a greater need for the application of this beneficent statement of the law than in India; and if it is true that we are administering both equity and law in our Courts, there must be an endeavour on our part to soften the rigour of the law and to mete out substantial justice, unless our hands are tied by the Legislature.

It is this view of the functions of a Court that inclines me to hesitate to follow some of the decisions of this Court to which I shall presently refer. In Naraina Naik v. Vasudeva Bhatta (6), it was broadly laid down that if a contract provides for days of grace where rent is not paid in time, Courts should not relieve against forfeiture. Narayana Kamti v. Handu Shetty (7) is to the same effect. The learned Judges seem to suggest that the English decisions are distinguishable, inasmuch as ordinarily days of grace are not provided in lease-deeds executed in England. Our attention has been drawn by Mr. Sitarama Row to the forms of lease-deeds printed in Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant which give days of grace (see page 1069). Apart from this, I fail to see on what principle the insertion of such a clause should be held to disentitle the tenant from equitable relief. The observations of that great jurist, Story, J., are particularly applicable to such carefully designed provisions. I think the true principle is that which Ramakrishna Mullay v. Baburaya (8) enunciates. Each case must be judged by itself. The delay, the conduct of the parties, the difficulties to which the landholder had been put should be weighed against the tenant. A number of circumstances may be mentioned which would induce Courts to condone the faults of the tenant. A hard and fast rule that a contract providing for days of grace ought to be enforced strictly is not calculated to advance justice. Ramakrishna Mullay v. Baburaya (8) has been followed by Sadasiva Aiyar and Tyabji, J.J., in Vidyapurna Thirtha Swamiar v. Rangappayya (9). In Second Appeal No. 2568 of 1912, the same learned Judges relieved against non-payment of six years' arrears. The earlier decisions of this Court are all favourable to the tenants. Kottal Uppi v. Edavalath Thathan Nambudri (10) and Subbaraya Kamti v. Krishna Kamti (11). In Timmarsa Puranik v. Badiya (12) the rule of Peachy v. Duke of Somerset (1) was applied.

In the present case, the pleadings and the findings do not show that the defendants have forfeited their claim to equitable relief by any conduct on their part.

I would, therefore, reverse the decrees of the Courts below and direct that if the defendant does not pay the arrears of rent due up to November 1914 with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum as well as the costs of the plaintiff in all the three Courts within four months from the date of this decree, they shall deliver up possession of the property and this second appeal will stand dismissed with costs. If the payment is made, they shall be put in possession of the suit property, if the plaintiff has already taken possession, with mesne profits to be determined in execution.

NAPIER, J.—The only question that arises in this appeal is whether the 3rd defendant, the assignee from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 of the lease under the mulgani karar, is entitled to be relieved against forfeiture for non-payment of rent. The rent is one year in arrears and the karar, Exhibit A, allowed a period of one year before the operation of the forfeiture clause. On behalf of the plaintiff it is conceded that the forfeiture clause can be relieved against, but it is contended that where there are days of grace, the rule does not apply. On behalf of the defendants it is contended that the alleged rule that after the days of grace the clause must be enforced is not supported by authority. In Narayana Kamti v. Handu Shetty (7) and in Naraina Naik v. Vasudeva Bhatta (6) Judges of this Court undoubtedly laid down the strict rule; but in the earliest case of this Court, Kottal Uppi v. Edavalath Thathan Nambudri (10), the principle is stated to be thus: "that where the intention of the parties was that the forfeiture clause should be a penalty for the purpose of securing rent, should always be relieved against." It is true that in this case there were days of grace, but I fail to see how what was intended as a benefit to the lessee can be made use of to deprive the Court of its power to grant relief.

The latest case is Ramakrishna Mullay v. Baburaya (8). There the late Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair laid down that relief must depend upon the facts of the particular case. They distinguish the case of Narayana Kamti v. Handu Shetty (7), on the ground that in that case a long period was allowed, some eight months, and there was no stipulation that the tenant should in default lose the value of his improvements; and rely on the doctrine laid down in the case of Kottal Uppi v. Edavalath Thathan Nambudri (10) and on Mahalakshmi Amma v. Lakshmi (13), a case in which a period of grace was allowed and in spite of that, the clause was relieved against. I quite agree that the question must to a certain extent depend upon the facts of each particular case, but I think that it is necessary to decide whether the existence of days of grace is a bar as held in the two cases quoted above.

It is sought to apply the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act as laying down the principle which should guide the Court, although admittedly those sections do not apply to agricultural leases; and this contention has found favour with some Judges of this Court. With all respect and deference to the contrary view held by my learned brother I regret I cannot agree with this view. I entirely accept the proposition that where the Statute embodies equities with respect to certain classes of transactions with which it is dealing, it is reasonable to found equities with regard to other classes of transactions on the principles there enunciated; but where the Statute specifically excludes one transaction of the same class as that which is being dealt with from its purview, we cannot apply the same doctrine. We do not know why the Legislature exempted agricultural leases from the purview of the Transfer of Property Act lease sections. It might be that the Legislature thought that the provisions for forfeiture of rent embodied in those sections were not suitable to agricultural leases. It is not open to us to investigate the reasons for the exclusion and we cannot, therefore, presume that some other cause operated on the mind of the Legislature. If we are to apply any equity in relieving against forfeiture, we must, in my view, seek for it outside the Transfer of Property Act; and the proper course is to ascertain the practice in England and apply it, subject to such modifications that seem proper in view of the conditions in this country. This was the course adopted by this Court in the case in Kottal Uppi v. Edavalath Thathan Numbudri (10). There reliance is placed on Peachy v. Duke of Somerset (1). The language of the Lord Chancellor is as follows: "The true ground of relief against penalties is from the original intent of the case where the penalty is designed only to secure money and the Court gives him all that he expected or desired." This is treated as the leading case in White and Tudor, Volume II where the learned Editor points out that even where the penalty of the bond is to secure a collateral object, the Court will grant relief [Vide Sloman v. Walter (14) quoted on page 264] and states as the result of the examination of the authorities that "from a very early period equity would, at any indefinite time after a tenant had incurred forfeiture, and been ejected for non-payment of rent at a particular time, under the stipulation in his lease, relieve him upon his paying to the lessor the rent accrued due, interest, and costs, upon this principle that as the right of entry was intended merely as a security for the rent, the lessor thereby received full compensation, and was put in the same situation as if the rent had been paid to him when it was originally due." The principle was restated by the Lord Chancellor in Sanders v. Pope (15) with an explanation at page 289 as to the origin of the covenant which is as follows:—"The obvious intention of the clause is to secure the payment of the rent; that the landlord may not be put to his action of debt, coming from time to time against an insolvent estate; but may be enabled to recover possession of the premises. In that case equity is in the constant course of relieving the tenant, paying the rent and all expenses, and placing his landlord in exactly the same situation". In a later case, Hill v. Barclay (16), the Lord Chancellor distinguishes the case of forfeiture arising out of a covenant to repair, on the ground that in some cases it might not be possible to put the landlord in exactly the same position by ordering the tenant to make the necessary repairs. The doctrine is stated in Story's Equity Jurisprudence as founded on the theory that the right of entry is deemed to be intended to be a mere security for the payment of rent, and in paragraph 1316, the learned Editor states as follows: "In reason, in conscience, in natural equity, there is no ground to say, because a man has stipulated for a penalty, in case of his omission to do a particular act (the real object of the parties being the performance of the act), that, if he omits to do the act, he shall suffer enormous loss, wholly disproportionate to the injury to the other party." It seems to me that we should apply these principles in India and I find nothing in the cases and nothing in the principles on which they are founded to support the view that the insertion of days of grace in a lease will oust the jurisdiction of the Court to relieve. The origin of the covenant and its purpose are enunciated in the above cases. We have to apply it to the present case. This is a permanent lease, a lease very common on the west coast of India, one by which the lessor deprives himself of any possibility of increase of rent for all time. He has reserved nothing to himself but his muli right. The leaseholder has a permanent and alienable right in the property, a position infinitely stronger than that of the agricultural lessee in England for a term of 7, 14 or 21 years. In relieving against the forfeiture we can, therefore, give to the jenmi "all that he expected or desired," in the words of the Lord Chancellor in Peachy v. Duke of Somerset (1), i. e., the rent reserved and in my opinion we should be very slow to refuse to do this in these circumstances. Neither the fact that there were days of grace nor that the rent is 6 years in arrears should operate to prevent the application of the doctrine. I recognize that this would lead to a systematic refusal to pay rents until after a suit to enforce the forfeiture clause; but I think that the injury is exaggerated. Such a practice will bring its own punishments for it would lead to the discontinuance of the permanent leases by mulganidars and compel them to grant mulgani chits for short terms only as is done in many cases, I would add that legislative authority was given to this doctrine of relief in 4 Geo. II, Ch. 28, and its extent curtailed by the Common Law of Procedure Act of 1852, section 210. I do not think it necessary, however, to refer to the specific provisions of the Act as I would prefer to base my judgment on the principles enunciated by the Courts of Chancery apart from the Act.

Appeal allowed; Decree reversed.

Buddhist Law—Childless widow, right of, to succeed to her husband's property Sale of joint ancestral property by brother, validity of—Pre-emption.

A childless widow of a man who has died after his parents' death, succeeds to his share of the ancestral property whether it has or has not been divided, provided always that the property in question is not held on some feudal tenure or is not appurtenant to some hereditary office. [p. 602, col. 2.]

A sale by a surviving brother of the whole property is invalid and having regard to the law of pre-emption is also invalid as regards his own share. [p. 602, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Mergui, dated the 9th February 1914, in Civil Appeal No. 2 of 1914 reversing those of the Township Court of Bokpyin.

Mr. Ormiston, for the Appellant.

Maung Gyee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only questions argued in this appeal were (1) whether when two brothers were in joint possession of immoveable ancestral property and one died leaving a widow but no children, a sale by the surviving brother was valid in whole or in part and (2) whether the parties being Siamese, the law of that country was not the law to be applied by virtue of section 13 of the Burma Laws Act. This last point was only taken in second appeal and as both parties had by their pleadings claimed to be bound by Burmese Buddhist Law, it does not seem to me to be an objection that should be entertained at this stage.

The plaintiff relies upon various Dhammathats, e.g., Pyu Kungya and Kyannet quoted under section 7 and Myingun quoted under section 170 of the Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest.

He has also in his favour the great authority of Spark's Code, section 66 of which runs to this effect: "If a man dies without issue, his widow shall inherit all the property which was in his actual possession at his death, but she shall not share as his representative in any ancestral estate which is not divided until after his death." Sandford, J.C., cites this exposition of the law with approval in Mi Pyu v. Mi Bon Dok (1). The case, however, concerned divided property and the point did not really arise, and, moreover, he had expressed what seems to be an inconsistent opinion in the case of Mi Tun Byu v. Nga Yan (2) decided only a week or two before. Here too, however, the opinion was also obiter. No more recent case was cited.

The respondent relied on the great authority of the Manugye and cited a passage from page 277 of Richardson's Translation, which certainly seems to support his contention viz., that the widow of a childless man succeeded to his share of the ancestral property. He criticised the Dhammathats cited by the other side by stating that they related to ancestral property appurtenant to some hereditary office, a proposition which is certainly true as regards some of the Dhammathats cited in sections 7 and 170 of the Digest, e.g., Dhammathat Kyaw, Kandaw Ponam. He might also have relied, as it seems to me, on the two Upper Burma cases of Mi Lan v. Maung Shwe Daing (3) and Maung Walk v. Maung Nyein (4) where the question was exhaustively considered. These cases took the same view as that for which respondent contended, namely, that the childless widow succeeded, provided that the inheritance was within reach, i.e. provided that the husband or wife as the case might be, had not predeceased his or her parents and also provided that the property in question was not appurtenant to some hereditary office or held on some feudal tenure.

Major Spark's opinion, it was suggested, should be confined to cases in which the husband or wife had predeceased his or her parents and consequently the inheritance was not within reach and the opinions of Sanford, J. C., were also noted. In the first of these Upper Burma cases the evidence of Kin Wun Mingyi himself was taken and he supported the respondent's view, and in the latter the learned Judge had the advantage of having the Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest to which to refer. On the whole seeing that the point has apparently never been judicially decided in Lower Burma, and that the opinion of Major Spark was expressed at a time when the available authorities were fewer, I am of opinion that I should follow the Upper Burma decisions and hold that a childless widow of a man who has died after his parents' death succeeds to his share in the ancestral property whether such has or has not been divided, provided always that the property in question is not held on some feudal tenure or is not appurtenant to some hereditary office. In my opinion, therefore, the sale of the property as a whole by the surviving brother was invalid and having regard to the law of pre-emption was also invalid as regards his share, cf. Nga Maing v. Mi Baw (5).

The property was undivided and the purchaser never even obtained possession.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Deposit of insurance policy—Effect of mere deposit at time of execution of pro-note—Lender if can rank as secured creditor in distribution of promisor's estate.

A deposit of an insurance policy with the payee of a pro-note by way of collateral security is neither a transfer nor an assignment of the policy and creates no security in favour of the payee and he cannot, therefore, be regarded as a secured creditor in the distribution of the estate of the promisor who subsequently becomes insolvent. [p. 604, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the order of Mr. Justice Young sitting on the Original Side of the Chief Court, dated the 8th January 1914, in Civil Insolvency No. 95 of 1913.

FACTS.—The facts of this case appear in the judgment of Young, J., which was as follows:—

(1) L. B. R. (1872-1892) 35.

(2) L. B. R. (1872-1892) 32.

(4) U. B. R. (1897-1901), II, 145.

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE v. THOMPSON.

"This is a petition made by one T. M. T. Thompson, No. 40, 40th Street, praying for an order directing the Official Assignee to pay him as a secured creditor the full sum due to him before distributing among the general body of creditors of the deceased insolvent. The full amount due to Mr. Thompson is the sum of Rs. 2,000. According to Mr. Thompson for further securing the due amount of the said sum of Rs. 2,000 with interest the said W. G. Whittam, deceased, pledged with him his life policy for Rs. 5,000 in the Standard Life Assurance Co. It appears that two pro-notes, each for Rs. 1,000, were executed by four persons in favour of Mr. Thompson, viz., W. G. Whittam (insolvent), A. V. Whittam, J. M. Rajh and Maung Tun In. Each of the pro-notes was drawn on a piece of paper taken out of a book and consecutively numbered 28 and 29. With regard to the promissory note No. 28, an unstamped portion appearing to be the counterfoil of the pro-note is produced by Mr. Thompson which is signed by Mr. George Whittam and refers to a pro-note signed by himself, Mr. A. B. Whittam and the other two executants and stating that collateral security was given for Rs. 1,000 only as follows:

First Grade Clerk, Customs House, Rs. 250.
Preventive Officer, Customs House, Rs. 150.
Two 4th grade Clerks, Customs House, each of them Rs. 150, and lastly,

A policy in the Standard Life Assurance Co, the policy in suit.

We are not concerned with the meaning of the collateral security, which apparently means that the other signatories only signed as sureties and to the extent mentioned in the counterfoil. It will be observed that the document, Exhibit A,* is unstamped and I have ordered it to be stamped with ten times the amount of the proper stamp, which seems to be Rs. 1-14-0. It purports to be signed by George Whittam, but there is no distinct evidence in the document that it was given to Mr. Thompson. It is admitted, however, that Mr. Thompson produced to the Official Assignee the pro-note No. 28 and that he also produced before him the policy in question, the amount of which has been recovered by the Official Assignee from the Insurance Company in question. Now Mr. Thompson contends or rather his Advocate contends that the whole of the Rs. 2,000 was secured by the deposit of this policy. In the face of the document, Exhibit A, and of the decision of the Privy Council to which I shall have occasion to refer in a moment, I am unable to hold that the mere deposit of a policy gave him any rights at all. The case, however, seems to me to be different with regard to the pro-note No. 28, because with reference to that pro-note there is this document, Exhibit A., also numbered 28 which says that the policy of the Standard Life Assurance Company No. 06855, which is admittedly the policy in question, was given as collateral security though there is no such note with regard to the pro-note No. 29, and so really it seems to me that the only question in this case is whether the handing over of this document by Mr. Whittam to Mr. Thompson constitutes a transfer of an actionable claim within the meaning of section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act and in accordance with the decision of the Privy Council in Mulraj Khatau v. Vishwanath Prabhuram Vaidya (1). Under the circumstances of the case I have no doubt that though Mr. Thompson's name was not mentioned, he is the person to whom this collateral security was given inasmuch as he produced the pro-note in question which was made out in his favour and it was also he who produced the policy in question. Well, section 130 says that the transfer of an actionable claim shall be effected only by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or by his duly appointed agent and shall be complete and effectual upon the execution of such instrument and thereupon all the rights and remedies of the transferor whether by way of damages or otherwise shall vest in the transferee, whether such notice of the transfer as is hereinafter provided be given or not. It seems to me, and is admitted, that the claim upon the policy of insurance is an actionable claim, and the Legislature seems to me to provide that that actionable claim may be transferred by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor, and, in my opinion, there is in Exhibit A, a document signed by the transferor transferring his actionable claim. As was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, the decision in the matter in issue turns entirely on the interpretation of section 130, sub-section 1, of the Transfer of Property Act of 1900. Mr. Anzum for the Official Assignee pointed out that this was not an assignment. But so far as I can see, the question is whether there is any difference between the terms transfer and assignment and, secondly, whether if so, it is an assignment and not a transfer. I am not aware myself that an assignment, is anything else but a transfer. If it is anything else, then it seems to me that the assignment of an actionable claim is not required, but only the transfer of an actual claim. It is obvious that this transfer was by way of security, but it is laid down by the Privy Council that such a transfer by way of security is contemplated by the section. It may be that Mr. Thompson is correct in saying that the title-deed was deposited, as a matter of fact, by way of collateral security for the other pro note of Rs. 1,000, but the Privy Council case in question clearly shows that unless the deposit of an actionable claim is accompanied by an instrument in writing it is inoperative. His claim to Rs. 1,000 under the pro-note No. 29 must be disallowed. But, in my opinion, it should be allowed as regards the pro-note No. 28. Mr. Wells must have his costs on the amount of Rs. 1,000 with interest at 3 per cent. up to date of adjudication. Costs of this application three gold mohurs."

Mr. Anzum, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion the document, Exhibit A, was not a transfer or assignment of the policy. It is merely a memorandum of what collateral security had been given and is consistent only with the policy having been deposited as security.

Such deposit created no security in favour of the respondent. The order appealed against is set aside. The respondent must pay the appellant's costs of this appeal. Three gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fee.

Order set aside.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Akyab, dated the 2nd August 1913, in Civil Appeal No. 28 of 1913, confirming those of the Township Court, Rathedaung, in a suit for recovery of shares of land bought jointly.

Mr. Bose, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ba Dun, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole point for decision is whether the learned District Judge was right in holding that the rule of res judicata decides the suit. It seems to me that the law is correctly stated in the case of Ramchandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadev (1), namely, that where an adjudication between the defendants is necessary to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff, the adjudication will be res judicata between the defendants as well as between the plaintiff and defendants; but for this effect to arise, there must be a conflict of interests between the defendants and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the defendants inter se.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. PERARULALA RAMANUJA JEER SWAMIGAL.

In the former case the plaintiffs in this suit were defendants, and in that suit they supported the plaintiff's claim which was based on the same cause of action as the present suit. There was a conflict between the present plaintiffs and the present defendants, who were defendants in the former suit based on the same cause of action as the present one. The suit was decided against the present defendants' allegations and in favour of the present plaintiffs' allegations.

The rule laid down in the case I have quoted above, and which I am of opinion is a correct rule, applies to the present case. I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865)—Inam title-deed—Inamdar—Claim to irrigate free of charge larger area than entered in inam title-deed, if allowable—Separate engagement, necessity of.

Where an inamdar claims that he is entitled to irrigate free of charge in respect of a much larger area than that entered in the inam title-deed, it must be by virtue of some engagement with the Government other than the inam title-deed. [p. 605, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1907.

FACTS.—This is an appeal preferred by Government against the decree of the Subordinate Judge at Tennevelly in a suit brought by Sri Perarulala Ramanuja Jeer Swamigal against the Secretary of State for India in Council through the Collector of Tinnevelly. The plaintiff prayed for a declaration that the Government were not entitled to levy water rate for wet crops raised by plaintiff on any land under the Oochikulam tank and for recovery of Rs. 411-3-6, being the amount levied from plaintiff as such rate for fastis 1314 and 1315. The plaintiff averment was that the plaintiff had been raising wet crops on the entire land under his cultivation from time out of mind, that the Government had no right to levy water-cess on any portion thereof, and that the jodi was fixed as a permanent assessment, irrespective of the area under wet or dry cultivation from time to time. The defendant's contention was that the jodi was fixed with reference to the extent of lands cultivated as wet and on the dry lands at the time of the inam Settlement and that the plaintiff had since increased the wet cultivation and was liable to pay water-cess on the increased area, and that the claim was barred by limitation.

The suit was at first dismissed with costs, the Subordinate Judge holding that the plaintiff was precluded from adducing evidence to show that no land shown as wet in the ayacut accounts ever remained uncultivated with wet crop at any time.

On appeal to the High Court, their Lordships Miller and Abdur Rahim, J.J., remanded the suit for re-trial, and directed the lower Court to admit the plaintiff's evidence formerly disallowed.

The Subordinate Judge, on re-hearing the case, gave a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for on the evidence produced by the plaintiff. The Government now appeal against that decree.

Mr. J. L. Rozario, for the Government.

Mr. M. A. Thirunarayanaachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the plaintiff to recover water-cess levied by Government on the amount of wet cultivation in the plaintiff's inam village of Oochikulam, which is in excess of the amount mentioned for that village in the inam title-deed, Exhibit O. Admittedly the inam title-deed constitutes an engagement with Government within the meaning of Act VII of 1865 to supply water free of charge for the area of wet cultivation in the village mentioned therein, but the Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff is entitled to irrigate free of charge in respect of a much larger area, and if this be so, it must be by virtue of some engagement with Government other than the inam title-deed. The plaintiff's case is that he has been all along since the paimash in 1802 cultivating about double this quantity of wet and that the amount entered in the title-deed is a mistake. Exhibit I, on the other hand, shows that the wet cultivation at the time of the paimash was only 41k. 4m. 2½p. In support of this contention, he relies on certain cadijan accounts beginning with the early years of last century. We are not prepared to rely on these cadijans which have a very modern look and may well have been fabricated. In 1904 he was asked to support his case by accounts and failed to produce these cadijans. It is curious that in the very year in which the inam inquiry was held the plaintiff's cadijan accounts show a much greater extent of wet cultivation in this village than was given by the plaintiff's predecessor to the Commissioner in his signed statement, Exhibit Ia. We know how carefully the Inam Register was prepared and that the plaintiff had an opportunity of correcting the statement of the Revenue Officials, and that instead of so doing he gave a statement practically to the very same effect. It is not to be supposed that the Revenue Authorities would have fallen into such an error, or that if they had, the inamdar would have failed to point it out or would have accepted a title-deed in the terms of Exhibit O. The plaintiff's explanation that his statement to the Inam Commissioner related to the whole five villages and that there may then have been a deficiency of wet cultivation in the other villages which made his total accurate, is most improbable and no attempt has been made to show that there was any such deficiency in the other villages by producing the village accounts. In these circumstances we cannot act upon the cadijan accounts now put forward as proof that at the date of the Inam Settlement the plaintiff was really cultivating the amount which he claims. We cannot place any reliance either on the statements of the plaintiff's witnesses that the lands now cultivated as wet were always so cultivated.

We allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Nukamma* (2), which lay down that a decree of Court, though obtained by collusion in order to carry out a scheme of fraud cannot be treated as nullity as between the parties to the decree—not only this, the Court ought not to permit any of the parties to such fraud and collusion to show that the transaction upheld by the decree was not really what it purported to be and does not, therefore, bind him. We are not prepared to follow some of the observations in the judgment in Barkat—

SUMEKA DASI v. BAIKUNTHA CHANDRA DAS.

un-nissa v. Fazl Haq (3), which go to the length of stating that a person, who had merely a hope of succession and no present legal right in the property affected by a collusive decree, is entitled to impeach that decree though he is the heir and representative of one of the parties to the decree. (See also Bigelow on Fraud, page 91.)

The decree in Original Suit No. 71 of 1902 awarding the plaintiff possession of the plaint property is, therefore, binding on the 3rd defendant, who is the heir of one of the parties to that suit, as held by the learned District Judge.

The next contention of the appellant (the 3rd defendant) is that the execution of that decree has become barred and that the plaintiff's only remedy as decree-holder under that decree was to execute that decree for possession and not to bring a separate suit for possession treating that decree as a decree for possession and not as a declaratory decree. A decree-holder is not bound to obtain possession through Court if the judgment-debtor gives up possession amicably. In that case the decree is satisfied and there is no cause of action to take out execution proceedings in the suit. If the decree-holder is dispossessed afterwards, his dispossession gives him a fresh cause of action and it is on that fresh cause of action that this suit was brought.

Lastly, it is contended that the plaintiff never did get possession of the properties from his deceased mother (the judgment-debtor) and that the District Judge's finding to the contrary cannot be supported. The learned District Judge is, no doubt, mistaken in his assertion that it was not "disputed that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 originally attorned to the plaintiffs in 1905 (Exhibit K)." The District Munsif found on the 3rd defendant's contention that Exhibit K was very recently manufactured to support the plaintiff's case. There are, however, the documents D and J (of which the genuineness of Exhibit D seems to be conceded by the District Munsif), and the fact of the plaintiff and his mother having been thick friends, and the fact that the plaintiff managed his mother's affairs and was in actual possession even of her other properties for her. The general probabilities of the case are also in support of the District Judge's finding on the 3rd and 4th issues (which relate to the question of possession) and though it would have been more satisfactory if the learned District Judge had given fuller and better reasons for his conclusion, we do not think that this is a case in which we should refuse to accept his finding of fact or to send it down for a fresh finding.

This second appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The case for the plaintiff.

SUMEKA DASÍ V. BAIKUNTHA CHANDRA DAS.

iff is that the disputed properties belonged to her husband, and, after his death were held by her jointly with the defendants, who are relations of her husband. She alleges that in Magh 1307 she was unlawfully dispossessed by the defendants and consequently seeks to recover possession. The Court of first instance held that her title was established and gave her a decree. Upon appeal, the District Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred under clauses (1) and (2) of rule 2 of Order II of the Code of 1908. This objection has been sustained on the ground that in 1910 the plaintiff had sued these defendants and two other persons for joint possession of other lands, which she alleged had been inherited by her from her husband and from which she had been wrongfully evicted by the then defendants. In our opinion the view taken by the District Judge cannot be supported.

Clause (1) of rule 2 of Order II provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action. Clause (2) lays down that where the plaintiff omits to sue in respect of any portion of the claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted. We have, consequently, to determine whether the cause of action now alleged by the plaintiff is identical with what was the foundation of the previous suit. On behalf of the appellant, it has been contended that the causes of action are not identical. It has been pointed out that in the previous suit the plaintiff alleged that the properties then in dispute had been inherited by her from her husband, that while she was in possession thereof, she was dispossessed by some of the then defendants, who are relations of her husband, in Magh 1307, and that thereafter from Falgun 1307, she had been kept out of possession by other defendants in collusion with the principal defendants. These other persons are not parties to the present suit, and it was not open to the plaintiff to join the present claim with the earlier one in the previous suit. If this claim had been included in the previous suit, objection might well have been taken on the ground of misjoinder of parties and causes of action. This is clear from the decision of this Court in the case of Ram Prosad v. Sachi Dasí (1). Reliance has been placed on behalf of the respondents upon the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in the case of Murti v. Bhola Ram (2). The facts of that case are clearly distinguishable from those which have given rise to this appeal; and we are inclined to follow the line of reasoning adopted in the judgment of the dissenting Judge rather than that accepted by the majority of the Full Bench. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Pitapur Raja v. Suriya Rau (3) the rule does not compel the plaintiff, who has several causes of action, to lump them together under the penalty of having the subsequent suit barred. The section does not say that every suit shall include every cause of action or every claim which the party has, but only that every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action, meaning, the cause of action for which the suit is brought. Here, the plaintiff has a cause of action against the relations of her husband. In the earlier litigation she had a cause of action in respect of properties not now in suit against persons who had derived title by purchase from the relations of her husband. In our opinion, the causes of action are distinct and the suit is not barred.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the case sent back to the lower Appellate Court for disposal on the merits. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

Where the inamdars of Varahanarasimhapuram utilised the water of the Vamsadbara river, flowing in the Mobagam channel belonging to the zemindar of Utlam, for irrigating second crop cultivation and wet crops grown on dry land:

Held, per Oldfield and Bakewell, JJ. (Sadasiva Aiyar, J., dissenting) that under the combined operation of the Madras Acts III of 1905 and VII of 1865, the Government was entitled to levy water-cess for the same. [p. 622, col. 2; p. 633, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—Madras Act III of 1905, being a declaratory Act, has retrospective effect. [p. 613, col. 1.]

A person who claims exemption from payment of water-cess under Madras Act VII of 1865 is bound to prove that the water used by him was not Government water but that of a zemindar or inamdar or a person claiming under him. [p. 613, col. 2.]

A grant from the Crown, unlike one from a private individual, must be construed beneficially to it. [p. 616, col. 2.]

Madras Act VII of 1865 applies not only to ryotwari but also to zemindari and inam villages. [p. 618, col. 2.]

Where by a Statute, the burden of proving a fact in issue is placed on the subject as against the Government, a Court will not be justified in presuming or accepting inadequately supported inferences in support of a grant of which direct evidence is wanting, out of mere regard for the hardship that might ensue owing to the difficulty of proving it after the lapse of several years. [p. 619, col. 2.]

Where a grant is alleged as founded throughout the Presidency in the same manner, the fact that in two districts its existence has been negatived by practice is against its validity in others. [p. 620, col. 1.]

Zamindar of Kapileswarapuram v. Secretary of State, 26 Ind. Cas. 590; 37 M. 355 note; Bachu Ramesam v. Mukala Bhanappa, 7 M. 182 and Narasimha Naidu v. Ramasami, 14 M. 44, referred to.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A historical retrospect of the relations between the Government and zemindars and ryotwari tenants, and those between zemindars and inamdars and their tenants is of little importance in arriving at a true view of the provisions of the Statute and Case-Law governing their rights. [p. 623, col. 1.]

In construing a Statute considerations such as whether the Government could have intended to be guilty of so much harshness and oppression as would result if a particular Statute were to be interpreted in one way, or whether the Legislature could have intended such a sudden change in the law as would result from a particular interpretation, are of very doubtful utility and it is not legitimate to have recourse to such extraneous considerations, unless the words of the Statute are very ambiguous. [p. 624, col. 1.]

In deciding on the rights of Indian litigants references to the technicalities of English Common Law actions ought to be avoided as merely tending to confuse the mind. [p. 624, col. 2.]

According to Indian Law flowing water is capable of being owned. [p. 624, col. 2.]

The words 'river', 'stream', 'channel' and 'tank' in clause (a) of section 1 of Madras Act VII of 1865 are used in the sense of the collective body of waters which are called river, stream, channel or tank, according to the respective configurations of the receptacles. [p. 625, col. 1.]

The word 'supplied,' when used in connection with water-supply, does not imply a previous request by the owner of the land which is supplied with water. [p. 625, col. 1.]

Venkatappayya v. Collector of Kistna, 12 M. 407 and Krishnayya v. Secretary of State, 19 M. 24, dissented from.

So far as beds of non-tidal and non navigable rivers and streams bounded by zemindari and whole inam lands are concerned, it is too late to question the applicability of English Law that a zemindar who owns only one of the banks of a river is entitled to half the bed of the river along the length bounded on that side by his land. But in other cases, the Indian Common Law vests such rights in the village community as a whole within the village limits and in the Sovereign power as representing the community in other places. [p. 625, col. 2; p. 626, col. 1.]

Rules of evidence enacted by the Legislature come into force at once and must be followed by the Courts in deciding on the rights of the parties, whatever may have been the previous state of the law in regard to the proper presumptions and burdens of proof. Under Madras Act III of 1905, the Government starts with a strong presumption in its favour that all standing and flowing waters belong to it, but the presumption is rebuttable. The fact that the enactment was passed during the pendency of the suit does not estop the Government from invoking the aid of such presumption. [p. 627, col. 1.]

Section 2 (1) of Madras Act III of 1905 has not the effect of declaring plenary rights in standing or flowing water in favour of Government. The Legislature never intended by that section to give to the Government greater rights of ownership in flowing water than the principles of general jurisprudence would allow. Flowing water by its very nature can never be the absolute property of the Government or anybody else, though the ownership in a very real sense can be predicated of it as vesting in a person so long as the water continues to be situated vertically over land belonging to that person. [p. 627, col. 2; p. 628, col. 1.]

The right of distributing water among their ryotwari tenants is exercised by the Government as the Sovereign landlord. Where, however, they have parted with proprietary rights over the beds of particular streams in favour of zemindars or inamdars, it is impossible to hold that they retain proprietary rights over waters standing in tanks in zemindaries or flowing through zemindari lands, or in water flowing in all natural channels, or through artificial channels constructed with the knowledge and permission of Government and owned by the zemindar or inamdar, or in water percolating into zemindari and inam tracts. [p. 628, col. 2.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair in Appeal No. 124 of 1906, preferred against the decree of the District Court of Ganjam in Original Suit No. 30 of 1904.

FACTS.—The inamdars of Varahanar. simhapuram used the water of the Mobagam Channel, belonging to the zemindar of Urlam, which took off water from the Vamsadhara river, for irrigating second crop cultivation and wet crops grown on dry land in their inam village. The Government having collected water-cess for such use of the water, the inamdars filed the present suit against the Secretary of State for India for the recovery of the cess so collected on the ground that the levy thereof was illegal. They also sued for an injunction to restrain the future levy of the same. The District Judge of Ganjam decreed the suit. On appeal to the High Court Miller and Sankaran Nair, JJ. differed in opinion, with the result that the confirming judgment of Sankaran Nair, J., prevailed under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code. The report of the case appears in Secretary of State for India v. Kannepalli Janakiramayya (1). The Secretary of State for India in Council then preferred this appeal under the Letters Patent.

The Hon'ble Mr. F. H. M. Corbet, the Advocate-General, the Government Pleader and Mr. S. Sundararaja Iyengar for the Appellant:—The Government is entitled to levy the cess, as it is not denied that the water of the Vamsadhara river has been used. Section 2 of Madras Act III of 1905, read with section 1 of Madras Act VII of 1865, makes it perfectly clear that the water of the Vamsadhara river is prima facie Government property. The respondents have not shown that the water belongs to a zemindar or inamdar or any person claiming under either. Nor do they allege any engagement on the part of the Government to exempt them from the cess. It is admitted that the lands now charged for are not included in the extent referred to as wet in the inam titlesdeed. The burden of proving non-liability lies very heavily upon the plaintiffs. A zemindar has now no proprietary rights in the soil of the lands included in his zemindari. Even under the old indigenous Government he was only a farmer of revenue. He has, therefore, no claim to poramboke lands and much less to beds of rivers and water flowing therein. Whatever may be the case with regard to zemindaris in the case of inams, there is no liability on the part of the Government not to raise the quit rent when extra water is used: Chidambara Rao v. Secretary of State (2); Secretary of State for India v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (3). The suit village is not part of the Urlam estate but of the Jalmur zemindari, which was sold for non-payment of peishkush in 1807 and bought in by the Government. It is immaterial to whom the Mobagam Channel belongs or by whom it was dug [Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Gru v. Secretary of State for India (4)]. It flows through Chicacole Taluk which is Government territory. The river Vamsadhara is the boundary of the zemin-dari for revenue purposes. Half of its bed does not necessarily belong to the zemin-dar. The sanad issued to the zemin-dar does not carry any right to the water. The fact that the channel may belong to the Urlam estate cannot benefit the plaintiff. The sanad evidences a Crown grant and such grants should be construed favourably to the Crown Vaman Janardan Joshi v. Collector of Thana and the Conservator of Forests (5). Madras Act III of 1905 is a declaratory Act and must, therefore, have retrospective effect: Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes. The real test of liability to pay cess is, what is the source from which water is taken? It cannot be seriously argued that the Vamsadhara is not a Government source.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and P. Nagabushanam, for the Respondents:—The levy of the cess is clearly illegal. The Mobagam Channel, whose water has been used for the cultivation in question, is purely a zemin channel and belongs to the Urlam zemin-dar. It branches off from the Vamsadhara river at a place entirely within the Urlam zemin. The Government has no right to the water of the said channel. That is the finding of the District Judge. Our contention is that the water in the channel belongs either to the Urlam zemin-dar or the plaintiffs. As regards the zemin-dar ownership of the water, our submission is that the Urlam zemin-dar is the owner of half the bed of the Vamsadhara adjoining his zemin-dari as well as of the water thereon. Vide Narasimha Sastriar v. Secretary of State (6) Secretary of State v. Kannapalli Vencataratnamah (7) and Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi v. Secretary of State (8); and Coulson's Law of Waters, 3rd Edition, page 78. Even if it is to be held that the Government is the owner of the bed, our submission is that there has been a grant of the river-bed and the water by the Government to the Urlam zemin-dar at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The form of the sanad is found at page 119 of the Board's Standing Orders, Volume II, Edition of 1907. Though the sanad does not expressly grant the rivers and waters, still the inference is clear. It expressly refers to land and land assessment or revenue. It, therefore, follows that no other payment is to be made in connection with cultivation and consequently for the use of river water for such cultivation. Clause 4 of the sanad is still more significant. Though provision is made therein for payment of various other items of revenue, water cess does not find a place there. The inference, therefore, is irresistible that the charges enumerated there are the only ones payable, that the enumeration is exhaustive and that water-cess is not payable. For the rule of construction, see Balbir Singh v. Secretary of State (9). See also Ponnusawmi Tevar v. Collector of Madura (10); Muria Susai Muli-lar v. Secretary of State (11); Secretary of State for India v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (3); Secretary of State v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (12) and Zamin-dar of Kapileswarapuram v. Secretary of State (13). Passages from the fifth report were also referred to.

[Mr. Rangachariar was not allowed to refer to Baden Powell's Land Tenures and to 'Records printed for the Madras Government,' Volume LXV.]

Before the Settlement of 1802, some zemin-dars including Urlam had rights over rivers and these rights were retained by them after the Settlement. It was as a consequence of such retention that the duty of maintaining and constructing tanks and water-courses had been transferred to them. Again renters were not only required to develop the lands by improving the channels and other existing works, but were also expected to bring waste area under cultivation, and whatever was done in the way of improvement, was done on the faith that the existing supply of water would be continued. Then as regards the position that the plaintiffs are the owners of the water, the facts are these. There was a channel which took off water from a river. At the time of the Settlement it was part of the irrigation system of the estate. Our contention, therefore, is that the channel and all the water in it belong to the estate subject to the customary rights of others; and the fact that the channel did not run entirely through the estate is immaterial. Since the channel in question runs through the plaintiffs' village before running through a Government village and as the plaintiffs have been using the water of it, they have become by lapse of time the owners of the water. At any rate plaintiffs had a sort of easement or customary right against the Uralam, which entitled them to claim exemption from payment of cess to Government. (This point was not allowed to be argued as it was not put forth in the earlier stages of litigation.) Madras Act III of 1905 has no application to the present case, inasmuch as it was passed during the pendency of the suit before the first Court. Further, the Legislature cannot be supposed to have intended the enactment to confer a right in a thing which is not capable of ownership, such as flowing water. Again the Acts in question, viz., III of 1905 and VII of 1865, having been passed with the express object of legalising charges for unauthorised occupation and use of land and water, they cannot be construed so as to affect or work a forfeiture of existing rights of irrigation.

The next contention is that Act VII of 1865 is inapplicable to charges for river water in zemin্দaris and inam villages. The preamble of the Act itself shows that it was passed in view of the necessity for realising returns from the Godavari and Krishna anicuts then constructed and not to charge for irrigation from private sources, when no improvement had been effected; and further the Act applies to rivers in ryotwari tracts alone and not to those in zemin্দaris. Otherwise, the Government would, under the Act, be able to levy cess even in cases where an engagement exists. The proviso to section 1 of the Act will not prevent this, as the word used there is 'supplied' and not 'supplied or used' as elsewhere and, that is inappropriate in respect of zemin্দaris and inams inasmuch as it connotes a previous request for water which zemin্দars and inamdars do not and need not make. See Krishnayya v. Secretary of State (14). Further, the word 'engagement' in the proviso above referred to cannot have been restricted to such of the lands only which had been under wet cultivation in 1865, for the obvious reason that it would have been impossible to distinguish the extent of wet cultivation on which, with other assets, peishkush was fixed in 1803.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of two learned Judges, given under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in accordance with the confirming judgment of one of them, Sankaran Nair, J. The question is whether water-cess was legitimately levied by Government, the appellant, from plaintiffs for the water of the Vamsadhara river, which they have admittedly used in their inam village for the irrigation of (1) second crop, (2) wet (or irrigated) crops grown on dry (or ordinarily unirrigated) land. The decision of this question will be a sufficient adjudication on the plaintiffs' claims to a refund of past collections and an injunction as to the future.

Plaintiffs did not dispute that they used the water of the Vamsadhara, as alleged. The dispute is, therefore, only whether it belongs to and can be charged for by Government. Government has relied on section 2 of Act III of 1905 in support of its ownership of the water and section 1, Act VII of 1865, in support of its right to charge for it. The material portion of the former is as follows :

"(1) All public roads, streets, lanes and paths, the bridges, ditches, dikes and fences, on or beside the same, the bed of the sea and of harbours and creeks below high water mark and of rivers, streams, nalas, lakes and tanks, and all canals and water-courses, and all standing and flowing water, and all lands, wherever situated, save in so far as the same are the property (a) of any zemin্দar . . . or inamdār or any person claiming through or holding under any of them, . . . are and are hereby declared to be the property of Government except as may be otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, subject always to all rights of way and other public rights and to the natural and easement rights of other land-owners, and to all customary rights legally subsisting."

And of the latter :

"Whenever water is supplied or used for purposes of irrigation from any river, stream, channel, tank, or work belonging to, or constructed by, Government, it shall be lawful for the Government to levy, at pleasure, on the land so irrigated, a separate cess for such water, provided that where a zemindar, inamdar, or any other description of landholder not holding under ryotwari settlement is, by virtue of engagements with the Government, entitled to irrigation free of separate charge, no cess under this Act shall be imposed for water supplied to the extent of such right and no more."

SECRETARY OF STATE v. KANNEPALI JANAKIRAMAYYA.

As regards the first of these enactments, it is not material that it was passed only during the pendency of this litigation in the Court of first instance. For it is, as regards the ownership of water, a declaratory Act, and such Acts have retrospective effect (Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, page 309). Plaintiffs demur to its application, on the grounds that the Legislature cannot be supposed to have intended (1) to confer a right of ownership in flowing water, a thing not capable of ownership, or (2) to confiscate existing rights of irrigation or to affect them at all, when the purpose of the Act is only to justify charges for the unauthorised occupation of water and land. These objections are invalid. For (1) it is only in the last resort, and for clearer reason than has been shown, that the meaning of the general provision declaring that water belongs to Government can be nullified. For, as regards (1) the Act statedly makes a general declaration that water belongs to Government; and it is only in the last resort and for clearer reason than has been shown that I can construe it by holding that flowing water can belong to no one. And as regards (2) there is no question of taking away existing rights, but only of reserving them and assigning the burden of proof regarding them. The reference to water would be pointless with regard to its occupation as by a boat on it, the example suggested, since nothing makes such occupation chargeable; whilst the inclusion of only a declaration of ownership as to water without a machinery for charging for its unauthorised use, such as is provided for land, is easily intelligible in view of the fact that the requisite machinery in the case of water had already been provided in Act VII of 1865. It will be necessary to return to the provisions of that Act in another connection. At present it is material only that plaintiffs allege no engagement exempting from water-tax the cultivation now charged for and admit that it is not included in the extent referred to in their title-deed as wet. They are, therefore, bound to prove that the water in question is not Government water, that is, that in the words of Act III of 1905, it is the property of a zemindar or inamdar, or a person claiming under one.

The plaintiffs' village, Varahanarasimhapuram, is not on the bank of the Vamsadhara river, and the water reached it by the Mobagam Channel which passes through the Urlam zemindari. The judgment of Sankaran Nair, J., refers throughout to the village as part of the zemindari, but mistakenly. For it is, it is admitted, an independent inam village, which was part of the Jalmur Estate and, having been bought in with the rest of that estate about 1808, is now held directly under Government. Mr. Rangachariar for the plaintiffs has accordingly attempted to establish that the water was either theirs or the property of Urlam. He at one time proposed to argue that plaintiffs had easement or other customary rights against Urlam, which would, in some way not explained, justify them in claiming the water against Government. But this corresponded with nothing in the plaint, or, so far as the judgments showed, in the arguments at earlier stages of the case, and we refused to hear it. His contention was then that the water, being the absolute property of plaintiffs or Urlam, was, in the latter alternative, used by plaintiffs in accordance with some arrangement or license by the Urlam proprietor, the nature of which could have no bearing on the material point that the water did not belong to Government and, therefore, was not material for the purpose of his argument. That case is intelligible. It is only to be borne in mind that, so far as it relates to Urlam, proof of nothing less than absolute ownership is essential in order to sustain it. For we have been shown no authority for holding that mere riparian rights, short of ownership of the water, extend to its diversion for the irrigation of land other than that belonging to the riparian owner himself. Section 7, illustration (f), Indian Easements Act, negatives the wider view of such rights. The Calcutta High Court refused in Belbhadar Pershad Singh v. Sheikh Barkat Ali (15) to apply the American doctrine on the subject to India. And this Court in Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State for India (16) held that, if the English Law were applicable, the disability of a riparian owner to use water for non-riparian tenements was absolute and did not depend on proof that actual damage was caused by his doing so. Mr. Rangachariar put his case for the ownership of the river water by Urlam on two alternative foundations; and I shall now deal with the first of them.

It was stated by Mr. Rangachariar as follows: When a river, such as the Vamsadhara, flows by a zemindari, such as Urlam, half the river-bed adjacent to the zemindari, and the water thereon belongs to the zemindar, and the other half to the opposite riparian owner, subject to superior riparian rights in the water. The District Judge dealt with this, apparently with the consent of the parties, by a reference to his judgment, Exhibit M in this suit, in another litigation relating to the same river and estate, Original Suits Nos. 37 and 38 of 1904, his finding being that the bed and consequently the water did not belong to Government.

That judgment was, of course, given before the Act III of 1905 and the imposition of the burden of proof on the private claimant prescribed in it became law. It is sufficient that it was based on the rejection of an argument from the alleged tidal and navigable character of the river and an inference as to the ownership of its water from the ownership of the channels conveying them to the irrigated land, which I shall deal with later. It is not, in my opinion, clear that the English and American principles relied on by Mr. Rangachariar, as supporting the ownership by the riparian owner of half the bed adjacent to his holding, can be applied to India, where Government has special rights and as regards irrigation special functions. The Indian authorities dealing with accretion are not relevant, since they are concerned, not with ownership of the river-bed, but with a special method of acquiring ownership in formations in it above water. And I am inclined to share the doubt expressed by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Mukkassa Nair Veetil v. Secretary of State for India (17). A decision on this part of plaintiffs' contention is, however, unnecessary, because I do not think that ownership of the water will follow from the ownership of the bed, or the moiety of it adjacent to the holding.

It is evident that this principle must be scrutinised carefully, before it can be accepted. For its practical application would be most difficult. The right of Government, for instance, to control water for irrigation purposes has been recognised in Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State for India (16); cited above, and other cases; but when that right is in question, whether it is general, as founded on authority, or it arises only from the ownership of the opposite bank, how is it to be exercised or limited to the control of only half the water? and how is such limitation to be imposed on opposite proprietors? It is significant that no decisions appear to have been given by the Courts on claims so likely to result in controversy. As regards authority, plaintiffs rely mainly on the early doctrine, embodied in the maxim "Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum," which is stated at page 78, Coulson's "Law of Waters," 3rd Edition. But they neglect the learned author's conclusion, that it is supported by modern authors only as regards standing and percolating water and running water which remains for the whole of its course on the land of a single owner, but that "with regard to natural streams flowing through adjoining lands, the enjoyment of which is only usufructuary and not absolute, the right to use the water does not arise from the ownership of the soil on the stream, but from the right of access to it which land owners on the banks have by the law of nature." SECRETARY OF STATE v. KANNEPALLI JANAKIRAMAYYA.

will be observed that this statement of the English Law, which I adopt, since it has not been shown to be incorrect, attributes to individuals a right of user in certain circumstances, not of ownership; and I recall the fact that, as observed supra, the establishment of the right to such user will be insufficient to justify Urlam in supplying plaintiffs. The Law in England as regards ownership will be made clearer by a quotation from Embrey v. Owen (18):—

"Flowing water is publici juris, not in the sense that it is a bonum vacans, to which the first occupant may acquire an exclusive right, but that it is public and common in this sense only that all may reasonably use it who have a right of access to it, that none can have any property in the water itself except in the particular portion which he may choose to abstract from the stream and take into his possession, and that during the time of his possession only".

On the English Law plaintiffs have relied almost exclusively, as regards this part of their case, and it does not support the plenary ownership of the water by Urlam, or more than its right of user for cultivation of its own adjoining lands, and not for any supply to the lands of others such as plaintiffs. That is sufficient to negative the case of private ownership, as based on the ownership of the bed and banks, and to authorise the application of the presumption referred to in Act III of 1905. It will be convenient to postpone dealing with the Indian cases, until plaintiffs' alternative foundation for the ownership of the river water by Urlam has been considered.

It was stated by Mr. Rangachariar as being that in a permanently settled estate, such as Urlam, where a river flows through or by the estate, the river-bed and waters, to the extent to which they are in that estate, were granted with it to the zemindar in 1803, subject to superior riparian rights.

It is admitted that the Urlam Estate was formed out of haveli lands; that is, lands which, before the Permanent Settlement, were in the possession of no zeminda. There can, therefore, be no question of the existence of any rights, such as zemindars enjoyed before 1802, in this case; and it can be said at most that rights identical with those of zemindars elsewhere were then conferred. The sanad containing the terms, on which the estate was granted in 1803, has not been exhibited. But it is agreed that it is in the standard form given at page 119, Volume II, Board's Standing Orders (1907). It is conceded that it supports plaintiffs' contention in no degree directly. For it refers only to land and land assessment and makes no reference to rivers, or other water-supply, in connection with the grant. The argument is accordingly that, as the references are to land and land assessment or revenue alone, no further payment was to be made on any other account in connection with cultivation and, therefore, none on account of river water. Particular reliance has been placed on clause 4 by which provision was made for the liability of the estates for payments, in addition to the land tax, for various other articles of revenue, of which water-tax is not one, the inference being that, as such articles are enumerated and the enumeration must be supposed to be exhaustive, the omission to mention water-tax entails that none was leviable. These are the only grounds, on which it is proposed to imply a grant of all river water for irrigation, past and future, from the terms of the sanad itself; and they are, in my opinion, inadequate. No doubt ordinary existing irrigation was granted, since payment for one irrigated crop would, in accordance with usage, be included in the total consolidated land tax or peishkush, so far as it was for the wet land in the estate. That peishkush was, as Sankaran Nair, J., has shown in another connection in his judgment, fixed arbitrarily, and it is not possible to distinguish the portions of it payable for irrigation and land revenue proper. But that is the most that can be allowed, or with which authority and revenue practice are consistent. Extraordinary or second crop irrigation and extensions of irrigation are, no doubt, not mentioned in the sanad. But it is not a necessary inference that they also were included in the grant. For the intention may equally have been to charge for them separately, as has, it will be found in some cases at least, been done.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. KANNAPALLI JANAKIRAMAYYA.

As regards clause 4, the enumeration does not seem to be either exact or comprehensive. It has not, for instance, debarred Government from levying a duty on the possession of arms in zemindaris, or a road and railway cess for the benefit of local Boards, although neither of these imposts comes within the descriptions of those the right to which is reserved. In Vedanta v. Kanniyappa (19), this Court dealt with the clause and the connected section of the Permanent Settlement Regulation XXV of 1802, holding that the dues, then in question, included in the sayer were not exigible by the owners of land as such, but by the Sovereign, and that, whatever the origin of their title, Government intended to treat the zemindars, with whom it effected a Permanent Settlement, as landed proprietors, and to ignore any rights which conflicted with its own sovereignty. And the judgment goes on:—

"Such a large proportion of the Crown revenues of India was derived from the land, directly or indirectly, that it was difficult for the early British Administrators to separate with precision the revenue which could conveniently be collected by the Crown from that the collection of which could more conveniently be left to those subjects who had exercised the functions of collection under native rule."

"It cannot be denied that in sanads issued in virtue of the, Permanent Settlement Regulation the Government dealt ordinarily only with the land revenue. The insertion in sanads issued by the Government of Madras of a clause repeating the declaration contained in the Regulation as to the exclusion of items of revenue other than the land revenue was surplusage. . . . Had the clause been omitted, it could not have been contended that the zemindar was entitled to collect revenue other than the land revenue, because of its omission."

All this enunciates what the wording and matter of sanad and Regulation indicate, that the Settlement proceeded on general lines and that a grant of one item of revenue is not to be inferred from silence regarding it. Such an inference, it must be added, is intrinsically improbable. For whatever the actual irrigation in 1802 under the great deltas of the Kistna and Godavari, it cannot be supposed that their potentialities were overlooked or dealt with by implication, or that, if they had been transferred, there would have been no attempt in the sanad and Regulation, or by some other contemporaneous enactment, to provide for responsibility for their control, or the decision of conflicting claims to their waters. The grant under construction was made by the Crown; and the rule of construction in point is not, as it was in Balbir Singh v. Secretary of State (9), that applicable to the grants of a particular description of property, but the general rule, that grants by the Crown must be construed beneficially to it. Vaman Janardan Joshi v. Collector of Thana and the Conservator of Forests (5), Collector of Ratnagiri v. Antaji Lakshman (20) and Adusumilli Suryanarayana v. Achutta Potanna (21). These, the direct and in my opinion, the only legitimate grounds for a decision, because they alone are available from the actual terms of the grant, entail that no grant of the river water to the Urlam proprietor in 1803 is established

Direct construction of the grant yielding nothing favourable to the plaintiffs, they have endeavoured to support their case further by collateral considerations; and they have, it will be found, made similar attempt in connection with their proposed interpretation of Act VII of 1865. Those considerations consist in the alleged opinions and intentions of Government and its officers at the time of the Settlement, as expressed in various publications. I do not think that they are a legitimate ground of decision with reference to section 93, Indian Evidence Act, or the general principle that, if "the language of the Statute admits of no doubt or secondary meaning, it is simply to be obeyed, without more." Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, page 72. Here the fact that the sanad makes no reference to a topic to which it might have referred, does not render its language ambiguous or defective; and the Regulation and Act are, in my opinion, susceptible of a reasonable interpretation as they stand. I, therefore, enter on this branch of the argument solely.

SECRETARY OF STATE V. KANNAPALLI JANAKIRAMAYYA.

because it has bulked largely here and in the judgment of the learned Judge.

It is a difficulty of a different kind that the matters in question were (as plaintiffs' learned Vakil admits) never relied on at the trial in the District Court or the hearing of the appeal, when Government might have dealt with them by explanation or counter-citation, but were first referred to in the learned Judge's judgment. The learned Advocate-General has, however, waived objection to them on that ground, claiming only the right to file documents in reply in case, we think, that such reply is required, and filing Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1862 of 1915 for their admission. We have not thought them necessary; and we need only add that we felt bound to refuse to allow plaintiffs' Vakil to make further references for the first time at this stage in the case to other publications, including Baden Powell's "Land Tenures" and Volume LXV of "Records printed for the Madras Government."

It is not necessary to reproduce the extracts relied on, as the greater part of them are given in the learned Judge's judgment. The inference from them must be weak, since they consist in the broadly expressed opinions and pious expectations of bodies so diverse as the Select Committee and the Famine Commission of 1880. The general argument in Court and in the learned Judge's judgment, so far as it is distinguishable from that based on the terms of the sanad already dealt with, seems to me to require more definite support from evidence than it has been given. In particular the assertion that some zemindars had rights over rivers before the Settlement of 1802 and retained them after it and the attempt to corroborate that by reference to the transfer to other zemindars, of which Urlam is one, of the duty of maintaining and constructing tanks and water-courses in haveli lands, are open to question. For the present dispute which relates only to rivers, which are not mentioned in connection with haveli lands and the ownership of tanks, to which (for all that appears) the water-courses referred to may have been appurtenant, and of the water in them would be subject to quite different considerations, with which we are not concerned. For the rest, only three conclusions, which, in my opinion, require notice, have been drawn from these materials and I do not think that they in any way probablise the grant of river waters alleged. They are that (1) renters were expected to develop the lands entrusted to them by improving the channels and other works transferred to, or left in, their control; (2) it was hoped that cultivation would be extended over land waste at the time; (3) there was an impression that the existing supply of water would be continued. But as regards (1) it has still to be decided, with reference to the authorities to be referred to, whether the assignment to renters of the duty of maintaining channels would involve any exemption of water flowing through them from charge, or any transfer of its ownership; (2) if an extension of cultivation was anticipated, it did not follow that the renter's profit was to accrue from his charging for water and not merely for the land and, unirrigated cultivation being common throughout the Presidency it need not have been assumed that the new cultivation would be irrigated or would be irrigated gratuitously; and (3) if the continuance of existing irrigation was secured, that did not entail the grant of free additions to it. On the other hand, if evidence of this description is to be considered, it is significant that no more direct reference to anything approaching a plenary grant of the river water has been found, if one in fact was made, and that the one statement regarding irrigation works in the Instructions to Collectors, that at page 331, Fifth Report, refers only to tanks and water-courses, not to rivers, or works on them. In these circumstances I do not think that this line of argument, if admissible, assists plaintiffs appreciably.

There is, next, a contention that Act VII of 1865 is either inapplicable to charges for river water in zemindars and inam villages, or that its wording is consistent only with a grant of rights of ownership in river water to zemindars and inamdars before its date, on the grounds that (1) the Act was passed in view of the necessity for realising returns from the lately constructed Kistna and Godavari anicuts and not in order to charge irrigation from private sources, where no improvement in or addition to those sources had been made; (2) it applies to rivers in ryotwari tracts only, not in zemindaris.

As regards (1) I do not feel at liberty to interpret an Act the body of which is clearly and comprehensively expressed, with reference to the alleged motives of the Legislature. We have been referred to the preamble; but it can be treated as indicative of the scope of the Act, only when legitimate doubt regarding the latter arises from the uncertainty of its terms; and I feel none here. Moreover, it is not clear that the preamble in this case justifies any conclusion. It, no doubt, refers to the necessity for "a fit return" being made to Government "on account of the increased profits derivable" from works constructed or improved by it. But the reference to both drainage and irrigation works, as the preliminary to provisions which authorise a charge only for irrigation, makes it doubtful whether any accurate statement was attempted; and in the absence of any subsequent provisions for the calculation of the charge to be imposed with exclusive reference to the expenditure on some new work or improvement with which the irrigation can be connected, it is impossible to hold that the right to charge is restricted to cases in which such connection can be established, or that other cases were intended to be exempt because of a previous grant of river water or for any other reason.

Then as to the alleged restriction of the operation of the Act to charges for river water in ryotwari tracts, that again is based solely on inference, though it would have easily been susceptible of direct expression. It is urged that section 1 must not be read as applicable to zemindaris and inams, because, but for its proviso, it would authorise the charging even of irrigation in respect of which an engagement with Government exists, a result so unjust that the Legislature cannot be supposed to have contemplated it, and that the proviso is useless to exclude this result, because it cannot apply to irrigation in zemindaris and inam villages, since the term "supplied," which is used in it, not "supplied or used" as elsewhere in the sections, is inappropriate to those tracts, inasmuch as it connotes a previous request for water which zemindars and inamdars do not and need not make. This attenuated line of construction must be distrusted, if only because its acceptance would leave it doubtful what class of cases the proviso was framed for. But in fact it rests entirely on the distinction between supply and use drawn in Venkatappayya v. Collector of Kistna (22) and Krishnayya v. Secretary of State (14). It is not necessary for the present purpose to consider whether those decisions were correct. For they dealt with ryotwari cultivation in the Kistna District. In that district, as I shall show immediately, Government was at that date insisting on its rights, and under the rules for levy of water cess on zemindari and inam lands in the Kistna and Godavari deltas at page 2, Board's Standing Orders, Volume II (1907), land-holders or the cultivators under them immediately concerned were being required to submit previous applications for the use of water. The interpretations of the term "supply" and the distinction now relied on between it and "use" would, therefore, have had no such implication in the district in which these decisions were given as that now suggested; and it may be doubted whether they would have been adopted if the cases had come from other districts, such as Ganjam, than now in question. I, therefore, find no difficulty in applying the proviso generally to land irrigated under an engagement and the Act, as a whole, to river irrigation in zemindaris and inam villages.

Something has been said, in this and other connection in argument and in the learned Judge's judgment under appeal, of the history of the relations between Government and the zemindars. It is argued, for instance, that the "engagement" in the proviso just referred to cannot have been merely for the exemption of lands cultivated wet in 1865, because it would have been impossible to distinguish for that purpose the extent of wet cultivation on which, with other assets, the peishkush was fixed in 1803. In some cases again it is known to have been fixed then on the extent of cultivation as ascertained before 1786; and it is not to be supposed that the increase between that year and 1802 would have been left out of the calculation, if the extent in 1802 had been intended to bind the zemindar or Government in future. And similarly, to quote the learned Judge, "if the zemindar is now made to pay cess for the excess area (over that allowed as wet at the Settlement), he cannot now localise the area, if any, then under cultivation, so as to demand their contribution from the tenants of the excess area." And reference has also been made to the failure of Government in this case to make any demand for many years up to 1894. These arguments, however, are not relied on as supporting any plea of prescription or estoppel against Government, but as relating to conduct which will throw light on the meaning of the sanad, Regulation and Act and the meaning of "engagement" in the last mentioned; and I deal with them only on that basis, and, as before, rather because the learned Judge has relied on them than because they are, in my opinion, admissible. Firstly, as to peishkush, the particular facts referred to by the learned Judge appear to have been among those imported into the case in his judgment. But, accepting them as given, I cannot, with all respect, see how they prove more than that the peishkush was fixed in some zemindaris in more and in others in a less arbitrary way; and I cannot, even in the case of the latter such as Pittapur, draw any inference from the omission to bring sixteen years' wet cultivation into the calculation. It is common ground only that at least wet cultivation existing before 1802 was included in it and became exempt from separate charge. When the calculation was, it is admitted, in all cases inexact and differed only in the degree of its inexactitude, it is conceivable, as matter of conjecture, that either, as plaintiffs contend, the potential right to the use of water in the future was included in the grant, or that it was reserved to be the subject of future arrangement, which was never made. But the choice between these two theories must then be made on the considerations already set out. It would appear to be true that no effort was made contemporaneously with the Permanent Settlement to identify and register, that is to localise, the particular fields entitled to irrigation at its date. The omission was, no doubt, unfortunate and has led to litigation; and the hardship may, no doubt, be real as between the zemindar and his tenants, when the former has to select from the latter the individuals from whom he will recover what he has paid to Government. But similar hardship must ensue and presumably is taken into account in connection with every Statute by which the burden of proof is placed on the subject against Government and has to be discharged after the lapse of years; and that fact cannot justify the Court in presuming, or accepting inadequately supported inferences in support of a grant, of which direct evidence is wanting.

There is, moreover, evidence available, which, if this line of argument is legitimate deserves consideration, since it consists in rules published by Government, which are, it is to be presumed in the absence of anything to the contrary indicative of the extent to which Government has claimed and zemindars and inamdars have acquiesced in a restriction of free irrigation, irreconcilable with these arguments. The theory of a grant of free irrigation from rivers in 1803 was, no doubt, stated by Mr. Rangachariar, as I gave it above, as confined to those zemindaris through which the river in question flows. But that restriction was frequently lost sight of in argument and does not appear to have been recognised in the judgment under appeal, the contention dealt with in it being for a general grant in 1802 of existing irrigation and such further irrigation as might ever be made available, without reference to the proximity of any part of the zemindari to the source. And naturally so. For the restriction can have no logical foundation when the grant is not supported with reference to riparian ownership and every argument for it which has been adduced would be equally valid, if the broader statement in the learned Judge's judgment had been in question before us. It will then be materially against plaintiffs, if it can be shown that some zemindaris have been subjected to the charge for water for many years inconsistently with the grant which they allege as made to all and with their interpretation of Act VII of 1865. That, however, has been the case as regards the large zemindaris, including Nuzvid and Pittapur in the Kistna and Godavari Districts, under rules published originally in 1861, and re-published last in 1906, which are printed in the judgment of Sankaran Nair, J., in Zamindar of Kapileswarapuram v. Secretary of State (13) and page 2, Board's

SECRETARY OF STATE V. KANNEPALLI JANAKIRAMAYYA.

Standing Orders, Volume II (1907). Rule 10 of the original rules and rule 6 of the later, no doubt, restrict liability to water-tax payable on lands charged as irrigated at the time of, or possessed of means of irrigation before, the construction of the anicuts. But the reason for this restriction, the effect of which was discussed in the case above mentioned, is presumably to be found in the difficulty, already referred to, of determining what land was and was not irrigated at the date of the Permanent Settlement, not in any consciousness that land newly irrigated since it would not have been liable to charge in consequence of the zemindar's ownership of the river water. For if that ownership had been tacitly admitted, it would have been impossible to do what the rules certainly provide for; that is, to treat zemindars as liable for any charge for river water at all. It is not, it should be pointed out, possible to regard the charge under the rules as made in consideration only of the part played by the anicut in making the water available and as supplementary to a water rate imposed and retained by the zemindar on account of the water itself. For, it is not suggested and it is not, I believe, the case that any such payment is made to the zemindar by the actual cultivator, though evidence of such a payment should have been available to support plaintiffs' argument, if it corresponded with facts. Moreover, the tenancy law in force at different times in the Presidency, section 11 (4), Act VIII of 1865, and section 30 (3) and 33, Act I of 1908, would discountenance such a pretension on the part of the zemindar; vide also Bachu Ramesam v. Nukala Bhanappa (23) and Narasimha Naidu v. Ramasami (24). When, as is the case, the grant in 1803 is alleged as founded throughout the Presidency in the same manner, the fact that it has been formally negatived by practice in two districts, in which the rights of Government have been continuously asserted, is against its validity in others, where they have not.

The conclusions reached are against the establishment of the alleged grant in 1802 either directly or indirectly with reference to the wording of Act VII of 1865, or, if the evidence is admissible, the conduct of Government and the expressions of contemporaneous opinions and expectations relied on. It remains to deal shortly with the cases, so far as they are in point, with reference to each of the foundations on which plaintiffs' claim has been argued, the ownership by Urlam of the river-bed and the grant. I have reserved both classes of cases for treatment together, because both are subject to the same observation, that they rather show the vexed nature of the questions in issue than support the existence of a current of affirmative authority in respect of them. For the earlier really decide very little and the later contain hardly any attempt to reconcile the conflicting opinions, which have been expressed.

The only early case as to the claim based on ownership of the river-bed is Narasimha Sastry v. Secretary of State (6). In it the claim, as originally made, was as wide as plaintiffs'. But in second appeal that was abandoned, and the decree allowed merely the right of a riparian proprietor to a reasonable use of the water. The legitimate extent of such reasonable use was not defined; there is nothing to suggest that it included what plaintiffs here require, the right to irrigate the land of others; and the fact that Government claimed only the right of a lower riparian proprietor is immaterial, since a wider claim would have resulted in no more favourable decision. On account, it may be, of some systematic and novel attempt by Government to assert its rights, the other decisions on this part of the argument and the majority of those relating to the grant date from 1908. Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State for India (16) recognised the paramount right of Government without reference to Act III of 1905, not only to regulate river water, but also to ownership in it, since, after deciding that any surplus of water after the zemindar's customary requirements had been satisfied was at the disposal of Government, the learned Judges held that the paramount right of Government under the law of the Presidency was independent of the ownership of the bed of the stream, in Secretary of State for India v. Nauthes- warar (25), the plaintiff was an inamdar, but it is admitted that his rights would be identical with those of a zemindar; and it was held immaterial that the natural stream, which was in question, had been swelled by rain water. The conclusion was in favour of Government, and it was observed that Act VII of 1865 is not based on any theory of the ownership of the bed of a water-course being the foundation of a right to use the water free of charge. Kandukuri Mahalakshammamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) was decided in appeal against the judgment in the case already referred to, as containing the District Judge's finding on this point, and is statedly dissented from by Sankaran Nair, J. in his present judgment. The conclusion in favour of Government is based on Act III of 1905 and a statement that the owners of land on the river banks do not own its water. So far the current of authority is clearly in favour of Government. But in Secretary of State v. Kannapalli Venkataratnammah (7) the Court decided for plaintiff, on the ground that the ownership of water from a Government source followed the ownership of a branch channel by which it was conveyed. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi v. Secretary of State (8) was referred to, but in it the ownership of the branch channel was not established and it was unnecessary to consider what its effect on the ownership of the water would have been. So far as Secretary of State v. Kannapalli Venkataratnammah (7) is in point (for it refers only to a channel carrying Government water, not to a river), its authority is impaired by the fact that it does not take account of Act III of 1905, or the reference to water, as well as water-courses, in it and makes no reference to other cases already mentioned. In Secretary of State v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (12) the judgment adopted the positions as to the effect of Act III of 1905 and the connection between ownership of the river-bed and water now under consideration, though it may be observed that the finding as to the plaintiffs' right to water sufficient to fill his tanks would have been ground for a decision in his favour. Vide Maria Susai Mudaliar v. Secretary of State (11). Lastly, there is the judgment of Sankaran Nair, J. in Secretary of State v. Simhadri (26) 6 Ind. Cas. 199; 34 M. L. J. 407; 20 M. L. J. 766; (1910) M. W. N. 495.

Jaghapathiraju (26) to the same effect, whilst the other learned Judge concerned, Spencer, J., did not, if I understand him correctly, express a definite opinion on either point. The safe conclusion from these authorities is, I think, only that the theory of a connection between the ownership of the river-bed and water is of recent growth and that the affirmative reasons which are necessary in order to support it and to displace the earlier decisions have not been given.

The first case relied on as supporting a grant in 1803 is Ponnusawmi Tevar v. Collector of Madura (10); and there is, no doubt, some language used, particularly in the judgment of Innes, J., which implies that a transfer of the right to use the water in a channel was the basis of the decision. But he connected that transfer, not with the Permanent Settlement, but with the acquiescence of Government in the plaintiff's enjoyment of what had become a customary right. And there is a caution to be observed in the application of this and other cases to the question before us, that references to and findings in favour of a right to water do not necessarily relate to water free of charge, or deal with more than the right to water from a particular source or provided in a particular way. Thus in the case under consideration the plaintiff's right to free irrigation was never disputed, Government alleging that other sufficient provision had been made for it; and the decision is, therefore, irrelevant to the present argument. In Maria Susai Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India in Council (11) and Secretary of State for India v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (3) mittahs, parts of zemindaris granted in 1803, were in question, the irrigation being by artificial channels taking off from rivers; and these cases are relied on by the plaintiffs, though the estates were not riparian. But the rule laid down in general terms gave no support to their contention, since it was that the only undertaking to be implied from a grant of land by Government is one to supply water free of charge to the extent of the accustomed flow at its date, that flow in the earlier case being measured by the capacity of tanks, which the proprietor was entitled to fill, and in the later by the extent of land irrigated. In Secretary of State v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (12), there is nothing to show whether this principle was referred to in argument; and it is not referred to in the judgment, parts of which appear inconsistent with it. The argument based on a grant in 1803 made its first clear appearance in Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4), in which in fact the Urlam proprietor was plaintiff; and it is significant that it was postponed so long. It was rejected shortly, the Court describing the only engagement involved in the Permanent Settlement as it was described in Secretary of State v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (12) and as it has been earlier in this judgment, "that the peishkush being fixed with reference to the area under irrigation, no further charge for the use of water should be made in respect of that area." There is next the judgment of Miller, J., in the case before us in favour of Government. Zamindar of Kapileswarapuram v. Secretary of State (13) relates to the Kistna District and has already been discussed. My conclusion is that the recognition of a grant in 1803 is of recent date, though it is not clear how far the earlier decisions incompatible with one were given after any such full argument for the contention as has subsequently been put forward. In the circumstances I can only hold that authority, if it does not support, is no obstacle to the decision I have come to.

The result is that neither the right of Urlam to the river water, whether as founded on ownership of the river-bed or on grant in 1803, nor plaintiffs' right, so far as it is alleged to be derived from Urlam, has been established. The presumption in favour of Government ownership, authorised by Act III of 1905, must, therefore, be made.

The remaining ground, on which Mr. Rangachariar argued the case, was an assertion of plaintiffs' direct ownership of the water. In consequence of the misapprehension of their position by the learned Judge, it is not distinctly referred to in his judgment; but it was stated before us as being that, where there is a channel taking off from a river and it is at the time of Settlement part of the irrigation system of the estate, then, whether or no that channel runs entirely through the estate, it and all the water in it belong to the estate, subject to the customary right of others. In the present case the Mobagam channel, that in question, no doubt, runs through the plaintiffs' inam village after running through part of the Urlam zemindari and before running through a Government village. But then we have the finding of the learned District Judge, which we have been shown no reason for dissent from, that there is practically no evidence to show that the channel was dug by plaintiffs' ancestor, or that any repairs were executed by them or their fellow-inamdars on it, or of any title of plaintiffs or their ancestor to it. In these circumstances it is impossible to hold what plaintiffs' argument requires, that the channel is part of the irrigation system of their village. Further, if any part of the channel were plaintiffs' property, the conclusion already reached, that the river water is the property of Government, would be valid against them; and we have been shown no reason for holding that Government water becomes the property of any individual who succeeds in bringing it into a channel on his land. That position would, no doubt, be justified directly by the case of Secretary of State v. Kannapalli Venkataratnammah (7) already referred to, and indirectly perhaps by other cases which I have declined to follow. It is, however, negatived by the statement in Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) :—

"It does not follow, because the zemindar provides the necessary channels to enable the irrigation of the zemindari lands, that although those channels carry water supplied from a river or channel belonging to the Government, the irrigation is nevertheless exempt from water-cess;" and the same conclusion is also supported by other cases among those already dealt with. It is to be observed that the plaintiffs have not and probably could not have based their right to water without charge as distinguished from mere supply of water, on custom. The decision on plaintiffs' claim, as based on their own independent right to free water, must also be against them.

I would for the foregoing reasons allow the appeal, dismissing plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—It is unnecessary for me to state in detail the facts and contentions fully set out in the judgment of Sir Sankaran Nair, J., under appeal.

I might begin by saying that when two very learned Judges (Sir Leslie Miller and Sir Sankaran Nair) have differed on a question of law, after each of them had bestowed an extraordinary length of consideration to the matter, it is with great diffidence that I express my own opinion on the question on which they have differed.

I wish in the first place to clear the ground by a few short remarks on questions which are not either relevant or very remotely relevant to the points to be decided in this case and also on certain arguments advanced on both sides, which, to my mind, are of dubious soundness.

(A. 1). The proviso to section 1 (b) of the Madras Act VII of 1865, which refers to engagements with the Government by zemindars, inamdars or other landholders, need not be considered in this case. [What the engagement of a zemindar or inamdar with the Government is, how it is to be ascertained, whether the area mentioned in an inam title-deed as wet is binding on the inamdar or the Government and several similar questions connected with this matter have been considered in numerous cases, of which the latest was decided by my Lord the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar about ten days ago in Secretary of State v. Sri Perarulala Ramannja Geer Swamikal (27)].

(A. 2). A historical retrospect of the relations between the Government and the zemindars, between the Government and their ryotwari tenants, between zemindars and inamdars, between zemindars and their ryots, between the inamdars and their tenants, of the conflicting claims as to the ownership and proprietary rights over the soil made by each of these parties, of the claims to communal lands and so on and so forth, seems, in my opinion, to be of little assistance in arriving at a true view of the provisions of the Statute and Case-Laws which now mostly govern the rights of these parties. Historical deductions almost always differ according to various idiosyncracies, sympathies and prejudices of the students of historical data. Further, the rights of zemindars, as they once existed or are alleged to have existed, cannot affect for better or worse their present rights. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the argument of the Advocate-General based on historical data that a zemindar has now no proprietary right in the soil of the lands enclosed within his zemindari limits, the argument being that as at one time he was 'a mere farmer of revenue under the old indigenous Governments, his claim to proprietorship of the soil of poramboke lands should be now negatived. Nor do I attach much weight to the contentions of Mr. Rangachariar based on the sovereign rights which are alleged to have vested once upon a time in zemindars, such sovereign rights being alleged to include absolute powers of disposal of all lands within their territories. Regulation XXV of 1802, section 2, vests the proprietary right over the land within a zemindari in the landholder, although that proprietary right may be subject to the communal rights of the villagers and to the occupancy rights of ryots, all which rights are now protected by Statute Law, that is by the Estates Land Act and other Acts. Numerous cases both in this Presidency and in Bengal) where permanent sanads were issued in practically the same form as in Madras) decided by the Privy Council and by the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta have established the rights of the owners of permanently settled estates over the beds of the rivers passing through their zemindari, over the forest lands and hills, and over the mines and minerals found within the zemindari, and over the tanks and the fisheries in the tanks and over the waters therein, that is, they have, in my opinion, established the rights of the zemindars as proprietors of the poramboke lands within their zemindari limits. The inam title-deeds for whole inam villages granted by zemindars prior to the Settlement and confirmed by the Government (both prior to and at the time of enfranchisement) also vest the proprietary right in the poramboke lands (in inam villages, subject, of course, to the customary rights of the ryots and residents) in the inamdars; and the Case-Law has, in my opinion, uniformly recognised that right of the zemindars and inamdars. The judgment in Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) has accepted this position, so far as proprietary rights over poramboke lands are concerned. [See also Po nusawmi Tevar v. Collector of Madura (10) and Narasimha Sastrial v. Secretary of State (6)].

(A. 3). The consideration of the questions whether the Government could have intended to be guilty of so much harshness and oppression as would result if a particular Statute were to be interpreted in one way, and whether the Legislature could have intended such a sudden change in the law as would result from a particular interpretation,—the consideration of these questions, in my opinion, is of doubtful utility unless the words of the Statute are so very ambiguous that it is legitimate to resort to such extraneous considerations. Speaking for myself, I am not satisfied that there is in this case justification for resort to such extraneous considerations. Further, what might be deemed harshness and oppression on the part of the Government by a mind holding conservative views as regards the sacred rights arising from individual property in land might be considered by a mind with socialistic leanings (socialism, except of the very extreme kind, not being a heretical doctrine in these days) as the proper beneficial exercise by the Government (representing the public communal interests) of its right to get the benefit of unearned increments and of the performance of its duty to utilize the sacred inalienable claims of the people as a whole to the common enjoyment of the benefits arising from all the lands within a State. I shall, therefore, dismiss from my mind the arguments of Mr. Rangachariar based on the alleged glaring iniquity and injustice of trying to get some more revenue out of zemindars and inamdars after the solemn promises alleged to have been made to them by high officers of Government several decades ago.

(A. 4). Further, I do not feel much pressed by the wide language used in old English cases and relied on by Mr.

Rangachariar as to no individual human being being entitled to claim ownership of flowing or standing waters, as water standing on or flowing over land (in this respect resembling the air of the atmosphere) cannot be made the subject of ownership until it is separated in vessels, or solidified into ice and severed and appropriated as a moveable. Mr. Rangachariar quoted English text-books and cases in support of his contention. Under the old English Common Law, it seems that as water is neither land nor tenement, it cannot be sued for separately in a real property action under the name of water or by measure, so long as it is standing on or flowing over land, although the land which underlies it may be the subject of a Common Law action. I think that references to the technicalities of English Common Law actions merely tend to confuse the mind when it has to decide on the rights of Indian litigants. I shall, therefore, not deal with the arguments based on antiquated forms of action. The Indian Legislature in Madras Act III of 1905 has made reference to the "property" rights not only of Government but of zemindars, inamdars, Government ryots, Malabar jenmis, etc., in standing and flowing water, and Indian Courts must recognise such "property" rights so far as they are recognised by the Indian Legislature. Further, the use of the wide words "owner," "property" and "proprietor" even in the case of lands has led to great confusion in the determination of occupancy and other rights, as pointed out by Sir Subrahmania Aiyer, J., in the Cheekati case, Cheekati Zemindar v. Rana-sooru Dhora (28).

(A. 5). There were some arguments advanced at the Bar on the question whether the words "river," "stream," "channel," and "tank," found in section 1 (a) of the Madras Act VII of 1865 meant (1) the bed, banks and the volume of waters taken together in the river, stream, channel or tank, or (2) whether it meant the bed alone, or the bed and banks alone of the river, stream, channel or tank, or (3) whether it meant only the collection of the waters in the river, stream, channel or tank. I think clause (b) of section 1 of that Act which speaks of water from any such river, stream, channel or tank," clearly indicates that the words "river, stream, etc.," are used in the sense of the collective body of waters which are called river, stream, channel, or tank according to the respective configurations of the receptacles. The judgment in Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) also takes the above view.

(A 6). The question whether, in a case where the irrigating waters, though flowing over or standing on zemindari or inam land, have been assisted in their beneficent work of irrigation by a work "belonging to or constructed by Government" (see the preamble and section 1 (a) of Act VII of 1865), the Government can impose water-cess does not arise in this case (while it arose, though only very partially, in the Urlam case, as pointed out in the judgment under appeal). The finding of the District Judge in this case (not disputed before us) is that no such work has been constructed by Government in connection with the Mobagam Channel, or with the branch channel, till it leaves the inamdar's limits.

(A 7). Lastly, on the view I take of the facts of this case, it is also unnecessary to decide on the meaning of the word "supplied" in the first proviso to section 1, clause (b), of Act VII of 1865. I might, however, say that I do not agree with the interpretation of that word, given in Venkatappayya v. Collector of Kistna (22) and Krishnayya v. Secretary of State (14); namely, that the word "supplied," when used in connection with water-supply, implies a previous request by the owner of the land which is supplied with water. As far as water-supply is concerned; rivers, streams, channels and tanks are usually spoken of as supplying fields irrigated under them with water for such irrigation and the idea of a request to the source of supply is inadmissible in such cases. The argument based on the Legislature not having, in the Amendment Act of 1900, changed the word "supplied," judicially interpreted as above in Venkatappayya v. Collector of Kistna (22) and Krishnayya v. Secretary of State (14), does not convince me that the Legislature adopted that interpretation, as those cases related to water supplied to ryotwari lands and the amendment of 1900 fully established the rights of Government to levy assessment in respect of water even involuntarily supplied to such ryotwari lands. One other question may be shortly considered here. Assuming that the beds of streams and rivers, flowing between banks, both of which belong to a zemindar or an inamdar, are the property of the zemindar or inamdar and assuming that the waters standing on or flowing over such beds within the limits of the zemindari belong to the zemindar or the inamdar (subject, of course, to the rights of lower riparian ryot in natural rivers and streams, and subject to the ownership over those waters ceasing to exist in the proprietor on the waters leaving such limits by evaporation or by flowing away) the question is whether, when one of the banks alone of a stream or river belongs to a zemindar or an inamdar, he is entitled to half the bed of the river or stream on his side. The rule of English Law no doubt is that such half along the length bounded on that one side by the riparian owner's land belongs to that riparian owner, provided of course the river is not a tidal or navigable river. But is that also the Indian Law in all cases? In the case in Mukkassa Nair Veettil v. Secretary of State for India (17) I ventured to express an opinion that the Indian Common Law did not recognise this alleged right of the owner of the land in ryotwari tracts or in Malabar which are not under the Permanent Settlement to half the breadth of a highway, or to half the breadth of the bed of a river adjoining such land. I am still inclined to hold that the historical incidents and peculiar feudal tenures connected with English real property law (which was probably further affected by notions derived from the Roman Law) may have had much to do with the establishment of the doctrine that the soil of highways and of the beds of natural waterways belong in equal half-breadths to the owners on both sides. I think that the Indian Common Law vested such rights in the village community as a whole within the village limits and in the Sovereign power as representing the community in other places. However, I think it is too late to question the applicability of this English Law so far as the beds of non-tidal and non-navigable rivers and streams bounded by zemindari and whole inam lands are concerned as the case-law has established such rights in favour of the zemindar and inamdar.

Mr. Rangachariar, if I understood him aright, would not admit the right of the Government even to beds of rivers bounded by ryotwari lands on both sides. I can only say that I have never in my pretty long experience come across any case in which a ryotwari tenant-owner under Government has ever disputed the right of Government to dispose of islands thrown upon the bed of the river bounding his land, or to make reclamations by planting with reeds (nanal) or otherwise from the bed of the river close to its banks and to grant such reclamations to anybody they like. Ryotwari lands stand on an entirely different footing from zemindari and inam lands, as Government has not lost proprietary rights over ryotwari lands. That ryotwari land continues "to be Government land", while land in a permanently settled estate is not Government land is further indicated by the definition of "Government land" in the Madras Survey and Boundaries Act, IV of 1897, section 3 (i), which says that "Government land means any land not forming an estate or any portion thereof", while clause (i) defines the word "Estate" as zemindari, jagir, mitta, palayam, inam village, etc. Thus the Government treats itself as owner of its ryotwari tenants' lands while it treats the zemindar and inamdar as owner of the lands in permanently settled, estates. A zemini holding lands in Malabar (where also there is no Permanent Settlement) is placed on the same footing as a person holding under ryotwari tenure in clause 2 (1) (a) of Act III of 1905. In ryotwari tracts river-bed porambokes and even small channel porambokes (though running through pattah lands) are entered as Government property in public Revenue Records. Gradual and imperceptible accretions to ryotwari tenants' holdings from adjoining porambokes are prevented by placing demarcation stones round patta lands. The Government still treats itself as the proprietor of the ryotwari lands, whereas in zemindari tracts, the zemindar is the proprietor, taking the place of Government so far as proprietary rights are concerned, Government having, as admitted in page 300 of the judgment in Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) not, reserved to themselves the beds of channels or tank-beds or the village sites or other poramboke lands within the zemindari limits.

As regards river-beds, however, bounded by zemindari lands on one side, the Gedavari Lanka case decided so long ago as in 1858 (see Sudder Adawlat Decisions of 1858, page 188) has established the right of the zemindar to the soil of the bed of the river up to half its breadth on his side. Further, in my opinion, the learned Advocate-General's argument contra cannot be accepted in this case in view of the admission in the written statement, paragraph 3, which says that the portion of the bed of the Vamsadhara river where the Mobagam Channel takes off is within the limits of the permanently settled estate of Urlam. I might further add that the zemindar's right to half the bed of the Vamsadhara river along the length bounded by the Urlam zemindari is taken as undisputed by the learned District Judge, Mr. Ayling (now Justice Sir William Ayling, one of the Judges of this Court), and his finding was not attacked in the memorandum of appeal filed in this Court. I might also state that in the written statement, the Government's right to levy assessment for the waters used by the inamdars (plaintiffs) for irrigating their lands was based on the specific ground that the irrigating Mobagam Channel and the branch Merakabatte Channel belonged to and were under the control of the Government. (See paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of the written statement.) The learned District Judge found that these channels did not belong to Government, that the soil of the beds of these channels (at the point where the branch channel leaves the inam limits) had been granted to the Urlam zemindar about 1803 under the permanent sanad fixing his zemindari limits and that the channels were never under the control of the Government. This finding of the learned District Judge is accepted by Sir Sankaran Nair, J., and not dissented from by Sir Leslie Miller, J., and, on the evidence, I am clear that that finding is correct. [See also the plan, Exhibit J, prepared by the Revenue Survey Department in 1871, which demarcates half the river-bed (including the site of the take off of the Mobagam channel) as belonging to the zemindari village.]

Having thus cleared the ground, the only remaining question in this case might, in my opinion, be formulated thus:

"Do the waters flowing in the Vamsadhara river at the length and over that portion of the bed, which bounds the Utlam zemindari, and from which bed the Mobagam Channel takes off, belong to Government within the meaning of the expression 'water from river belonging to Government' found in section 1 of Madras Act VII of 1865?" There can be no doubt that the Government start with a strong presumption in their favour under Madras Act III of 1905, that all standing and flowing waters belong to them, but it is a rebuttable presumption. Though this suit was brought before Madras Act III of 1905 was enacted, and though the Government in their written statement relied upon the ownership of the Mobagam Channel-bed and the control over the waters in that channel as the foundation of their claim to treat the waters flowing into that channel from the Vamsadhara river as their property, I cannot say that they are estopped from claiming proprietorship in those waters under the general presumption in their favour raised by Act III of 1905 passed during the pendency of this suit. The provision of that Act raising such a presumption in favour of the Government cannot, strictly speaking, be said to take away any rights vested in persons who had claims over standing and flowing waters. Rules of evidence enacted by the Legislature come into force at once and must be followed by the Courts in deciding on the rights of parties, whatever may have been the previous state of the law in regard to the proper presumptions and burdens of proof under particular circumstances.

Taking it, then, that the plaintiffs in this case have to prove that the waters of the Vamsadhara river at the particular place where the Mobagam channel takes off do not belong to Government, the question is, has that burden of proof been discharged in this case? If I understand the judgment in Kundukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) rightly, the opinion there expressed is that, even though the bed of the river may be vested in the owner of the land situated along the banks so as to give him the right to accretions or lankas forming therein (as has been decided in the Godavari Lanka case), and though the bed of the river itself may belong to that adjacent owner, still the collection of waters flowing over the bed can never in any sense belong to that owner and can only belong to Government. The judgment says, for instance, at page 303:—

"The river, it seems to me, belongs to Government even though the bed may be vested in the owners of the land along the banks."

It is said further on in the judgment:

"Now clearly the waters of the Vamsadhara river do not belong to any one else but the Government. The owners of the land at the banks of the river do not own the water."

Thus, if I understand the decision aright, all flowing and standing waters, though flowing over beds belonging to others, or standing on tank beds belonging to others, are the property of Government. In this connection, I wish to point out that not only "all standing and flowing waters" wherever situate are and are declared to be the property of Government, but the words just coming after "all flowing and standing waters" in section 2 (1) of Act III of 1905 are "all lands wherever situated." Thus as regards all lands also wherever situate, the presumption is created by that section that they belong to Government unless proved to belong to zemindars, inamdars, etc. As regards standing water in tanks, can it be reasonably argued that the ownership of the tank bed has nothing to do with the ownership of the water standing on it? Can it be said that, even though rain water fills the tank, standing waters are the property of Government though the tank bed may not be the property of Government? It will be seen further that section 2, clause 1, reserves all right of way and other public rights, all the natural and easement rights of other landowners and all customary rights legally subsisting. Thus all standing and flowing water is not made the absolute property of Government even, when it is not proved to belong to the zemindars or poligars or inamdars or ryots. That is, "plenary" rights are not declared in standing or flowing water in favour of Government. The section again assumes that zemindars, poligars, inamdars,

SECRETARY OF STATE v. KANNEPALLI JANAKIRAMAYYA.

e.c., can have the same kind of "property" or ownership in standing and flowing water as Government is declared to possess. The judgment in Kandukuri Mahalakshamanma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) says that it was not contended by the Vakils for the appellants in that case that the water was their property (see page 303). I do not know what precise admissions were made in that case. That flowing water by its very nature can never be the absolute property of the Government or anybody else (though the ownership in a very real sense can be predicated of it as vesting in a person so long as the water continues to be situated vertically over land belonging to that person) is clear to my mind; and when section 2 (1) says that all standing and flowing waters are hereby declared to be the property of Government (except as may be otherwise provided for by any law for the time being in force, subject always to all public rights and natural and easement rights of other land-owners and to all customary rights), it seems to me that the Legislature did not intend to give to the Government greater rights of ownership in flowing water than the principles of general jurisprudence would allow. It has been held in this Court that the Government cannot divert water even against the customary rights of their own ryotwari tenants (though the water flow over beds of rivers belonging to Government) without providing other equally effective facilities for irrigation. When water flows in a river over the bed-portion belonging to one owner, that water is temporarily and usufructually his property (subject to well-known natural rights of others). As soon as it leaves that portion of the bed and begins to flow over another bed-portion belonging to another owner, the water becomes the property of the owner of that bed-portion, subject again to the same rights. So, as all land also are presumably declared to belong to Government, water flowing over any lands is presumably the "property" of Government, the "property" in the water following the "property" in the land. I can find nothing in section 2 of the Madras Act III of 1905 which was intended to give the Government greater rights over water standing or flowing vertically over their land than any other proprietor of land like a zemindar or namdar has over water standing or flowing over his. The distribution of water among their own ryotwari tenants [see Chief Justice Scotland's judgment in Ponnusawmi Tevar v. Collector of Madura (10)] is no doubt a right which the Government exercise as sovereign landlord; but after they had parted with proprietary rights over the beds of particular streams in favour of zemindars or inamdars, it is impossible, in my opinion, to hold that they retain proprietary rights over water standing in tanks in zemindaris, or flowing through zemindari lands, or in water flowing in all natural channels, or through artificial channels constructed with the knowledge and permission of Government and owned by the zemindar or inamdar, or in water percolating into zemindari and inam tracts and such a claim was clearly negated in the case of Ponnusawmi Tevar v. Collector of Madura (10). The Mobagam Channel itself is an artificial channel belonging to the Urlam zemindar (the channel at its tail end feeding the Mobagam Tank belonging to that zemindar). If Kandukuri Mahalakshamanma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) has been uniformly followed from which it was decided in September 1910, I ought not, of course, to lightly differ from it. The only case in which it was so followed seems to be the case of Secretary of State for India v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (3). But, as pointed out in the judgment under appeal, there is a later decision of Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., added to the report of the decision of the Division Bench on the present case reported as Secretary of State v. Kannepalli Janakiramayya (1); this later decision being found in Secretary of State v. Kannapalli Vencataratnammah (7) as a footnote case to the present case. The learned Judges, Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., say at page 368:-

"The channel was not one which passed through any Government property before it reached the village of Lakkinidi. It is apparently not a large stream connected with any system of irrigation maintained by Government.... There was no intention on the part of the Government at any time to derogate from the grant made in 1767. Both of the learned District Judges who dealt with the case proceeded on the footing that the channel and other poramboke in the village belonged to the inamdar. On the whole, we see no reason to dissent from that conclusion. It has, therefore, not been proved that the water irrigating the village belongs to Government."

The learned Judges, therefore, clearly held that when flowing water passes over a river or channel-bed which does not belong to Government, the water cannot be said to be the property of Government while it is so flowing over that bed. Of course, it may be said that the learned Judges did not refer to the decision of Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4). The case, however, of Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4) could not have been absent from the mind of at least one of the Judges (namely Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar) who decided the footnote case reported as Rama Das v. Hanumantha Row (29), for it was Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar (though he was not a Government Law Officer) whose well-known strenuous and powerful advocacy had been evidently specially secured by the Government for the conduct of the appeals in these Urlam cases in the High Court. If Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar expresses an opinion as a Judge opposed to the opinion for which he argued at the Bar, such an opinion of his as a Judge carries by that fact much more weight, and his non-reference to the decision of Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4), from which he clearly differed in Secretary of State v. Kannapalli Vencataratnammah (7), is not difficult to understand under those circumstances.

There are two well-known legal maxims which usually come to mind in such cases. One is aqua currit et debet currere ut currere solebat, which signifies that water flows and ought to flow as it used to flow. Grounding on this maxim, it is usually stated that there is no property in running water, but merely a right to use it, and this right may only be exercised so as not to interfere with the use of the water by other persons similarly entitled. But the right to use it can itself be called a property in running water, and (as I have said already) it is not wise to confuse ourselves by juggling with the word "property" or the word "owner."

(29) 12 Ind. Cas. 449; 36 M. 364; 21 M. L. J. 952; 10 M. L. T. 356; (1911) 2-M. W. N. 387.

The other maxim is cujus est solum etc., meaning that whoever is the owner of the soil, it is his even to the firmament and to the middle of the earth. This maxim is the basis of the rule that waters in ponds and wells situated on land owned by a person belong to him in a very real sense, and that on the flowing waters also running over his land he has got a real right of property, though of a qualified kind. Section 2 of Madras Act III of 1905, though it talks of property in waters both in the Government and in the zemindar or inamdar, contains (as I said) several clauses qualifying such right of property. I am reasonably clear that the maxim aqua currit, etc., was not intended to be abrogated in favour of Government. That it was not so intended in the case of a zemindar or inamdar is not disputed and the language of the section does not to my mind constrain us to hold otherwise in the case of water flowing over even Government lands. On the other hand, how else is a zemindar or inamdar to prove his "property" in "standing or flowing water" except by proving his "property" in the land situated over or under such water, it being clear from the section 2 (i) (a) itself that such "property" can exist in him? [See Narasimha Sastri v. Secretary of State (6).]

There is, no doubt, a distinction in the extent of the proprietary or ownership rights of a man in water over his soil according as the water is standing water (as in a tank), or water naturally flowing as a river (though the waters cannot be said to belong to anybody else so long as the waters are still vertically over his soil).

But I find it very difficult to hold that there is another distinction between (a) the ownership rights of a man in the waters over the soil owned by him, without liability on his part to be taxed by Government for exercising the right of use of such waters springing from such ownership, and (b) the ownership of such waters with the right of user springing from such ownership being subject to the liability to be taxed by Government. I am unable to find that any such new distinction between the extents of rights in waters has been created by Act VII of 1865 or Act III of 1905. The former Act refers to a body of waters belonging to Government, and the latter enacts that all waters and lands prima facie belong to Government and that other claimants of rights of ownership in any such waters or lands have to prove their rights as against Government. The former Act gives a right to the Government to tax waters belonging to Government and used in the irrigation of the lands of persons not owning the right in the said waters. A new intermediate class of ownership in waters, in which the soil proprietor has all the ordinary and natural rights to use the water which is his "property" but with liability to pay assessment to Government (though the Government cannot be said to own the waters as they do not own the soil under the waters), seems to me to be not contemplated by either Act, and no such distinction seems to have been made before Kandukuri Mahalakshamma Garu v. Secretary of State for India (4). On the other hand, it was assumed, as a matter of course, in almost all the cases dealing with this question that if the zemindar or inamdar owns the right to use the waters unlimitedly (excepting, of course, the natural right of lower riparian owner) within his bed without interference from Government, he is entitled to use them free of assessment and he is entitled even to a refund of the assessment collected from him by the Government on the wrongful claim made by the Government that the irrigating waters belong to them. If a man has the ordinary juridical ownership over waters standing on or flowing over his land (the extent of his right being governed by the well-known rules relating to standing waters, flowing waters, upper and lower riparian rights, etc.), he must also be free from assessment by Government for the use of such waters belonging to him, as the Government can have no ownership at all in such waters till they leave his soil. A new ownership in waters in the Government entitling them to impose assessment for the use thereof, though they have no ownership therein according to ordinary juristic principles, is again difficult for me to grasp and I am not satisfied that any such new kind of ownership was created by either of the two Acts.

I am aware that by the amendment of 1900 to Madras Act VII of 1865 it has been enacted that when water from a river belonging to Government by direct or indirect flow or percolation or drainage irrigates any land under cultivation, the Government is entitled to levy a separate cess for such water. In the case of rivers running over Government poramboke, the water is the property of Government and if it irrigates a ryotwari tenant's land by percolation, it continues even after entering the tenant's holding, as I said, to be Government water, as the tenant's land also belongs in proprietary right to Government and is called Government land in the Survey and Boundaries Act. These considerations do not apply to water flowing over or percolating into zemindari or inam lands and no cess can, therefore, be levied under Act. VII of 1865 for use of that water, excepting probably in case of the water having been made available for beneficial irrigation through works belonging to or constructed by Government.

In the result, I would dismiss this Letters Patent Appeal with costs.

BAKEWELL, J.—The principal question in this appeal is whether the Vamsadhara river, at the place where the Mobagam Channel takes off water which flows to and irrigates the plaintiffs' land, is a river or stream belonging to Government within the meaning of Madras Act VII of 1865.

A river cannot be the exclusive property of any person unless it flows throughout its whole course within his land, since, if another person has a right of access to it, he obtains certain rights of appropriating water from the stream and of preventing other persons from interfering with his rights, even though he has no right of ownership over the land whereon the river flows. [See Lyon v. Fishmongers' Company (30).] It cannot have been the intention of the Legislature to deal only with exceptional cases of this kind, and I think that this Act may be construed as applying to such cases of limited property as arise from ownership of the river-bed. I think that the English authorities show that the owner of the river-bed has a qualified ownership in the stream of water which flows over it, by virtue of which the river and stream may be said to belong to him.

It is admitted on behalf of the respondents that at the beginning of last century the British Government were the owners of the river-bed and of the Uralam zemindari which abuts thereon, and through which the Mobagam Channel conveys water to the plaintiffs' land. It is also admitted by both parties that at about that time the Government issued a sanad of this zemindari in common form, and it is argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that this sanad constitutes a grant of the full ownership of the land comprised in the zemindari, subject to the rights of tenants, and that this grant must be construed in the same manner as a grant of land under English Law and accordingly includes either the whole of the river-bed and the bank adjacent to the zemindari, or at least the river-bed ad mediam filum aquae. The common form of sanad under the Permanent Settlement is not in form a grant of property: it contains no parcels, no dimensions, no boundaries or abutments, and does not follow any precedent known to a British lawyer, but it is to a great extent a literal copy of the preamble and provisions of Regulation XXV of 1802 and differs from it principally in specifying the amount of the assessment to be paid by the zemindar. Paragraph 13 states that "The foregoing conditions contain an abstract of the obligations and duties which you shall incur and of the rights which you have acquired under the new constitution erected for the security, protection and prosperity of the subjects of the British Government;" and the sanad concludes, after an exhortation to good conduct, with a declaration that the grantee is "Hereby authorised and empowered to hold in perpetuity to your heirs, successors and assigns at the permanent assessment herein named, the zemindari of....."

The sanad also contains a direction to the grantee to keep accounts, and for that purpose to maintain the village karnams or accountants, and to enter into agreements with the ryots. Both the sanad and the Regulation already mentioned contain the expressions "a permanent property in their land for all time to come," and "the proprietary right of the soil", but the words "proprietors of land" and "proprietary possession" have a technical signification in the Regulations, and "proprietary possession" has been explained by their Lordships of the Privy Council to mean "the possession and rights of a proprietor in the technical sense in which that word is used, viz., the person who pays the rent immediately to Government" [Oolagappa Chetty v. Aruthno: (31)].

In Regulation IV of 1822 the Government found it necessary to declare that the provisions of previous Regulations, including XXV of 1802, were not meant to define, limit, infringe, or destroy the actual rights of any description of landholders or tenants, and that tenants' rights should be determined by the Courts. I think that these Regulations and the form of sanad show that it was not intended to create any rights of property or to make a grant of a particular estate in land, but rather to invest a certain person with the position or status of zemindar of a particular zemindari, to make that position permanent, transferable and inheritable, and to fix the land tax or share of produce payable by the zemindar or his assigns to the Government. Upon this construction the rights of the zemindar are such as were appurtenant to the zemindari at the date of the sanad and, I think, that the burden is upon him to show that his rights extended beyond the natural boundaries of the zemindari. Doubtless the zemindar and his ryots would continue to exercise all rights, naturally and openly enjoyed by them at the date of the grant; thus not only would the riparian villages be entitled to take water from the river, but the cultivators on an artificial channel in existence at that date, such as the Mobagam Channel, would also be entitled to take as much water therefrom as would pass thereby and as the terms of their holding allowed. Any other construction would be contrary to the intention of the Government, that the lands within the zemindari should be profitably cultivated and that the zemindar should obtain his proper share of the produce and be able to pay his assessment to the Government, and would be in derogation from the grant.

The riparian villagers may have made some use of the river-bed and banks, but there is no evidence that any proprietary rights over them or the stream of water were exercised by these villagers or the zemindars at the date of the sanad, and in my opinion the burden is upon those who assert that any such rights passed under the sanad to prove that they were appurtenant to the zemindari and enjoyed therewith.

It is, I think, obvious that decisions relating to the construction of English conveyances of land, which assume conditions and presumptions different from those prevailing in India, are wholly inapplicable to a sanad under the Permanent Settlement. Even if those decisions apply, the sanad can only be construed as granting the river-bed usque ad medium filum aquæ and the stream of water flowing thereon; and since the other moiety of the river has not been shown to have been transferred by Government it must be taken to be a river or stream of water belonging to Government.

In the natural course of things part of the latter stream must cross the moiety of the river-bed assumed to belong to the zemindar and flow down the Mobagam Channel, and part of the water which reaches the respondents' land comes by direct or indirect flow from a river or stream belonging to Government from or through adjoining land, and is, therefore, chargeable [Act VII of 1865, section 1 (b)].

The learned Judge from whose judgment this appeal is brought based his decision upon the ground that the sanad was a grant of all rights vested in the Sovereign in respect of the zemindari and its appurtenances, except such as were expressly reserved thereby. Regulation XXV of 1802 and the common form of sanad issued thereunder no doubt recognise that the zemindars had formerly exercised certain sovereign rights over the territories under their control, and I think they show the intention of British Government to curtail those rights. Even assuming that the zemindars as petty chieftains exercised some form of sovereignty, it has not been shown that it assumed the form known in the West. As Sir H. S. Maine has pointed out, the idea of the Sovereign as proprietor was derived by the European jurists from Roman Law (see Ancient Law, 10th Edition, page 104 et seq; International Law, page 55); and the idea of sovereignty in India, more especially among such subordinate rulers as the zemindars, was most probably that of a tax-gathering Empire.

The ryots grouped in villages were the possessors and cultivators of the soil under immemorial custom, and the right of the zemindar was probably to extract as much of the produce of the soil as he could from them and from the tenants whom he planted upon the cultivable waste. Paragraph 13 of the sanad, which reserves full legislative powers to the British Government, introduces the European idea of "eminent domain" over the property of the members of the community, under which the Sovereign claims the power of disposing of everything contained within its territory for the general good, and seems to me to negative any intention to transfer "sovereign rights." (See Hall, International Law, 6th Edition, page 45). There is no evidence that the zemindar in this particular case ever exercised any proprietary rights over the Vamsadhara river, or that as ruler he considered himself to possess such rights, and the sanad itself contains no provision whatever with reference thereto.

I am of opinion that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the Vamsadhara river is part of the Utlam zemindari, and that from their own admission as to the property in the river at the date of the sanad as well as from the general presumption as to the rights appurtenant to the zemindari, and the special presumption now raised by Madras Act III of 1905, the river must be held to belong to Government, subject to the ordinary riparian rights and to the special right of taking water through the Mobagam Channel arising from its existence at the date of the sanad. I agree with Oldfield, J., that the general terms of Act VII of 1865 are not limited by the preamble. The plaintiffs' land is irrigated by water from a Government river, and I think that the burden is upon them to prove an "engagement" which entitles them to irrigation free of charge [Madras Act VII of 1865, section 1 (b)]. Such an engagement appears in the common form issued upon the Inam Settlement, which states the number of wet and dry acres claimed by the inamdar. It appears from the plaint that the original grant under which plaintiffs hold specified the number of wet and dry acres, and that since the Settlement six acres of the dry lands have been converted into wet, but it is not averred by what right or at what date this conversion was effected. It appears to me that the object of specifying in the original grant and at the Inam Settlement the number of wet acres was to declare the extent of the grantee's rights of irrigation; that is, he was to be allowed to take only sufficient water to irrigate the number of acres described as wet.

The claim to irrigate for a second crop is in effect a claim to take water for double the number of acres specified in his grant, and I think that in order to substantiate the claim he should aver and prove his title.

I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother Oldfield, J.

By THE COURT.—The result is that the appeal succeeds and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

Trade mark—Proof of actual deception of any person, if necessary—Misdescription of place of manufacture, effect of.

In cases of infringement of trade marks it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that defendant's colorable imitation of plaintiff's mark did actually deceive any person or persons. [p. 633, col. 2.]

Where it is clear from the evidence that traders in rose water used the words 'Ghazipoor Rose Water' as descriptive merely of a good kind of such water just as the word 'Cologne' is used for a particular kind of scent, though not necessarily manufactured at Cologne:

Held, that people buying such goods do not set any particular store upon their coming from the particular places to which they are ascribed and that such misdescription not being calculated to deceive any one does not disentitle the plaintiff to the reliefs which he might otherwise have obtained. [p. 634, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Young, sitting on the original side of this Court, dated the 17th September 1913.

Mr. Bagram, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. R. Das (with him Mr. A. B. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The decisions cited in support of the first three grounds of appeal have little application to the present case. In this case the plaintiff did not seek relief in respect of a number alone. His case was that his "Peacock" mark in conjunction with the number 1,000 had been infringed. There can be no possible doubt that he had acquired the exclusive right to the use of a picture of a peacock. The label started by the defendant was a manifest imitation of the plaintiff's peacock mark and of the general get-up of his label including the adoption of the number 1,000.

There was no evidence of any one having been actually deceived by the defendant's mark, but it is settled law that it is not necessary for a plaintiff to prove this in order to entitle him to succeed—Sebastin, 5th Edition, page 134.

The defendant's label was certainly calculated to lead purchasers buying or seeking to buy rose-water on the repute of the Peacock Brand into the belief that bottles bearing the defendant's label might be that brand.

The only other question is, whether the plaintiff was disentitled to relief by reason of his using a false description on his label. He failed to satisfactorily prove that his rose-water was made at the place named, Ghazipoor, but from the evidence it seems clear that traders in rose-water use the words "Ghazipoor Rose Water" as descriptive merely of a good kind of such water, and no particular store is set by any one on such rose-water coming from either the Ghazipoor district or any town or village called Ghazipoor.

The word seems to be used in much the same way as "Cologne" is used for a particular kind of scent, or "Worcester" and "Yorkshire" are used for sauces, or "Patna" for rice.

The public must be credited with some common sense, and it cannot be believed that persons buying articles with such names set any store upon their coming from the particular places to which they are ascribed. The misdescription in calling his manufacture Ghazipoor rose-water was not shown to be calculated to deceive any one.

The decree in the case was justified.

The appeal is dismissed with costs, ten gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fee.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVIII, r. 13—Provincial Small Cause Court—Abstract of evidence incomplete—Judgment based on such abstract, whether legal.

In a suit tried by a Provincial Small Cause Court, the note appended to the judgment showed that five witnesses had been examined for the plaintiff and one for the defendant. The record, however, of the memorandum of evidence prepared under Order XVIII, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, and found on the record, was incomplete and contained only the evidence of the witnesses Nos. 1, to 4 and the words 'I am' in the evidence of the 5th witness for the plaintiff and the evidence of the defendant's witness was not at all found.

Held, that the judgment based upon such evidence was illegal and ought to be set aside.

Chethru Gope v. Sri Charan Bhagat, 9 C. W. N. 420, followed.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the District Munsif of Chingleput, dated the 30th September 1913, in Small Cause Suit No. 774 of 1913.

FACTS.—The facts of the case appear from the judgment and the head-note, the only additional fact being that the memorandum of evidence was not signed as required by law.

Mr. O. P. Venkataragavachariyar, for the Petitioner:—The judgment is illegal. Order XVIII, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, requires that the memorandum of evidence of each witness should be taken down as the examination proceeds and that it should be signed by the Judge. That rule has been contravened in this case. Only the abstract of the evidence of four witnesses on the plaintiff's side is found and the words 'I am' in that of the 5th witness. The evidence of the defendant is altogether absent. The memorandum of evidence is, therefore, illegal and cannot be acted upon. There is, therefore, no legal evidence to support the judgment. Vide Chethru Gope v. Sri Charan Bhagat (1). So far as it goes the evidence is all one way.

Mr. P. Chenchiah, for the Respondent, argued contra.

JUDGMENT.—The point for decision was whether the defendant executed the note sued on. The conclusion came to by the District Munsif is that that document is not genuine. This is based upon the evidence of witnesses who, it is contended by the petitioner before me, all speak to the execution of the document. In the note appended to the judgment it is stated that six witnesses were examined, five for the plaintiff and one for the defendant. In the notes sent up to this Court the evidence of the sixth witness does not appear. As regards the fifth witness for the plaintiff, the only portion of his evidence is that which stops with "I am" and is not taken any further. It is contended before me that the Judge did not take an abstract of the deposition of the 5th witness, nor of the witness for the defendant. The learned Counsel for the counter-petitioner is unable to say whether this contention is well-founded or not. The records sent up to this Court do not show that the deposition of the defendant's witness was taken on any other day or that the Judge made any note of his deposition. Under these circumstances I must regard this procedure of the District Munsif as illegal and as being opposed to Order XVIII, rule 13. [See also Chethru Gope v. Sri Charan Bhagat (1).] I must set aside the order of the District Munsif and direct him to record as required by law and to pass a proper decree in the case.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Court of Tharrawaddy in Civil Regular No. 5 of 1912.

Mr. Palit, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lentaigne (Junior), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PARLETT, J.—This case arises out of conflicting claims to the estate of Maung Tha Nu, a minor who died on the 20th December 1909; he was an only child and both his parents predeceased him. His father Maung Nyo Sein died in 1899. His mother Ma On Gaing married Maung Pan Nyun about two years later, and herself died in November 1906. She left one sister Ma On Bwin, the defendant, whose husband Maung Po Lu also died in 1906. Maung Nyo Sein had two sisters, Ma Tu and Ma Nyein Bu, the plaintiffs. He had also a brother, Maung Shwe E, who died in July 1907 leaving a family. They are not parties to the suit and it is clear that they have no claim to Tha Nu's estate, being excluded by their two aunts, the plaintiffs. See Maung Hmaw v. Ma On Bwin (1), Ma Ma Gale v. Ma Me (2) and Kan Gyi v. Ma Ngwe Nu (3). The defendant took Maung Tha Nu into her house after his mother's death and obtained Letters of Administration to his estate. The plaintiffs sued her for $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share each of that estate. The defendant pleaded that she had adopted Maung Tha Nu and, therefore, was entitled to the whole of his estate, and further that in any case she was entitled to half the estate and plaintiffs to only one-half between them. The District Court held against her on both points and she now appeals.

As regards the adoption, defendant's story is that in about March 1907 Maung Shwe E came and asked the boy to go back with him to his father's relations, but he declined. To avoid trouble with them defendant and her husband thought it wise to formally adopt the boy and the next day they called in six neighbours to witness the adoption. Three of them are dead, but three have given evidence; as has also a carpenter, Maung Pu, who happened to be working in the house at the time. Their account is to the effect that the couple expressed their desire to adopt the boy, the latter signified his assent and defendant and her husband then said that they adopted him as their son. Not one of these witnesses appears to be really independent. Shwe Thaw is a neighbour and is in the habit of looking after defendant's affairs; he had been in debt to her and gave her land in satisfaction, keeping it, however, in his own name. U Nu is Po Lu's father: Tun E is a dependant of Ma On Bwin and a man of no standing. Ma Pu's wife is related to Po Lu. The evidence of what happened on this occasion is, therefore, far from satisfactory. But even if it were satisfactory, it would require to be supplemented by proof of publicity of the relationship between the adoptive parents and the adopted child. Of this there is absolutely none. Not one of the defendant's witnesses can say that they called one another mother and son. On the contrary the boy continued to call her aunt as before; nor does any of them say that the boy was looked upon in the village as their adoptive son. On the other hand, all the plaintiff's witnesses, whom there appears no reason to distrust, say that they never once heard of the relationship. It is clear that the adoption was not proved.

As regards the shares of the three aunts, the decision of the District Court is fully covered by the authority of Maung Tun Arung v. Maung Yan Pyo (4), Ko Kan Gyi v. Ma Pyu (5), where the rule of equality of division in such cases is laid down. We are asked to hold that the Bench ruling of this Court should be reconsidered and a division per stirpes declared to be the rule in such cases. No authority for this view is cited, either in the Dhammathats or among reported cases. But reliance is placed on the analogy to be drawn from the case of Maung Kyaw v. Ma Tu (6), which was followed without discussion by a Bench of this Court in Ma Mya v. Ma Su (7). In the former case out of a brother and two sisters, a brother and one sister predeceased the other sister, each leaving a family, and when the last sister died childless the nephews and nieces inherited per stirpes. It is clear that the decision was based more upon considerations of fairness than upon any express rules, and certain passages in a later case, Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kywe (8), indicate possible grounds for a contrary view. In the particular case, however, had either the brother or sister been living when the second sister died, he or she would entirely exclude his or her nephews or nieces. He or she having died, however, it might appear unfair that the family should lose more than half of the estate in favour of their cousins merely because the latter were more numerous than they.

If it was intended that uncles and aunts should always inherit per stirpes as representing the grand-parents, one would expect that the shares of the grand-parents would be expressly laid down where two of them survive on one side and only one on the other, but it would appear that all the surviving grand-parents divide equally. Again were the division to be per stirpes, the case where the grand-parents survive on one side only and uncles and aunts on the other, should be provided for; in such a case, however, a single grand-parent would exclude uncles and aunts on both sides. In Ma Kyi Kyi v. Ma Thein (9) the tendency of Buddhist Law towards equality of shares is pointed out and several cases illustrating it are referred to.

That case was even one in which, according to certain texts, an unequal division should be made. In the present instance no such texts can be cited. On the contrary, of the sections of the Digest, Nos. 308, 309 and 311, which refer to the right of uncles and aunts to inherit in certain circumstances, the two former at least appear to me to imply strongly that the division among them should in all cases be an equal one. Section 308 provides for the case of a married couple dying childless within a short time of one another and leaving no parents or grand-parents. The man's uncles and aunts, paternal and maternal, inherit the property he brought to the marriage and the woman's uncles and aunts what she brought. The rule seems designed to keep the property in the family to which it belonged, and in each instance it would appear that the division among the members of that family declared to be entitled to inherit would be an equal one. It is expressly laid down that property acquired jointly by the deceased couple must be divided equally among the paternal and maternal uncles and aunts of the husband and of the wife.

Section 309 provides for the death of the couple at a considerable interval, leaving only the same relatives. Here the paternal and maternal uncles and aunts, of the one who dies last, inherit the whole of the estate of both the deceased, those of the one who died first having a right of pre-emption as regards the property which came from his or her family. Here again there is no mention of inequality of shares and I think the inference is strong that they should be equal.

The tendency of modern custom towards equality even where the Dhammathats suggest a different rule is beyond doubt. A rule of equality of shares in a case like the present has been binding on all Courts in Upper Burma for nearly fourteen years, has probably been followed by the Courts in Lower Burma in many cases that may have arisen, and has recently been adopted by a Bench of this Court. It would require very clear and strong authority to justify a reconsideration of what has for so many years been the law in Upper Burma and has now been held to be the law in lower Burma. None whatever has been shown. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

MAUNG PO LU v. BEGBIE & CO.

ORMOND, J.—I concur in the judgment of my learned colleague on the question of adoption, and in his conclusion as to the shares to be taken by the aunts, but I think it is sufficient to say that in the Burmese Buddhist Law of Succession there is no rule that when the succession ascends and there are kindred of the same degree on both the paternal and maternal sides, those on the paternal side take half and those on the maternal side take half. In this case the two paternal aunts and the one maternal aunt do not claim "jure representationis," in the right of another person; but they claim in their own right as being in equal degree of kindred. They, therefore, each take an equal share.

Held, that the surety was discharged from his liability on account of the agreement to give further time. [p. 638, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Rangoon, dated 15th July 1914, in Civil Regular No. 2843 of 1914.

FACTS.—Plaintiffs were carrying on business with a sister of the present defendants, but she died on 5th January 1912 and the plaintiffs, who were anxious to secure their claim in respect of their dealings with her, sent for the defendants and on the 20th February 1912 obtained from the 2nd defendant (present appellant) a guarantee, which guaranteed not only debts of the deceased sister but also debt which might be incurred by the 1st defendant in carrying on the same business. On 7th October 1913 the first defendant executed a pro-note for Rs. 1,957-15-6 for the amount of certain piece-goods. The pro-note contained no stipulation for interest. The plaintiffs, however, agreed to give her time till 7th December 1913 on her promising to pay interest at 12 per cent. per mensem commencing from 7th December 1913 on failure to redeem the said pro-note by that date.

In disposing of the 2nd defendant's contention that his guarantee was discharged by the plaintiffs' subsequent agreement to give time in consideration of a promise to pay interest, the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court said:—

"It only remains then to consider whether the 2nd defendant is discharged by the plaintiffs' allowing time to the first defendant to pay off the pro-note in suit. It appears to me that he is not. A surety is discharged if there is a binding contract between the creditor and the principal debtor giving the latter time, but not otherwise. In this case the pro-note was payable on demand and an agreement that it should not be so paid could not be proved, as evidence to that effect would not be admissible and it would, therefore, not be binding."

The 2nd defendant filed this special appeal.

Mr. Lentaigue, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gregory, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant bought goods from the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant stood security for the 1st defendant, who was his sister, as far as any debts incurred by her when carrying on business with Messrs. J. A. Begbie & Co. under a letter of guaranty. The plaintiff sued on a pro-note for the balance due for the price of goods sold. On the 15th September 1913 the plaintiff wrote to the 2nd defendant intimating that an amount of Rs. 13,281-2-9 was then due from the 1st defendant. On the 16th and 17th September the 2nd defendant wrote to the plaintiff through a Pleader, denying that he ever undertook to stand surety for all debts that might be incurred by the 1st defendant and said that if there was any written document to that effect, it must have been obtained from him under misrepresentation. The 2nd defendant states that he understood when he signed the letter of guaranty that he was only standing surety for his deceased sister's debts, Ma Kye May, who had before her death been trading with the plaintiff. Beyond his own statement there is nothing to show that he was misled in any way and I am satisfied that he knew what he was signing. His letter of the 17th September is, I think, sufficient notice to the plaintiff that if there was a legal contract of guaranty, he revoked it.

Mr. Gregory for the plaintiff-respondent states that the amount mentioned in the promissory note was merely the balance due for goods supplied before the 15th September, but there is no evidence to that effect; and if the case rested there, I should remand it in order to ascertain whether the amount sued for was a debt incurred prior to the 16th September. But the 2nd defendant-appellant contends that he is not liable, on the ground that the plaintiff has given time to the principal debtor. I think it is clear that he has done so. At the trial Mr. Clifton for the defendant asked if the plaintiff admitted that time was granted to the principal debtor for the payment of interest and Mr. Gregory for the plaintiff stated "yes." In the plaint the cause of action is stated to have arisen on the 7th December 1913, which shows clearly that the amount claimed was not due before that date.

The appeal is allowed with costs. The decree against the first defendant stands good and the suit is dismissed as against the 2nd defendant with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Buddhist Law—Inheritance—Orasa son—Limitation within which he should assert his claim to one-fourth—Right, if lapses if not asserted without unreasonable delay.

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law it is necessary in the interests of the family that the eldest son should promptly decide whether he is to claim one-fourth share of the estate of his parents and if the option is not exercised without unreasonable delay, it should be regarded as having lapsed altogether. [p. 639, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Thaton, dated the 20th December 1913, in Civil Suit No. 6 of 1913.

Mr. Coitman, for the Appellants.

Mr. Chit Hlaing, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff was the eldest son of Ma Thit and U Tu. U Tu died in December 1906. The plaintiff instituted this suit in June 1913 for one-fourth share of the joint estate of his parents as at the death of his father. At the time of the father's death, there were six children including the plaintiff. The plaintiff made no demand from his mother in respect of his one-fourth share until 6½ years after his father's death; but, on the other hand, he collected the rents of the property for his mother as being her property.

The question in this appeal is whether an eldest son must act with reasonable promptitude in exercising his option of taking one-fourth of his parents' joint property on the death of his father, or whether he has 12 years within which he can exercise that option under Article 123 of the Limitation Act. We are referred to the case of Maung Po Min v. U Shwe Lu (1) where it is held that the period of limitation for the recovery of one-fourth share by an eldest son is 12 years from the date of the parents' death, under Article 123. The facts of that case are not given in the report, but we must assume that the eldest son's option had not lapsed owing to delay in exercising it. The effect of undue delay on the part of the eldest son was not considered and no question was raised on that point. The case can only be regarded as an authority for applying Article 123 and reckoning the period of limitation from the date of the parents' death when as a matter of fact the eldest son has acted promptly. In the present case we are not concerned with the period of limitation. If the plaintiff had demanded his one-fourth share promptly after his father's death and had been refused, he would no doubt have 12 years from the date of his father's death to sue for the share. But though he was a married man with a family of his own and living apart from his mother when his father died, he did nothing for $6\frac{1}{2}$ years and the question we have to decide is whether he should not, therefore, be deemed to have abandoned his claim to partition and elected to wait for his mother's death and then share with his brothers and sisters. It is not expressly provided in the Dhammathats that the eldest son must decide promptly which course he will take. But from the nature of the option it is necessary in the interests of the family that it should be exercised without delay. According as it is exercised or not, the mode of managing the property must vary and the prospects of the other heirs would also vary. It can hardly be intended that a widow should be compelled to keep one-fourth of the estate tied up indefinitely on the chance that at anytime within 12 years the eldest son may demand his one-fourth share. Such a restriction would materially affect the widow's management of the estate. If such a course were admissible the eldest son might conceivably wait till three-fourths of the estate has, through misfortune, been lost and then claim the whole of the remaining one-fourth to the entire exclusion of his brothers and sisters although they may have counted for years on coming in when their mother dies and sharing equally with the eldest son.

We think that the right given to the eldest son (Manu Kye, Book X, section 5) of claiming a one-fourth share of the joint estate on his father's death must be exercised as soon as possible after that event and that if the option is not exercised without unreasonable delay, it lapses altogether.

The appeal is allowed. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in both Courts. The appellants will have their costs of the commission issued in the suit.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge of Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 317 of 1912, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Tenali, in Original Suit No. 680 of 1910.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. Vembu Aiyar, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 4th February 1915, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—From the issues framed and the whole tenor of the judgment of the District Munsif it is clear that the suit was dealt with as one based on the kararnama, and the point urged on behalf of appellant (1st defendant) is that the Subordinate Judge was not justified in disregarding the kararnama and giving a decree for plaintiffs merely on the basis of the compromise decree in Original Suit No. 298 of 1908 as he has done. It is argued that appellant has thereby been prejudiced in that he has had no fair opportunity of showing that, as alleged in paragraph 5 of his written statement, his consent to the razinama was obtained by misrepresentation and fraud.

MAUNG KYI-HLAING v. MA HTU.

The Subordinate Judge has held that it is not open to appellant to attack the decree in Original Suit No. 298 of 1908 on these grounds without bringing a suit to set it aside. This is wrong, vide section 44 of the Indian Evidence Act, and also Nilmony Mookhopadhy v. Ainunissa Bibee (1) and Rajib Panda v. Lakhan Sendh Mahapatra (2).

We must call for findings from the Subordinate Judge on the following Issues:—

1. Was appellant's consent to the razinama in Original Suit No. 298 of 1908 obtained by fraud?

2. Is the decree in that suit for that reason not binding upon appellant?

3. Is appellant by reason of his having enjoyed the benefit of that decree estopped from questioning its binding nature upon him?

Either side may adduce fresh evidence.

The finding should be submitted within two months and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order of this Court contained in the above judgment, the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, submitted the finding on the 1st issue in the negative and on the 2nd in the affirmative.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Divisional Judge of Hanthawaddy, dated the 27th September 1913, in Civil Appeal No. 27 of 1913, reversing the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Court of Kyauktan.

Mr. Po Han, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. N. Burjorjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HARTNOLL, J.—Maung Kyi Hlaing is suing for a quarter share of the estate of his parents, Maung Shwe Hla and Ma Htu. His cause of action is given him by the death of his father. He sues his mother and his sisters. It is not denied that he is the 'orasa' son, but it is claimed that as his mother, Ma Htu, has not married again he cannot obtain any share of the estate. The Divisional Judge has acceded to such a claim and dismissed the suit. His judgment is largely based on the texts given in sections 36 and 37 of the Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest, as Maung Kyi Hlaing is living separately from his mother. The texts comprised in those sections are meagre. No text from the Manugye is amongst them. They deal with the case of a child who has been given property prior to the death of the father. In my opinion the general rule is that given in the texts collected under section 30 of the same Digest. Such texts are generally in accordance with the rule given in the fifth section of the 10th Book of the Manugye. This section is said to state the law even when the mother does not marry again. The eldest son is to get one share and the mother and younger daughters three shares. The case of Seik Kaung v. Po Nyein (1) is distinguishable from this one. Here an eldest son is claiming from his mother and sisters. In the case of San Dwa v. Ma Min Tha (2) it is not clear whether the mother had married again or not.

On the authority of the fifth section of the 10th Book of the Manugye, the texts collected in section 30 of the Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest and also section 155 of the Atta Sankheppa Dhammathat, I am of opinion that Maung Kyi Hlaing is entitled to the fourth share he is claiming. I accordingly reverse the decree of the Divisional Court and restore that of the Sub-Divisional Court.

Appellant will get his costs in all Courts.
Fox, C. J.—I concur.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision made against a conviction under section 498 of the Indian Penal Code. The only point taken on behalf of the applicant is that the conviction is bad under section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code by reason of the fact that at the preceding trial before the Court of Session the applicant was acquitted in respect of certain offences said to have arisen out of the same transaction.

The trial before the Court of Session proceeded under sections 366, 368 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code, and there was not before the Court of Session any complaint by the husband of the woman. Under section 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code such complaint by the husband is a condition precedent to the Court's jurisdiction to try under section 498: see Bangaru Asari v. Emperor (1). There being no such complaint by the husband before the Court of Session, that Court not only did not in fact try, but was in law incompetent to try the offence alleged under section 498. Since then the earlier Court was incompetent to try the accused under section 498, the later trial of him under that section upon the husband's complaint does not violate the provisions of section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Thus the point taken by the applicant fails and the Rule must be discharged.

To constitute the offence of cheating it is not necessary that the deception should be by express words but it may be by conduct or implied in the nature of the transaction itself. [p. 643, col. 1]

Where an accused, after his application under Order XXI, rule 83, Civil Procedure Code, had been rejected by the executing Court, induced the complainant to advance him money on the security of his house under auction, representing that he was empowered to effect the mortgage in order to pay off the decree-holder, and paid the decree-holder out of the money which he had got from the complainant but afterwards intentionally neglected to obey the directions of the executing Court and took no steps to prevent the sale being confirmed, but on the other hand received the sale-proceeds from the executing Court, saying that he had paid the decree-holder from his own pocket and after receiving the money from the Court paid nothing to the complainant mortgagee:

Held, that the facts constituted the offence of cheating as the intention of a party to a transaction must be inferred from his conduct. [p. 642, col. 2; p. 643, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—There has been a miscarriage of justice in this case and the respondent, Jai Dial, has been acquitted by the Magistrate on erroneous grounds. The facts of the case are fully given in the order of the Magistrate, dated the 19th May 1913 which is under revision, and partly also in my order, dated the 12th March 1912, [Ram Chand v. Jai Dial (1)] by which I set aside the Magistrate's order of discharge, dated the 29th June 1911, and sent the case back for further inquiry.

In his order of acquittal the Magistrate has noted four circumstances which, according to him, appeared in the evidence against the respondent; and after discussing those circumstances, he has come to the conclusion that they do not establish the offence of cheating with which the respondent has been charged. I cannot agree in the Magistrate's conclusion. The circumstances referred to by the Magistrate are these:—

1. That the accused in spite of the fact that his application, dated the 8th March 1910, under Order XXI, rule 83, Civil Procedure Code, praying for permission to raise the amount of the decree by a private transfer of his house had been rejected, induced Musammam Radhi to advance Rs. 1,000 to him on the mortgage of the house, on the representation that he was empowered to effect the mortgage in order to pay off the decretal amount due to the decree-holder.

2. That the accused was amiss in taking steps to prevent the confirmation of the sale of his house.

3. That the accused promised to deposit the commission fee within the prescribed limit of time but failed to do so.

4. That the accused received the sale-proceeds of his house from the executing Court and did not compensate the complainant.

In connection with the first point, the Magistrate thinks that there was only a concealment of a fact on the part of the respondent, and that such concealment did not amount to cheating. As regards the second point, the Magistrate says that the absence of the accused on the date fixed for the hearing of the case was unfortunate, and that it was the delay of one day which spoiled the whole thing. In considering the four points mentioned above the Magistrate has overlooked the following facts. The executing Court in its order of the 25th February 1910, which was passed on the application made by the respondent under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, had directed that the respondent should pay into Court two sums of Rs. 747-8-0 and Rs. 81-4-0 and had noted that thereafter the question as to the cancellation of the sale would be decided. The case was fixed for the 21st March 1910. The mortgage in question was executed by the respondent in favour of Musammam Radhi on the 21st March but it was not registered on that date; and so the respondent and the decree-holder appeared in Court on the 21st March and stated that the deed would be registered on the following day. The Court accordingly fixed the case for the 22nd March. The deed was registered on the 22nd March; on that day the respondent received Rs. 233 in cash from the mortgagee before the Sub-Registrar and Rs. 747 were received by the decree-holder from the mortgagee, the understanding being that the decree-holder would acknowledge the receipt of the amount due to him in Court and that the respondent would deposit in Court Rs. 81-4-0 as directed by the order of the 25th February 1910. After the registration of the deed, however, the respondent did not put in an appearance in the executing Court; the Court noted his absence, the auction-purchaser being present on the occasion, and fixed the case for the 23rd March. On the 23rd March also the respondent was absent, but the decree-holder appeared and filed a receipt for Rs. 747 which was due to him on his decree. On the auction-purchaser insisting that the auction-sale should be confirmed, because the proper amount had not been deposited within the time prescribed by law in accordance with the order of the 25th February, the Court confirmed the sale. It seems clear from these facts that the respondent had not the intention, on the dates when the deed was executed and registered, to deposit in Court the sum of Rs. 81-4-0 which he had been directed to deposit by order dated the 25th February. The intention of a party to a transaction must be inferred from his conduct, and the only reasonable conclusion which can be drawn from the circumstances established in this case is that not only had the respondent represented to the mortgagee that he had power to mortgage the house to her, but that he would carry out the order of that Court passed on his application of the 25th February as to the deposit of the money and would thus secure the cancellation of the auction sale. That this representation was untrue appears to be clear from the subsequent conduct of the respondent. He not only did not appear in Court on the 22nd March, but he was absent on the 23rd March also, and he took no steps to have the sum of Rs. 81-4 deposited in the Court in compliance with the order of the 25th February. The sale being confirmed on the 23rd March, the mortgage of the house in favour of Musammât Radhi was obviously ineffectual, and no rights of any kind in the house passed to her. Subsequently, on the 17th August 1910, the respondent applied to the executing Court for payment to him of the sale-proceeds of the house and the money, Rs. 1,560, was paid to him accordingly. In the said application he stated that he had paid the decree-holder out of his own pocket and made no mention whatever of his having raised the money by a mortgage of the house; and after Rs. 1,560 was paid to him he never made a proper offer to the mortgagee of the amount, principal and interest, due to her on the footing of the mortgage.

In considering the question whether the respondent is guilty of the offence of cheating or not, the Court has to take into consideration the cumulative force and effect of all these circumstances above referred to, bearing in mind the principle laid down in Khoda Bux v. Bakeya Mundari (2) that to constitute the offence of cheating it is not necessary that the deception should be by express words, but that it may be by conduct or implied in the nature of the transaction itself. It seems to me that the Magistrate has not fully considered the facts established in this case in the light of the above principle; and I accordingly set aside the order of discharge and send the case back with a direction that the respondent be re-tried.

Revision allowed.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899 B. C.), ss. 589, 341, 102, 63 (3).—Notices issued on behalf of General Committee, whether to be signed and if so, by whom—Special rule of evidence contained in s. 589, applicability of—Proceedings of Committee how to be proved when not signed by Chairman—Irregularity—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 78.

There being no express provision in the Calcutta Municipal Act requiring that notices issued under the Act on behalf of the General Committee should be signed at all, section 589 of the Act does not stand in the way of the Secretary to the Corporation, who is also the Secretary to the General Committee, signing such notices. But unless a notice purports to have been signed by the Chairman of the Corporation, the special rule of evidence contained in the section would not apply. That is to say, if a notice purports to have been signed by the Chairman, it would not have to be proved that a meeting was held or that it was regularly held. Where, however, the special rule contained in section 589 cannot apply, proceedings of the General Committee can be proved under the general law of evidence. [p. 644, col. 1; p. 645, col. 1.]

But printed proceedings themselves would not be sufficient legal proof unless they answer the description of a printed book purported to be published by the authority of the Committee as required by section 78 of the Evidence Act. [p. 644, col. 2; p. 645, col. 1.]

The mere fact that the Secretary has signed a notice instead of the Chairman does not affect the merits, inasmuch as it is a defect or irregularity which is cured by section 102 of the Municipal Act. [p. 645, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This case comes before us on a reference made by the Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta in his capacity as a Presidency Magistrate under section 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Certain proceedings had been taken against Promotho Nath Mullick, the opposite party in this case, under section 450 (3) of the Calcutta Municipal Act, III (B. C.) of 1899, for his failure to comply with a notice served under the Act, the offence being under section 341 (1) for not having removed or altered a fixture within the period prescribed by the notice served under the Act.

The points which have been referred to us are as follows:—

(1). Whether section 589 of the Act stands in the way of the Secretary to the Corporation, who is also Secretary to the General Committee, signing a notice under section 341 of the Act. Section 589 obviously does not. Section 589 is a special rule of evidence applying to all proceedings under the Act and when the notice is signed as mentioned in section 589, it proves the regularity of all proceedings taken under the Act. There is nothing in the section which limits the general law of evidence as applicable to proceedings under the Act. So far as the Secretary is concerned, there seems to be no reason why he should not sign the notice on behalf of the General Committee. The Secretary under the terms of the Act is not only the Secretary to the Corporation but he is also by the terms of section 63 (3) appointed Secretary to the General Committee. It could never be in the contemplation of the Legislature that every notice going under the Act should be signed by all the members of the General Committee and that any notice which did not contain the signatures of the members of the General Committee should be invalid. As a matter of fact, there is no express provision in the Act requiring signature to these notices at all, and it seems not unreasonable that the Municipal Officer who holds the office of the Secretary to the Corporation and the General Committee should sign, as part of his ordinary duty, the notices that are issued on behalf of the General Committee, the only difference being that the special rule of evidence contained in section 589 does not apply when the notice does not purport to have been signed by the Chairman. But subject to that, of course, there is no reason why the notices should not be signed by the Secretary. In my opinion, we ought to answer the first question by stating that section 589 does not stand in the way of the Secretary signing a notice under section 341 of the Act.

The second question is—whether Exhibit I, which is a copy of the printed proceedings of the General Committee's meeting and which contains their sanction under section 341 in this case, is sufficient legal proof of the sanction. That, again, depends on section 589. If the notice had been signed by the Chairman, it would not have to be proved that there had been a meeting or that it had been regularly held. But that does not prevent the general law of evidence from being applicable and those proceedings can be proved either by the production of a copy of proceedings certified by the legal keeper or by a printed book purporting to be published under the authority of the General Committee. In what manner the Corporation should think fit to prove the meeting and the passing of the resolution is not for us to determine at present. The copy, if produced, must be certified by the legal keeper. Presumably, Mr. Wyness is not the legal keeper. But, apparently, the keeper of the proceedings of the General Committee would be the Secretary who is appointed by the Act to be the Secretary to the General Committee. I think, therefore, that the printed proceedings themselves would not be sufficient legal proof unless they answer the description given in section 78 of the Evidence Act, namely, being a printed book purporting to be published by the authority of such body.

The third question is—whether the order of the Chairman delegating to the Secretary to the Corporation of Calcutta and Secretary to the General Committee of the Corporation of Calcutta the powers to sign all written documents referred to and described in section 589 of the Act is legal. That question does not arise. But I may mention in passing, in order that the Corporation may have the benefit of the special rule of evidence under section 589 and to avoid further difficulties, that the notices issued should bear the signature or a fac simile of the signature of the Chairman, because whether the signature by the Secretary, the Secretary purporting to sign under the general power of delegation, would make applicable the special rule of evidence laid down by section 589, I am not at present prepared to say. All we need say is that this third question does not arise in this reference.

The next question is—whether in the event of Exhibit I and notice under section 341 being held illegal, these irregularities are cured by section 102 of the Act. Section 102 is in these terms: "No proceeding taken under this Act shall be questioned on the ground merely of any defect or irregularity not affecting the merits of the case." If these are the only defects or irregularities, nobody could say that the mere fact that the Secretary has signed the notice instead of the Chairman in any way affects the merits. The second sub-section may be of importance, if the case proceeds, namely, as to the proof that the meeting of the General Committee was duly convened and the resolution was free from all defects or irregularities.

These are all the questions pleaded before us by the Municipal Magistrate and there seems to be very little substance in them and we answer the reference in the above way.

BEACHCROFT, J.—The answer to the first question propounded by the learned Magistrate is obviously in the negative. Section 589 merely provides a method of proof of consent, etc., of the Corporation, General Committee, Chairman or Municipal Officers where the consent of those bodies or individuals is required under the Act. It has nothing whatever to do with the signing of notices though doubtless if a notice purports to set forth the consent referred to in the section, signature of the notice by the Chairman would be sufficient evidence of the consent of the Corporation, General Committee or Chairman. There is no provision in the Act for the signing of the notices nor are the duties of the Secretary defined, and there seems to be no reason why the signing of notices, if they require signature at all, should not be included in the ordinary duties of the Secretary.

The second question is—"whether the printed proceedings of the General Committee's meeting, which, inter alia, contains their sanction under section 341, is sufficient legal proof of the sanction under section 589 of the Act." The answer to this is also obviously in the negative, for Mr. Wyness, who signed it, is not the Chairman. It was suggested that section 78 (5) of the Evidence Act would make the copy of the proceedings sufficient proof. But the copy produced does not appear to have been certified by the legal keeper, nor is it contained in a printed book purporting to be published by the authority of the Corporation.

I express no opinion on the third question which does not appear to arise properly on the facts stated.

The fourth question is—"whether in the event of the Hon'ble Judges holding that Exhibit I, the printed proceeding of the General Committee purporting to be signed by Mr. Wyness is not legal proof of the sanction of the General Committee under the provisions of section 589, or that the notice under section 341 should have been signed by the Chairman, and not by the Secretary, is either of these irregularities cured by the provisions of section 102 of Act III (B. C.) of 1899?" In view of the answer previously given that the Secretary is competent to sign notices, this question in so far as signature by him is assumed to be an irregularity requires no answer, though the section doubtless would cure an irregularity of such a nature.

But I am at a loss to understand how the learned Magistrate treats the state of things contemplated in the first part of the question as an irregularity. I imagine the Magistrate must have been in some doubt as to whether Mr. Wyness could legally sign the proceedings. If he was the President of the next ensuing meeting, it was obviously his duty to sign the proceedings under section 97. But that is not the question put by the learned Magistrate. His question is in effect this: "assuming that a certain document is not legal proof of a certain fact, does section 102 (which is merely a validating section), make it proof of that fact," in other words, "does section 102 amend the law of evidence?" When the question is presented in this form, the answer is so obviously in the negative that discussion becomes unnecessary.

Compromise—Discharge—Revival of case—Case really one of civil nature—Criminal proceedings initiated—Abuse of process of Criminal Courts—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 435.

Once a criminal case is compromised and the accused are discharged in accordance with the compromise, the complainant is not entitled to have the case revived on the ground that some of the accused have gone back upon the compromise. [p. 646, col. 2.]

Where the complainant in a case declines to produce any evidence and the Court discharges the accused, the order of discharge is neither perverse nor foolish, and, therefore, is not liable to be set aside. [p. 647, col. 2.]

To initiate criminal proceedings in a case which is really one of a civil nature, with the object of keeping those proceedings hanging till the civil dispute is settled to the satisfaction of the complainant is an abuse of the Criminal Courts. [p. 647, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 439 and 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Gurgaon, dated the 24th January 1914, ordering fresh warrant to be issued against all the petitioners.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of the District Magistrate of Gurgaon setting aside his own order of discharge in a criminal case and ordering fresh proceedings against all the accused persons. The case is one between Hindus and Muhammadans of Bahura Kalan in the Tahsil and District of Gurgaon.

The complainants are Muhammadans and the accused petitioners are Hindus. The complaint is briefly to the effect that the accused had demolished a kacha mosque with a chkappar appertaining thereto belonging to the Muhammadans under sections 436/295, Indian Penal Code.

The complaint was lodged on the 10th May 1913, and the occurrence is said to have taken place on the 6th April preceding.

After an inquiry by the Police and a summary inquiry by a Magistrate the latter dismissed the complaint under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 2nd August 1913. The Sessions Judge in revision set aside the order of dismissal and directed a further inquiry into the truth of the complaint. The case then came before the District Magistrate who, on the 18th December 1913, recorded the following order: "Complainants do not wish to produce any evidence, and as I understand they have come to an amicable settlement, I dismiss the case and discharge all the accused." On the 14th January 1914 the complainants applied to the District Magistrate that his order of the 18th December should be set aside on the ground that no settlement had actually been arrived at. Upon this the same District Magistrate passed the order now complained of, remarking that the case had not been settled as he had been assured by the Pleaders of the parties that it had. From a copy of another order produced by Mr. Kureshi on behalf of the Muhammadans it appears that a razinama was actually written out, but that subsequent to the order of discharge some of the accused refused to sign it. Since the present application was put in to this Court, it appears from papers submitted by the District Magistrate that further negotiations for settlement of the dispute have been going on. The Hindus have consented that a kacha mosque and chkappar may be built so long as the Muhammadans do not practise cow-killing.

Under all the circumstances of the present case, I think that the order of discharge of the 18th December 1913 should not have been set aside and that there should have been no further inquiry into the original complaint, which was instituted twenty months ago. It appears quite clear that the parties did come to a compromise and in accordance therewith the complainants said that they did not wish to produce any evidence. In accordance therewith the accused petitioners were discharged. It appears that subsequently some of the accused refused to ratify the compromise, but this does not, in my opinion, give the complainants any right to have the criminal proceedings revived. It is a general rule that an order of discharge should not be set aside unless it is manifestly perverse or foolish or is based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete: Emperor v. Kiru (1). In the present case the order of discharge was not either perverse or foolish. It followed as a natural consequence from the fact that the complainants declined to produce any evidence. The case appears to me to be really one of a civil nature and the complainants do not wish at all to go on with the criminal proceedings so long as the civil dispute is settled to their satisfaction. They would like the criminal proceedings to go on if the dispute is not settled to their satisfaction. The Criminal Courts are not intended to be used in this way. The complainants have had more than one chance of proving their case in the Criminal Courts and they finally gave up the remedy when they declined to produce evidence on the 18th December 1913. A civil case is also now pending and the dispute will be settled one way or the other. On every ground it is inexpedient that there should be any further inquiry in the Criminal Court into an occurrence which took place so long ago as April 1913.

I accept the revision and set aside the order of the District Magistrate of the 24th January 1914, cancelling his previous order of discharge.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 366, 373—Minor girl voluntarily leaving her guardian—Kidnapping—Selling minor for purpose of prostitution

A chamar girl between the age of 13 and 14 voluntarily left the house of her husband and parents, met E on a public road and stayed with him for a month. Afterwards E made over the girl to certain other persons who bored her nose and made her appear a Jat girl. Subsequently the girl passed several hands until she was made over to a person to be married with his brother;

Held, that E was neither guilty of the offence of taking or enticing the girl out of the keeping of her lawful guardian nor of the offence of selling the minor with the intent that she might be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution. [p. 648, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Muttra.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the Crown.

Mr. Kena Ram Mukerji, Amicus Curie, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—The five appellants have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge on the following facts as found by the Court below. Musammât Jamni is a Chamar girl between the age of 13 or 14 years. She was married and she lived with her husband and his parents. For reasons best known to herself she ran away apparently more than once from her home, and on the present occasion she got clean away, and was making her way along the public road to Agra when she was met by the appellant, Ewaz Ali, who was a road chaukidar. He stopped her and at first decided to take her to the Police Station. Subsequently, however, after questioning her he agreed to take her into his house and she stayed with him for about a month. At the end of that month he made her over to the three appellants, Hira Lal, Shankaria and Musammât Surja. Apparently these persons were well aware of the circumstances of the girl. They bored her nose and made her, as far as possible, appear to be a Jat female. They then passed her off as Musammât Surja's niece and made her over to Ghure Jat on payment of Rs. 80, to be married to Sukhdeo. The deception was subsequently discovered, the girl was returned to these three persons and the money demanded back. Apparently it was returned. The girl was then made over to the fifth appellant, Tota who is related to Musammât Surja. Tota kept the girl and then finally sold her for a sum of Rs. 70, representing her to be his niece. She was sold to Kallu and Samai Singh for the purpose of being married to the brother of Kallu, for whom a wife was being sought. While Kallu and Samai Singh were taking the girl away to Kallu's village, they were stopped by the Chaukidar Sohna Ram and the whole matter was brought to light. Upon these facts the Court below convicted Ewaz Ali of an offence under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 40. Hira Lal, Tota, Musammat Surja and Shankaria have been convicted of cheating and have been sentenced, Hira Lal, Tota, and Shankaria to one year's rigorous imprisonment each plus a fine, and Musammat Surja to six months' rigorous imprisonment. They have all appealed. No exception has been taken to the trial of all these persons together, at one and at the same trial. In regard to Hira Lal, Tota, Musammat Surja and Shankaria, there can be very little doubt as to their guilt, nor do the sentences imposed upon them call for interference. The case of Ewaz Ali is one of doubt. It is quite clear that when he met Musammat Jamni, the girl had got clean away out of the hands of her husband and his parents. The question is whether he can be said to have taken or enticed the girl out of the keeping of her lawful guardian. In the case of Emperor v. Jetha Nathoo (1), two Judges of the Bombay High Court pointed out the difference between the English Law on the subject and the Indian Law and the difference in meaning between the word "keeping" and the word "possession". One will have very little difficulty in fully agreeing with the decision in that case in view of the actual facts therein. There a girl under 16 years of age went out in search of work. She was induced by a deceitful promise of obtaining work to go to a certain house. There can be no doubt that in that case the offence of kidnapping was committed. In the present case the girl had voluntarily left the keeping of her guardian with the intention to remain out of that keeping and the accused Ewaz Ali, probably with full knowledge of the circumstances, gave her a home and finally transferred her to the keeping of Hira Lal, Shankaria and Musammat Surja on receipt of the sum of Rs. 40. It is very difficult under these circumstances to say that he either took or enticed away the minor out of the keeping of the lawful guardian. The case is very much akin to that of Emperor v. Ramchander (2). In that case also a girl under 16 years of age left the guardianship of her husband and father-in-law of her own free will and not for the first time, and then subsequently stayed with the accused quite voluntarily and without any force having been exercised upon her. The Judges before whom that case came for decision held that the act did not amount to taking or enticing the girl out of the keeping of her lawful guardian. In the judgment it was remarked as follows:—"On the admitted facts the leaving and the removal out of the keeping of the lawful guardian was the act of the girl herself long before she met the accused." In view of the above remarks in that case, it seems to me that the conviction of Ewaz Ali under section 363 cannot possibly stand. The question arises whether Ewaz Ali could or could not be convicted of an offence under section 372, that is, selling a minor with intent that such minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be employed or used for any such purpose. No doubt Ewaz Ali was well aware of what was about to happen to the girl. She was to be made to resemble as far as possible a Jat female, and to be used for the purpose of cheating other persons and obtaining money. That no doubt was unlawful, but for the purposes of the section the object must also be immoral. The point is covered by the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Empress of India v. Sri Lal (3). There again a low caste girl, as in the present case, was falsely represented by certain persons as being a member of a higher caste, and another member of such higher caste was induced thereby to take her in marriage and to pay money for her in the full belief that such representation was true. It was held by the Full Bench that the accused could not be convicted on these facts of offences under sections 372 and 373 of the Indian Penal Code. The decision covers the facts of the present case and I am bound to hold that Ewaz Ali committed no offence under section 372 or 373 of the Indian Penal Code. It is clear that he did not attempt to cheat Hira Lal, Shankaria and Musmmat Surja.

EWAZ ALI v. EMPEROR.

Under these circumstances, I must allow the appeal of Ewaz Ali. I set aside his conviction and sentence and direct that he be forthwith released. The appeals of the other appellants are all dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—This is an appeal from a conviction and sentence passed under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code on a charge of criminal breach of trust in respect of a motor car of the value of about Rs. 7,246.

When the appeal was admitted, my learned brother, Mr. Justice Beaman, took occasion to express certain doubts * which, upon the arguments and the materials then before the Court, occurred to him as to the propriety of this conviction, and I desire to say in deference to that expression of doubt that full weight has been given to the circumstances to which the learned Judge made allusion. But we have now had the advantage of a full argument on both sides together with a study of various exhibits and documents which were not before the Bench when this appeal was admitted. In the light cast upon the conviction by these fuller materials I am of opinion that the conviction is good and must be sustained.

The appellant was the hirer of a Charron Motor Car from the Company, and the case for the prosecution is that he dishonestly disposed of that car in violation of the terms of his legal contract with the Company, so that he was guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust was defined in section 405 of the Indian Penal Code. Mr. Godinho, on behalf of the appellant, made some attempt to suggest that the real transaction between the appellant and the Company was an out-and-out sale and that the hire-purchase agreement, which is Exhibit A in the case, was merely extorted, or cajoled out of the

* Beaman, J.'s remarks were as follows:—In admitting this appeal I should like to say for myself that I am extremely doubtful whether the two (so-called) mortgage transactions would really constitute the criminal offence of which the accused has been found guilty. They certainly could not in any way have injured the complainant, nor do they appear to contravene the terms of the hire-purchase note. It seems to me that the learned Magistrate did not believe the third transaction which, if conclusively proved, might support the conviction and sentence. I place these observations on record, because it is unlikely that the appeal would be heard before me.

SILAS MOSES v. EMPEROR.

appellant by way of being held in terrorem over him. After some little discussion, however, Mr. Godinho, as I understood him, was fain to concede that no such line of defence was fairly open to him, but that his client must be regarded as bound by the written contract which he accepted and executed, that is, the contract of hire-purchase embodied in Exhibit A. Now that being so, clause 5 of the contract provided that until the hirer, that is, the appellant, exercised his option to purchase in the manner prescribed and by the date prescribed, which would be the 11th October 1914, the car was to remain the absolute property of the Company, and the clause continues that "the hirer shall not, during the hiring, assign, underlet or part with the possession of the same in any way whatsoever, nor shall have any right or interest in the same other than that of the hirer under this agreement." Those, then, were the rights secured by the contract to the appellant; yet, on the 1st of April 1914 and on the 15th of November 1914 and on the 9th of March 1915, he mortgaged the car to three other persons for the respective sums of Rs. 500, Rs. 300 and Rs. 1,500. In describing all these transfers as mortgages, I am putting the case most favourably to the appellant. For it is very susceptible of argument that the last transaction of March 1915 was an out-and-out sale. This, however, there is no need to press against the appellant, and I am content to regard all the transactions as being mortgages. The argument that they cannot amount to mortgages but must be regarded as mere pledges or hypothecations seems to me inconsistent with the record, and I am satisfied that the transactions were mortgages of this motor car and that such mortgages are allowed in India as shown by the decision in the case of Dumodar v. Atmaram (1). Having regard to the general terms of the contract and especially to the terms of clause 5 which I have quoted, it is, I think, certain that the mortgaging of this car by the appellant was, in the language of section 405 of the Indian Penal Code, a violation of the legal contract made by the appellant in regard to the hire of this car.

The only question, therefore, which would remain is, whether such violation is shown to have been dishonest on the part of the appellant. That term is defined in section 24 of the Indian Penal Code, which provides that "whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing 'dishonestly.'"

Now, in my opinion, the natural and probable consequence of the mortgaging by the appellant was wrongful gain to the appellant and wrongful loss to the Company. And since every one must be taken to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own acts, I must infer that this wrongful loss to the Company or wrongful gain to the appellant was intended by the appellant. That inference is supported by the recitals made in the mortgage-deeds and by the oral representations made to the mortgagees that the car was the absolute property of the appellant free from any incumbrance. It is impossible, in my mind, to reconcile such a representation by the appellant with any honest belief of his. Moreover, in the first of the mortgage-deeds an interest in the mortgaged car is conveyed to the mortgagee, inasmuch as he is empowered to recover his debt from the sale-proceeds of the car. In the second of the mortgage-deeds the appellant promised to deliver possession to the mortgagee if the appellant's payments should fall short. It appears to me that this conduct of the appellant convicts him of dishonesty, having regard to the plain terms of the contract which he had executed in English and which, I feel no doubt, he thoroughly understood.

These were the only points that were taken on the appellant's behalf in this argument, and for the reasons that I have stated I think they fail. Therefore, in my judgment, the appeal must be dismissed and the conviction and sentence confirmed.

With reference to Mr. Wadia's application as to the disposal of the motor car, we observe that an order has already been made by the learned Magistrate under section 517, and inasmuch as the present appeal from his judgment is dismissed, the order under section 517 will stand. That order makes provision for the disposal of the car after the period of the appeal has expired or after the disposal of the appeal. It is consequently unnecessary for us to make any fresh order under section 520 of the Code.

(1) 8 Bom. L. R. 344.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. The appellant has been convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of a motor car entrusted to him under a hire-purchase agreement. The appellant has not been able to dispute that agreement, nor the clause therein binding him not to assign, underlet or part with the possession of that motor car during the hire-purchase agreement. He has also had to admit the execution by him of two mortgages and one transaction purporting to be a sale of that motor car during the period of the hire-purchase agreement. But it has been urged on behalf of the appellant that he had no intent to cause wrongful loss to the owners and, therefore, did not act dishonestly in entering into those mortgage and sale transactions; and it has also been contended on his behalf that those transactions did not amount to assignments within the meaning of the hire-purchase agreement.

With regard to the first contention, whoever does anything with intent to cause wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another is said to act dishonestly under section 24 of the Indian Penal Code, and it must be presumed that a person intends the natural consequences of his acts under section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. Now there can, in my opinion, be no reasonable doubt that the appellant did, by entering into these transactions, both cause wrongful gain to himself and wrongful loss to the owners of the motor car. He caused wrongful gain to himself by obtaining moneys on the security of the motor car contrary to a legal agreement prohibiting him from assigning any interest in that car, and he caused wrongful loss to the owners by putting in their way difficulties in recovering the moneys due from him to them and by subjecting their motor car to the risks of attachment and litigation.

With regard to the second contention, the first mortgage contained a provision that the mortgagee should be entitled in default of payment to take possession of the car and to recover any moneys due by sale of the car. The second mortgage contained a provision entitling the mortgagee to recover possession, and the third mortgage was in the form of a sale passing absolute ownership of the car. Now there can be no reasonable doubt, in my opinion, that these transactions did assign a valuable interest in that motor car, viz., either the possession or the right to recover money by the sale of the car, and that such assignments were clearly contrary to the express agreement in the hire-purchase agreement.

That being so, it appears to me to follow that the appellant, being entrusted with the motor car, dishonestly disposed of it in violation of a legal contract which he had made touching the discharge of the trust of that car. In other words, he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of that car within the meaning of section 405 and has been rightly convicted of that offence under section 405 of the Indian Penal Code.

In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

MALLAPA MALLAPA TAVARGI v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—The District Magistrate of Banda in this case appears to have seen Police papers of some kind and then and there to have instituted a case under section 195 of the Indian Penal Code against two persons, Durga Prasad and Mohiuddin. The utmost that appears from the record is that apparently in the eyes of the Police, Durga Prasad and Mohiuddin "got at" one Musammât Putia, and persuaded her to make a statement to the effect that she had seen certain persons whom she mentions by name, in the act of committing dacoity on her premises, that they apparently persuaded other persons to make statements to the same effect. Assuming for the moment that this is an accurate statement of what did take place, it would not still amount to an offence under section 195 of the Indian Penal Code. There was no giving of false evidence at that time before the learned District Magistrate. There was no fabricating of false evidence as defined in section 192 of the Indian Penal Code. The order for the prosecution of these persons was evidently hastily given without due consideration as to whether there was any basis for the charge. I laid down in Emperor v. Tabarak Zaman Khan (1) that in cases of this kind the safer and more proper course is undoubtedly to let the informant bring his witnesses to the Court, hear them out, and then pass an order, if the case is considered to be a false one, to the effect that the informer be tried for having instituted a false case. That would have been the proper procedure. In the present case I need not go into the question whether the Magistrate who does not observe this procedure is acting without jurisdiction. I am satisfied that the learned Magistrate had before him no basis on which he could pass the order he did.

I, therefore, set aside that order in its entirety. Durga Prasad and Mohiuddin if on bail, the bail bonds will be discharged.

Order set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188—Operation of section—Injunction—Disobedience—Offence.

Operation of section 188, Indian Penal Code, is limited to the promulgation by public servants of public orders relating to the safety, the health or the convenience of the public. Therefore, the disobedience of an injunction directing a guardian not to marry a minor girl in his charge cannot fall within the purview of the section. [p. 653, col. 1.]

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the District Judge of Dharwar.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaonkar, for the Applicant
Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order made by the learned District Judge of Dharwar, directing that the appellant should be prosecuted for disobedience of the District Court's order made under the Guardians and Wards Act.

It appears that a temporary injunction was issued against the present appellant directing him not to marry the two minor girls, Hanmava and Basava, but that thereafter he handed over the minors to his sister, Baslingava, and she brought about the marriage of the infants. It is stated by Mr. Mulgaonkar, on behalf of the appellant, that the temporary injunction issued against the present appellant was never carried further, but was merged in the ultimate order of the Court which vested the guardianship of the minors in one Hanmantgavda. It may be that these circumstances would throw difficulty in the way of the execution of the order under appeal. But, however that may be, it seems to us that the order is unsustainable upon another ground. The learned Judge, though he directs the prosecution, does not specify under what section of the Indian Penal Code the prosecution should be instituted. It is, however, agreed between the learned Pleaders that the only section of the Code which could be used for such a prosecution would be section 188, and it seems clear from the wording of that section that its operation is limited to the promulgation by public servants of public orders relating to the safety, the health or the convenience of the public. That, as we say, is the view which appears upon the wording of the section, and that is the interpretation which was placed upon the section by a Bench of this Court, viz., Mr. Justice Aston and Mr. Justice Heaton in Imperator v. Hanmant (1). Following that ruling we must hold that the order made by the District Judge is invalid.

The Rule, therefore, must be made absolute and the order must be discharged.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 537—Irregularity in procedure—Sufficient cause to set aside conviction—Accumulative sentences, legality of.

A complaint was made before a Magistrate. The Magistrate without at once examining the complainant, sent for the papers of the Police investigation and summoned the accused and fixed a date asking the complainant to proceed with the case independently on that date. On the date so fixed, the accused appeared, but the complainant did not. The Magistrate discharged the accused. Subsequently on the same date the complainant appeared and explained the cause of his delay. The Magistrate again without examining the complainant fixed another date giving the complainant opportunity to examine his witnesses. On the date so fixed the complainant and his witnesses were examined and a process was issued against the accused. Subsequently the accused were convicted of the offences complained of:

Held, that there was no sufficient cause to set aside the conviction on the ground of irregularity. [p. 654, col. 1.]

Where different persons are injured, grievous hurt is caused in one case and simple hurt in others, the Magistrate is competent to pass accumulative sentences. [p. 654, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Cawnpore.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision. The facts are briefly as follows:—A complaint was made to the Police in which the complainant complained that he and certain other persons had been beaten by the present applicants, and that one of them had suffered injuries amounting to grievous hurt. The Police do not appear to have been very anxious to initiate proceedings. The result was that the complainant came before Mr. Williamson, a Magistrate of the first Class, with what amounted to a "complaint" though no doubt it was to a certain extent also a complaint against the Police for not moving in the matter. This was on the 8th of February. The Magistrate made an order in the following terms: "Papers of the Police investigation to be produced before me on February the 16th. The complainants, if they wish to prosecute their case independently of the Police, should produce evidence on that date and also summon the accused." This order was not regular. There was no objection, of course, to the Magistrate sending for the Police papers. On the contrary it was a very correct thing for him to do, but under section 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure he ought at once, and before he summoned the accused, to have examined the complainant on oath. On the 16th of February for some reason or other the complainants did not turn up. The accused were in Court and the Magistrate made an order of discharge under section 259 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The very same day the complainants turned up and evidently explained to the learned Magistrate how it was that they were unable to be present in Court. Thereupon the Magistrate made the following order:—"The applicants appeared after the rising of the Court, having arrived by a late train. In view of the Police report and the departure of the accused it will be sufficient to allow applicants so much grace as to give them an opportunity of showing, under section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, whether they can support their case by evidence. To February the 23rd for this purpose."

EMPEROR V. NGA E MOUNG.

This order is dated the 17th, although the corresponding vernacular order in the order sheet is dated the 16th. On the 23rd of February the complainant and four witnesses were examined and process was ordered to issue for the accused. The proceedings against them began on the 8th of March. The Magistrate again, on the 16th or 17th of February, in a lesser degree made the same mistake as he had made in the previous order. He did not at once examine the complainants on oath. It is contended in revision that the conduct of the Magistrate amounts to such an illegality that it vitiates the entire proceedings. It is admitted, however, that according to the rulings and practice of this Court, an order of discharge is no bar to the Court taking cognizance of the case upon a fresh complaint or a fresh Police report, notwithstanding that the complaint or Police report refers to the very same offence in respect of which the accused had previously been discharged. It follows from this that if the Court had never made the order dated the 17th of February, and that on the 23rd of February the complainant had come to the Magistrate, explained to him why it was he had been unable to attend on the 16th, and had then made an oral complaint to the Magistrate, the proceedings which led to the issue of process and the subsequent trial would all have been regular. It seems to us that the irregularity in the previous orders cannot, under the circumstances of the present case, be said to vitiate the proceedings. At the same time we wish very strongly to impress upon the learned Magistrate that the provisions of the Code as to procedure ought to be strictly complied with. Non-observance of the provisions of the Code leads to much confusion and waste of public time, not to speak of involving the parties in unnecessary expense. Under the circumstances of this case we see no sufficient ground for setting aside the conviction on the ground of the irregularity in the issuing of process to the accused.

The second point raised in the application is that cumulative sentences were illegal. It seems to us that there is no force in this contention. Different persons were injured, grievous hurt was caused in one case and simple hurt in others. Therefore, it was competent for the Court to impose separate and accumulative sentences.

The only other matter is a question of severity of sentence. The injuries in most of the cases were simple. In one case there was a broken finger and the infliction on the head of a wound which laid bare the bone. No doubt these injuries were of a serious nature. There are, however, some circumstances connected with the case in which it is unnecessary to go in detail but we have considered these circumstances, and we think that the ends of justice will be met by making the sentences passed run concurrently. We order that the sentences of imprisonment passed on Bateshar and Mathura shall run concurrently instead of consecutively. In all other respects we dismiss the application. The applicants must surrender to their bail.

Lunatic—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 471 (1), 423, 427, 439—Lunacy Act (IV of 1912), s. 24—(Act X of 191)—Court's power to direct reception of criminal lunatic into asylum—Warrant of arrest—Order, if prejudicial.

Under Lunacy Act IV of 1912 and Act X of 1914 the Magistrates or Courts are no longer required to report cases under section 471 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, for the order of the Local Government but are themselves competent to direct the reception of a criminal lunatic into any asylum which is prescribed for the reception of criminal lunatics. [p. 655, col. 2.]

A warrant of arrest is not an order to the prejudice of the accused within the meaning of section 439 (2), Criminal Procedure Code and can, therefore, be issued without previous notice to him. [p. 655, col. 2.]

An order under section 471 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, is clearly an order which the acquitting Court, whether Original or Appellate, not only has power to make but is bound to make under section 423 (d). [p. 656, col. 1.]

Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khanda, 12 Ind. Cas. 297; 39 C. 157; 14 C. L. J. 437; 16 C. W. N. 10; 12 Cr. L. J. 529, referred to and followed.

Review of the order of the first Additional Magistrate of Einme, dated the 22nd April 1915, passed in Criminal Trial No. 68 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—Nga E MOUNG was sent for trial before the Additional Magistrate of Einme under section 452, Indian Penal Code. A charge was formed against him under that section and a defence of insanity was set up, which the Magistrate held proved. He acquitted the accused and released him, completely ignoring the imperative provisions of section 471 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Nga E MOUNG has been called upon in revision to show cause why the provisions should not now be given effect to, and has shown cause through an Advocate.

The allegation made against Nga E MOUNG was that at about 7 A.M. on 21st March he entered the house of Mg. Po Thaik while the latter was dressing and approached him and stabbed him on the left forearm with a clasp knife. Nga E MOUNG stabbed him again, but Mg. Po Thaik caught his hand in which the knife was and sustained only a slight wound on the chest. He held Nga E MOUNG till other persons came and disarmed him.

The case was carelessly tried by the Magistrate in several respects. Thus Mg. Po Thaik's evidence might be read as implying that he avoided entirely the blow aimed at his arm, and that it did not take effect at all; one of the witnesses, Mg. Kala, who came on the scene at once also refers to Po Thaik as showing people his wound; the Sub-Assistant Surgeon was allowed to leave the witness-box after deposing to the nature of only one wound on Mg. Po Thaik, that on his chest; he was, however, re-called, and made it plain that he had also a wound on the forearm, though all he said as to its nature was that it was not the result of great force. That, however, and his evidence make it perfectly clear that Po Thaik had two wounds, one in the arm and one on the chest.

The Magistrate appears to have found that had Nga E MOUNG been sane he would have been guilty of an offence under section 452, Indian Penal Code, but it is not clear whether he held that he committed any act besides entering Po Thaik's house armed with a clasp knife. He has expressly found that Nga E MOUNG did not inflict the wound on Po Thaik's chest, but throughout his rambling memorandum on the charge and his judgment I nowhere find any decision as to whether the accused inflicted the wound on Po Thaik's forearm. On the evidence the finding should have been that he did.

Cause is shown by Nga E MOUNG's Advocate on three grounds:—First, that it is unnecessary to report the case for the orders of the Local Government, as it is open to the Local Government to act without any such report. As to this point it overlooked the change in the law effected by Act IV of 1912 and Act X of 1914. Magistrates and Courts are no longer required to report cases under section 471, Criminal Procedure Code, for the orders of the Local Government, but are themselves competent under section 24 of Act IV of 1912 to direct the reception of a criminal lunatic into any asylum which is prescribed for the reception of criminal lunatics. The case will, therefore, not be reported for the orders of the Local Government.

The next ground is that a warrant for Nga E MOUNG's arrest under section 427, Criminal Procedure Code, should not have been issued without previous notice to him under section 439 (2). In my opinion a warrant of arrest is not an order to the prejudice of the accused within the meaning of section 439 (2). To hold that, it would, I consider, render useless the conferment on the High Court as a Court of Revision the powers of an Appellate Court under section 427, Criminal Procedure Code.

The third ground is that an order under section 471 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, is not an amendment or consequential or incidental order within the meaning of section 423 (d), Criminal Procedure Code. The case of Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khanda (1) was relied on. That appears to me an authority against the contention put forward. It was there held that an order is not "consequential or incidental to an order of discharge or acquittal unless the discharging or acquitting Court has, aliunde, power to make it." An order under section 471 (1) is clearly an order which the acquitting Court, whether Original or Appellate, not only has power to make, but is bound to make. It falls in fact in the class of orders which the Calcutta case quoted regards as indubitably coming under section 423(d), namely, "Order which follows as a matter of course, being the necessary complement to the main order passed, without which the latter would be incomplete or ineffective."

The provisions of section 471 (1) are plain and imperative and I feel no doubt that if a Subordinate Court disregards them, this Court has power to remedy the power in revision. In this case I consider this will best be done by recording the finding which the Magistrate should have recorded under section 470 and passing the order which he should have passed under section 471 (1).

The finding is that at 7 A.M. on 21st March 1915 Nga E Moung, son of Mg. Tun U, of Einme entered the house of Mg. Po Thaik of Einme carrying a clasp knife, wherewith he stabbed Mg. Po Thaik in the left forearm. But for Nga E Moung having been found to be, at the time by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the acts committed or that they were wrong or contrary to law, they would have constituted an offence.

Under section 471 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, read with section 24 of Act IV of 1912, Nga E Moung will be committed to the Rangoon Lunatic Asylum under a warrant in Criminal Form 121A.

Order accordingly.

Where in an appeal from a conviction for an offence under section 224 of the Penal Code, the appellant pleads illegality of the confinement in stocks on account of his respectability, the Appellate Magistrate should deal with that point before disposing of the appeal.

Petition, under sections 438 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tenali, in Criminal Appeal No. 72 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the Taluq 2nd Class Magistrate of Repalli, in Calendar Case No. 4 of 1914.

Mr. V. S. Narasimhachariar, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The Sub-Divisional Magistrate remarks that accused was "not a pariah, but a govandla ryot owning some lands to whom imprisonment in stocks is a great disgrace;" and on this account has reduced the sentence. He does not appear, however, to have considered whether in view of these circumstances accused was liable to the punishment of confinement in the stocks. If on this ground the sentence of confinement in the stocks was illegal, accused cannot be convicted of an offence under section 224, Indian Penal Code, in escaping from it.

The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is set aside: and he is directed to restore the appeal to file and dispose of it according to law in the light of the above remarks and of the decision in Queen v. Nabi Saheb (1).

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 215—Winding-up—Proceedings in Courts against Company in liquidation, when may be stayed.

The passing of resolutions for a voluntary winding-up does not, like an order for winding up by or under the supervision of the Court, stay any proceedings or invalidate executions or distresses, or prevent actions or other proceedings being brought or continued against the Company without the leave of the Court. However, on an application being made the Court has jurisdiction to stay any action, proceeding, attachment, distress or execution against the Company, or its estate or effects upon such terms as it thinks fit. Until a stay is granted a creditor may commence or continue any action or proceedings or put in force any attachment, distress, execution or analogous proceeding and, therefore, a Liquidator may obtain a supervision order to protect him against actions which are threatened and so save the expense of applying for the stay or restraint of proceedings against the Company.

Application under section 215, Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913.

Mehta Bahadur Chaud, for the Petitioners.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This application under section 215 of the Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913, must fail on the short ground that as recently decided by a Division Bench in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 2318 of 1914, the Court has no jurisdiction to recover by a summary process the money which the creditor of the Bank had realized by a regular suit. The judgment in the above case is directly applicable and I am bound to follow it.

Further, the applicants have not established their contention that the mere passing of the resolution for voluntary winding-up invalidates proceedings in execution against the Company. The law on the subject is correctly stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 5, page 583, in the following terms:—

"The passing of resolutions for voluntary winding up does not, like an order for winding up by or under supervision of the Court, stay any proceedings, or invalidate executions or distresses, or prevent actions or other proceedings being brought or continued against the Company without the leave of the Court. On application, however, the Court has jurisdiction to stay any action, proceeding, attachment, distress or execution against the Company, or its estate or effects, upon such terms as it thinks fit. Until the stay is granted, a creditor may commence or continue any action or proceeding, or put in force any attachment, distress, execution or analogous proceeding; and, therefore, a Liquidator may obtain a supervision order to protect him against actions which are threatened, and so save the expense of applying for the stay or restraint of proceedings against the Company."

For the aforesaid reasons I dismiss this application, but leave the parties to bear their own costs in the Court.

Res judicata—Hindu widow, suit by, to set aside adoption—Suit dismissed on ground of estoppel—No oral evidence taken—Privy Council deciding on merits—Second suit by reversioner, if barred—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

A Hindu widow sued her alleged adopted son for a declaration that she had not adopted him and even if she had adopted, the adoption was invalid, as she had no authority from her husband. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit finding that the defendant had been adopted and the widow was estopped from questioning the validity of the adoption without trying other issues or recording oral evidence in regard to them. The High Court affirmed the decision. The Privy Council agreed with the High Court as to the factum of adoption but found on a consideration of the documentary evidence that the authority to adopt had been proved. After the widow's death a reversioner sued the defendant for possession on the same grounds as the widow had sued:

Held, per Banerji and Chamier, JJ., (Richards, C. J., dissenting) that the previous suit was a bar to the Per Chamier, J.—A Court may refuse to summon witnesses or admit evidence, and, when its decision is subsequently relied upon as constituting a question res judicata, the Court trying the subsequent case cannot disregard the decision because it thinks that the Court trying the earlier case ought to have summoned the witnesses or admitted further evidence. JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed property known as the Landhaura Estate. One Raghbir Singh was the last owner. He died leaving a widow, Rani Dharam Kunwar, who gave birth to a posthumous son named Jagat Prakash Singh. This boy died shortly after his birth and the Rani purported to adopt a number of boys, one after the other, all of whom died in infancy. Finally she is alleged to have adopted the defendant, Balwant Singh. The Rani died on the 12th of November 1912 and the plaintiff No. 1 claims to be the reversioner and entitled to the estate on the death of the Rani. The second plaintiff is an assignee of a portion of the estate from plaintiff No. 1 and is probably the financier of the present litigation.

The allegation of the plaintiffs is that Raghbir Singh never gave authority to his widow to adopt a son. The Court below has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit holding that a previous litigation between Rani Dharam Kunwar and Balwant Singh operates as res judicata. The Court did not receive any evidence on the question whether or not the plaintiff No. 1 is what he claims to be, namely, the reversioner and heir to the property, nor on the question whether or not the Rani was authorised by her husband to adopt. The sole question which we have to decide in the present appeal is whether the previous litigation operates as res judicata.

It seems to me that we are bound to deal with the appeal on the assumption that the plaintiffs might possibly have been able to adduce evidence which would satisfy the Court, first, that the plaintiff No. 1 is the reversioner and second, that Raghbir Singh never authorised his wife to adopt a son. If the Court below was correct in holding that the previous litigation operated as res judicata, it was quite unnecessary to go into the evidence on either of these two points. If, on the other hand, the previous litigation does not operate as res judicata, then clearly the Court ought to have heard the evidence and it is our duty to remand the case for that purpose.

There can be no doubt (whether the Rani had the authority to adopt or not) that a ceremony of adoption was in fact gone through in the most public manner possible. Prior to or simultaneously with the alleged adoption the Rani had obtained an agreement from the father of Balwant Singh that notwithstanding the adoption she should be allowed to remain in possession of the estate during her life. Immediately after the alleged adoption disputes arose between the Rani and Balwant Singh; the latter wished to repudiate the agreement and go into possession of the estate, a course of action which was strongly resented by the Rani. The result was that she instituted a suit in the year 1905 alleging that she had no power to adopt Balwant Singh and that she had not adopted him. This was the commencement of the litigation which the Court below has found to operate as res judicata.

The Court of first instance (in that suit) declined to go into any evidence on the question of the Rani's authority to adopt holding that whether or not the Rani had authority, she was estopped by her conduct from denying her authority and dismissed the suit. The Rani appealed to the High Court. The High Court confirmed the decision of the Court below and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It will thus be seen that the Courts in India decided the case on a ground entirely personal to the Rani and without having considered or even received the evidence on the question as to whether or not authority to adopt had been conferred on the Rani.

RISAL SINGH v. BALWANT SINGH.

The law of res judicata is set forth in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It provides that "No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court." The plaintiff in the present suit was, of course, no party to the previous litigation, nor does he "claim under" the Rani. He claims as reversioner or heir of the last male owner. No doubt the doctrine of res judicata has been extended by the Courts to cases in which it can fairly be said that the widow represents the estate. A common case of this kind is where a widow in possession or entitled to possession of her husband's estate brings a suit to recover possession of property which she claims to belong to that estate, against a third party. If that litigation is fairly and honestly conducted, the reversioner is not allowed to re-open the question after the widow's death. The principle established being, as it seems to me, that in the majority of cases the widow can and does represent the estate and that in all such cases the reversioners are bound. The principle is most reasonable and it is to be regretted that it is not expressly enacted in the Code so as to make the latter complete.

We have now to see whether in the previous litigation to which I have referred the Rani can be said to have represented the estate. It seems to me that upto the time of the decree of the High Court dismissing the appeal, she most certainly did not represent the estate. The Courts did not allow her to "represent" the estate; they excluded evidence which she should have given if she was "representing" the estate. The case was decided both by the trial Court and the High Court on a ground personal to the Rani herself. These Courts had held that evidence as to authority to adopt having been conferred on her was immaterial and irrelevant inasmuch as, even if the Rani had no authority, she ought not to be allowed to say so as against the defendant, Balwant Singh. The issue of the authority of the widow to adopt was not "heard or finally decided." On the contrary, the Court, declined even to receive evidence on the issue. The Rani, however, was not satisfied with the decision of the High Court and appealed to His Majesty in Council.* Their Lordships affirmed the decree of the High Court and dismissed the appeal of the Rani. In the course of judgment their Lordships said: "Their Lordships, in reviewing the facts of the case, are of opinion that the question may well be decided as one of fact on the Rani's own statements without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel. In their view she was speaking the truth in Baldeo Singh's action when she was pleading as to her authority. Their Lordships, however, do not differ from the Courts below in the view they have taken as to the applicability of the doctrine of estoppel in this case. Of course the estoppel pleaded against the Rani must be taken as purely personal. It does not bind any one who claims by an independent title, but, in view of the decision now given, that the respondent was, in fact, duly adopted, further litigation on the point may be taken as happily out of the question". Notwithstanding that the Rani had by her conduct rendered it extremely difficult for her to fairly "represent" the estate in her litigation with the defendant, it may perhaps be conceded that the finding of their Lordships would have operated as res judicata had the evidence been admitted and recorded. It seems to me, however, quite clear that had their Lordships' attention been called to the fact that the trial Court had declined to receive evidence they would never have decided the case as a question of fact so as to bind the estate without at least directing evidence on the issue to be recorded and considered. The Rani was not a very truthful person, and in a previous suit by one Baldeo, claiming to be the reversioner and challenging (inter alia) the alleged authority to adopt, the Court found that Baldeo had failed to establish that he was the reversioner and that it was, therefore, unnecessary to decide the issue as to authority, but the learned Judge gave it as his opinion that it was highly improbable that any authority had been conferred. I mention this fact merely as suggesting that no finding on the statement of the Rani could be satisfactory without hearing all material evidence that could be produced. It seems to me that the judgment of their Lordships can no more operate as res judicata than the judgment of the trial Court if it had decided an issue after excluding evidence relevant thereto. It is, however, contended that in the absence of fraud all decrees against a Hindu widow bind the reversioners and certain expressions of learned Judges of the Indian Courts and of their Lordships of the Privy Council are quoted in support of the contention. This contention is clearly not correct. Their Lordships themselves evidently felt that if the case was decided on a ground personal to the Rani the reversioner would not be bound. It seems to me that it is very dangerous to place too much reliance on expressions of learned Judges used in giving judgment in other cases where the facts and circumstances were different. The expressions relied on one and all occur in judgments in cases where the Hindu widow could be said to have fairly "represented" not only herself but also the estate. Jessel, M. R., in Hallett's Estate In re, Knatchbull v. Hallett (1), speaking of the proper use of authorities, says: "The only use of authorities, or decided cases is the establishment of some principle which the Judge can follow out in deciding the case before him." In Quinn v. Leatham (2), Halsbury, L. C. says:—"Now, before discussing the case of Allen v. Flood (3) and what was decided therein, there are two observations of a general character which I wish to make, and one is to repeat what I have very often said before, that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides."

In Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co. Ltd (4) Haldane, L. C., says:—"To follow previous authorities, so far as they lay down principles, is essential if the law is to be preserved from becoming unsettled and vague. In this respect the previous decisions of a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction are more binding in a system of jurisprudence such as ours than in systems where the paramount authority is that of a Code. But when a previous case has not laid down any new principle but has merely decided that a particular set of facts illustrates an existing rule, there are few more fertile sources of fallacy than to search in it for what is simply resemblance in circumstances, and to erect a previous decision into a governing precedent merely on this account. To look for anything except the principle established or recognised by previous decisions is really to weaken and not to strengthen the importance of precedent."

It seems to me that the principle established or recognised in the decisions, in which the expressions relied on occur, is this, namely, that in many suits brought by or against Hindu widows the widow can and does fairly represent not only herself but the estate, and that the doctrine of res judicata should be applied in all such cases where the reversioner seeks to re-open decided questions. The reason and justice for the principle is absent in any case where for any cause the widow did not in truth represent the estate. In my judgment, the Rani in her suit could not and did not represent the Landhaura Estate. The Courts in India and also their Lordships of the Privy Council held that she had estopped herself from denying her authority to adopt the defendant. If she performed a ceremony of adoption without authority it was an act against the estate, yet she was not allowed to prove the true facts. As the result of her conduct the Courts in India refused to admit evidence which she tendered to show that she could not adopt the defendant. Much as I regret the protraction of the present litigation, I think that the suit should be remanded to the Court below.

BANERJEE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit relating to the Landhaura Raj, which is a large estate of great value. It has unfortunately nately been the subject of considerable litigation, which commenced so far back as the year 1872. The last Raja was Raghubir Singh, who died in 1868 leaving a widow, Rani Dharam Kunwar. A posthumous son was born to him, who died shortly afterwards. The history of the estate and of the previous litigation relating to it is given in the judgment of this Court delivered on the 10th of December 1903 and it is also set forth in the judgment of the Court below. Rani Dharam Kunwar was in possession of the estate after her husband's death till she died on the 12th of November 1912. She made successive adoptions, the last of which is alleged to have been made in January 1899, when she is said to have adopted the defendant, Balwant Singh, the boys previously adopted having died. Disputes, however, arose between her and Balwant Singh and a suit was brought by her on the 9th of January 1905 for a declaration that she had not in fact adopted Balwant Singh, that even if she did adopt him she had no authority from her husband to do so and that for this and other reasons the adoption was invalid. The Court of first instance found that Balwant Singh had in fact been adopted, but it was of opinion that Rani Dharam Kunwar was estopped from questioning the validity of the adoption and accordingly dismissed the suit, without trying other issues or recording oral evidence in regard to them. This decision was affirmed by this Court on appeal. The judgment of this Court is reported as Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (5). From this judgment an appeal was preferred to the Privy Council. Their Lordships agreed with this Court as to the factum of adoption but proceeded to determine the question "whether the Rani had authority from her husband to adopt the defendant." Upon a consideration of the documentary evidence, of which there was a considerable amount on the record, their Lordships came to the conclusion that authority to adopt had been proved. In their opinion the question might "well be decided as one of fact * * * without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel." Their Lordships, however, did not differ from the Courts below in the view they had taken of that doctrine, but they observed as follows: "Of course the estoppel pleaded against the Rani must be taken as purely personal. It does not bind any one who claims by an independent title, but in view of the decision now given, that the respondent was, in fact, duly adopted, further litigation on the point may be taken as happily out of the question." It is clear from these observations that their Lordships were of opinion that their decision on the question of the validity of the adoption would be binding on reversioners who claimed independently of the Rani.

In spite of this decision of their Lordships the present suit was brought by the first plaintiff, with the help of the second plaintiff, who is apparently a speculator financing the litigation, for possession of the estate on the same grounds as those on which Rani Dharam Kunwar had based her claim, namely, that Balwant Singh had not in fact been adopted and that the Rani had no authority to adopt. The first plaintiff, Risal Singh, alleges himself to be the next reversioner to the estate and he has transferred one-half of his alleged rights to the second plaintiff, Fateh Chand. The title of Risal Singh as reversioner is denied on behalf of the defendants, but the Court below has not tried that question and, on the assumption that he is the reversioner, has dismissed the suit on the ground that he is bound by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the suit of the Rani. The plaintiffs have preferred this appeal, and the only question argued before us is whether that decision is binding.

I agree with the Court below in holding that the decision of their Lordships in that suit is binding on the reversioners. The law on the subject has, in my opinion, been correctly stated by the learned Subordinate Judge. Where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in a female heir, a decree fairly and properly obtained against her in regard to the estate is, in the absence of fraud or collusion, binding on the reversionary heirs. Where, however, the decree relates to a matter personal to her, it is not so binding. The earliest authority on the point is the well-known case of Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivagunga (6). In dealing with the question whether a decree, obtained in 1847, in the life-time of the widow in possession would have bound those claiming in succession to her, their Lordships of the Privy Council held as follows:—"Their Lordships are of opinion that, unless it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right in that suit—or, in other words, unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground, it would have been an effectual bar to any new suit...by any person claiming in succession to her. For assuming her to be entitled to the zemindari at all, the whole estate would for the time be vested in her absolutely for some purposes, though, in some respects, for a qualified interest; and until her death it could not be ascertained who would be entitled to succeed. The same principle which has prevailed in the Courts of this country as to tenants in tail representing the inheritance, would seem to apply to the case of a Hindu widow; and it is obvious that there would be the greatest possible inconvenience in holding that the succeeding heirs were not bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow" (at page 604). The principle thus enunciated by their Lordships was re-affirmed by them in several subsequent cases. I may refer to Jugal Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (7), Partab Narain Singh v. Triloki Nath Singh (8), Harinath Chatterjee v. Mothur Mohun Goswami (9). It has been accepted and acted upon by all the High Courts in this country. The cases on the point are collected on page 910 of Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition and as most of them are set forth in the judgment of the Court below I deem it unnecessary to refer to them. The principle laid down by the Privy Council was thus summarised by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in his judgment in the Full Bench case of Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (10): "In the absence of fraud or collusion, a decision against a widow, with regard to her deceased husband's estate, would be binding upon the reversionary heirs" (at page 507). It is true that the circumstances of all the cases were not identical but in all of them the principle was recognised. As observed by Lord Haldane, L. C., in the recent case of Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co. Ltd. (4) decided by the House of Lords, "the binding force of previous decisions, unless the facts are indistinguishable, depends on whether they establish a principle. To follow previous authorities, so far as they lay down principles, is essential if the law is to be preserved from becoming unsettled and vague." The decisions of the Judicial Committee (acted upon as they have been by the Courts in this country), having laid down a principle, it is essential that they should be followed by us so as not to unsettle what has hitherto been understood to be the law on the point.

We have next to consider whether this principle applies to the present case. Rani Dharam Kunwar claimed to be in possession of the Landhaura Estate either as the widow of her deceased husband or as the mother of her son. It is in her capacity as the person who represented the estate that she instituted the suit brought by her against Balwant Singh. He was claiming title to the estate as the validly adopted son of Raja Raghubir Singh and the object of the suit was to protect the estate from that claim. In her plaint in that suit she alleged that upon the death of her son she obtained possession of the whole of the estate as his heir and continued in possession as such. In the fourth ground of her appeal to this Court she stated that "in her character as representing the estate of her son, Jagat Prakas Singh, she was at liberty to repudiate" the alleged adoption of the defendant. Again, in the 23rd ground of her appeal to His Majesty in Council she asserted that she was not "precluded from bringing a suit as representing the estate of her husband." It is manifest from these statements that she brought her suit as representing the estate and not in a personal capacity. She sought to establish that Balwant Singh was not validly adopted and that he had no right to the estate. By asserting a valid adoption he was casting a cloud on the title of the Rani as representative of the estate and on that of the reversioners who were to come after her, and it was to remove this cloud that she instituted her suit. In the plaint in this case the plaintiffs also have stated that she was in possession as a Hindu widow. As she did not set up any right other than that of a widow or mother and as her right was thus limited to an estate for life, her suit was in substance a suit for the protection of the interests of the reversioners on whom the property would devolve after her death. The final decision in that suit is, therefore, binding on them, in the absence of fraud or collusion. It has not even been suggested that there was fraud or collusion between the Rani and Balwant Singh. Having regard to the relations which existed between them, to the fact that they were at arm's length, to the earnest manner in which the suit was fought out in this country and before the Judicial Committee, the idea of fraud or collusion is out of the question.

The main ground on which the learned Counsel for the appellants contends that the decree in the former suit is not binding on the appellants, is that in that suit the trial Court did not go into evidence on the question of authority to adopt. That Court, it is true, decided the case on the ground of estoppel and refused to record oral evidence on the issue as to authority. This Court also decided the case on the same ground. Had the matter rested there and had the Rani's suit been finally decided on the ground of estoppel only, the decision would have been on a ground personal to the Rani and would not have been binding on the reversioners. But when the case went before the Privy Council, their Lordships preferred to decide the question of authority and the validity of the adoption as one of fact, "without recourse" as their Lordships observed, "to the doctrine of estoppel." Their Lordships were fully cognizant of the fact that oral evidence had not been recorded on the point, but in spite of this they proceeded to decide the question on the documentary evidence before them. The Rani was represented before their Lordships by eminent Counsel and it must be presumed that they urged every point that could be reasonably put forward. It may be that in view of the length of time which had elapsed since the death of Raja Raghubir Singh their Lordships considered, as also did the learned Counsel who presented the Rani's case before them, that oral evidence would be of little value. To take an extreme view, it may also be (if I may say so without presumption) that their Lordships decided the case erroneously. The fact, however, remains that their Lordships proceeded to try the question on the merits and decided it in favour of the defendant. It cannot under the circumstances be said that there was not a fair trial. That the possibility of claimants coming forward as reversioners was present to their Lordships' minds is clear from their judgment, and when they said that "in view of the decision now given that the respondent was in fact duly adopted, further litigation on the point may be taken as happily out of the question," they clearly meant that their decision would be binding on reversioners and the validity of Balwant Singh's adoption would be for all time beyond the region of controversy. To hold otherwise would be to render their Lordships' decision wholly nugatory and it would be open to as many claimants as might assert themselves to be reversioners to re-open the question a number of times and to harass the defendant repeatedly. In this connection I may also point out that in the case of Jugal Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (7), referred to above, the Judicial Committee held a decree, and an auction-sale which followed, to be binding, although the widow against whom it was passed did not appear and the decree was made ex parte and this circumstance did not in the opinion of their Lordships render the decree any the less binding.

It may be that the rule of res judicata as enacted in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not strictly applicable, as the plaintiffs were not parties to the previous suit and do not claim under a party to that suit. But in the Katama Natchiar's case (6) their Lordships held a decree obtained against the widow in possession to be binding on reversionary heirs on the ground of convenience. The decree being binding on the estate binds all persons who succeed to the estate.

In my judgment, the decree passed by the Privy Council in the suit brought against Balwant Singh by Rani Dharam Kunwar is, on the above grounds, binding on the reversioners and this suit is not maintainable. I would dismiss the appeal.

RISAL SINGH V. BALWANT SINGH.

[As the learned Judges differed, the case was referred to Chamier, J., who delivered the following]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was referred to me under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure in consequence of a difference of opinion between the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Banerji. The point upon which they differed is, whether the decision of their Lordships of their Privy Council in the suit of Rani Dharam Kunwar against the defendant-respondent, Balwant Singh, to the effect that the Rani duly adopted Balwant Singh under authority given to her by her husband, is binding upon the plaintiff-appellant, Risal Singh, who claims to be the reversionary heir of the husband and entitled to the estate on the death of the Rani which occurred in November 1912, a few months before the present suit was brought.

In the previous suit the Court of first instance declined to take evidence (or rather oral evidence, for the parties were required to put in their documentary evidence) on the question, whether the Rani had authority to adopt Balwant Singh, and dismissed the suit on the ground that the Rani was estopped from disputing her alleged authority to make the adoption, the factum of which is beyond dispute. This Court also decided the case on the question of estoppel confirming the decree of the first Court. The Rani appealed to His Majesty in Council, one of the grounds taken in the application for leave to appeal being that the first Court should have allowed her to give evidence on the question of her authority to make the adoption. A similar ground was taken in her appeal to this Court. Their Lordships of the Privy Council agreed with the Indian Courts that the Rani was estopped from denying that she had authority to adopt Balwant Singh, but they observed that the estoppel was purely personal and would not bind any one who claimed by an independent title. They, however, as I read the judgment, decided and intended to decide that the evidence showed that the Rani had authority to adopt Balwant Singh. I think that this is clear not only from the passages quoted by Mr. Justice Banerji, but also from earlier portions of the judgment, for example the passage in which they say:—
“He gave formal and emphatic directions to his wife in regard to the adoption of a son. The Rani herself has pledged her word as to the nature and scope of those directions on more than one public and important occasion. She did so particularly in the deed of the 13th January 1899 and in her defence to the action of one Baldeo Singh.” Then later on their Lordships say that “in reviewing the facts of the case, they are of opinion that the question may well be decided as one of fact on the Rani’s own statements without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel. In their view she was speaking the truth in Baldeo Singh’s action when she was pleading as to her authority.” The learned Chief Justice is of opinion that, though in his view the Rani’s conduct rendered it difficult for her to fairly represent the estate, it might perhaps be conceded that the finding of the Privy Council would have operated as res judicata had the evidence as to the Rani’s authority to adopt been admitted and recorded. But he thinks it is clear that, if their Lordships’ attention had been called to the fact that the first Court had declined to receive evidence, they would never have decided the case on the question of fact so as to bind the estate. It seems to me that, if there was any misapprehension as to the proceedings of the first Court, that might be a ground for a review of judgment, but is no ground for holding that a clear and definite decision on the question of fact is not binding on the estate. A Court may refuse to summon witnesses or admit evidence, and, when its decision is subsequently relied upon as constituting a question res judicata, the Court trying the subsequent case cannot disregard the decision because it thinks that the Court trying the earlier case ought to have summoned the witnesses or admitted further evidence. In my opinion, the Rani in the previous case represented the estate. Upon this I have nothing to add to what Mr. Justice Banerji has said. The Rani wanted to give evidence on the question of her authority, and both in appeal to this Court and in her application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council she complained of the action of the Court in refusing to admit that evidence. Therefore, there can be no doubt that she was doing her best to show that there had been no valid adoption, and her action was in the interest of the reversionary heir of her husband. The reports of the case in the Law

MA PAN NYUN v. MA HLA SEIN.

Reports Indian Appeals and in the Indian Law Reports are not as full as in the Allahabad Law Journal and the Calcutta Weekly Notes. The last-mentioned report, Volume 16, page 675,* represents Sir Robert Finlay as having contended that the appeal to their Lordships was confined to the applicability of the doctrine of estoppel and their Lordships as having then intimated that in their opinion there were sufficient materials on the record to decide all questions arising in the suit. Whether Counsel for the appellant acquiesced in this view or not it is impossible to say, but the judgment of their Lordships makes it clear that the question of the Rani's authority to make the adoption was argued. The report in the Calcutta Weekly Notes only makes clear, what one would infer from the other reports, that whether Counsel for the appellants were willing to do so or not their Lordships deliberately decided to take up the question of the Rani's authority to make the adoption. It is impossible to suppose that neither Counsel for the appellant nor their Lordships were aware that the first Court had declined to take oral evidence on the subject. A perusal of the record shows that notwithstanding the order of the Court there was before their Lordships a mass of evidence bearing on the question of the Rani's authority to adopt. What was shut out must have been mainly oral evidence as to the events which had happened many years ago, and it is quite possible that Counsel for the Rani in deference to the opinion of their Lordships did not press the contention that the Rani should be allowed a further opportunity of giving evidence. However that may be, I think it is clear that their Lordships deliberately decided the question, knowing full well that their decision would bind the reversioners and in the hope that their decision would put a stop to further litigation.

I am of opinion that the decision of their Lordships is binding on the plaintiffs in the present suit and justifies the dismissal of the suit without trial on the merits.

Let the record be laid before the Chief Justice.

Questions as to the validity of shinbyu gifts are questions regarding a religious usage and have, therefore, to be decided according to Buddhist Law under section 13 of the Burma Laws Act of 1898. [p. 666, col. 1.]

A gift of property made publicly by both parents (or by the surviving parent, if one is dead) at the time of the shinbyu ceremony constitutes as between the donee and his co-heirs a valid gift although possession of the property was not given but such property remains absolutely at the disposal of the parents or the survivor of them for their life-time or his or her life-time. [p. 667, col. 1.]

Where in such a case the donee dies leaving either of the donors surviving, the gift has no effect and the donee's heirs cannot take benefit of the exception regarding possession obtaining in shinbyu gifts. [p. 667, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, J.—The plaintiff, Ma Hla Sein sued for the recovery of a piece of paddy land measuring 27.96 acres, which has been inherited by her from her late husband, Maung Tha Ku, and which had been given to him by his father, Maung Paw Tin, at Tha Ku's shinbyu ceremony in the year 1902. Tha Ku died in 1912 four months before the death of his father, Paw Tin. The defendants were (1) Tha Ku's step-mother, Ma Lon Gale, who as Paw Tin's widow was in possession of the land, (2) a Chetty to whom the land was mortgaged in 1909 and (3) and (4) two other children of Paw Tin. Possession of the land was admittedly never given to Tha Ku, but about a year after the shinbyu ceremony Tha Ku's name was substituted as holder of the land in the revenue maps and registers, and from 1903-04 to 1909-10 Tha Ku's name alone appeared. In 1910-11 for some reason which is not explained the name of the father, Paw Tin, was restored as holding the land jointly with Tha Ku. There is nothing in the Revenue Register to show that the land was given to Tha Ku as a shinbyu gift. It is stated in an entry in the remarks' column of the register for 1903-04 that Tha Ku's name was substituted as he had "acquired by way of inheritance."

The District Court in which the suit was tried found that the plaintiff failed to prove her allegation that there was such a public gift of the land at the shinbyu ceremony as under the Buddhist Law would render the delivery of possession unnecessary for the validity of the gift. On appeal the Divisional Court, while admitting that the direct evidence of a public gift was not strong, decided in the plaintiff's favour because he held that the direct evidence was strongly corroborated by certain circumstantial evidence. A decree was, therefore, granted to the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed to this Court under section 30 of the Lower Burma Courts Act. The 1st defendant, Ma Lon Gale, has since died and her legal representatives have been substituted. Questions as to the validity of shinbyu gift are questions regarding a religious usage and have, therefore, to be decided according to the Buddhist Law under section 13, Burma Laws Act.

The leading case on the subject is Nga Pan U v. Mi Kyu (1); which was decided by the learned Judicial Commissioner Mr. Sandford in 1874. He cited the following passage from Richardson's translation of the Manu Kye, Book X:—

"If the parents at the time of any of their children entering the priesthood shall with joy and exultations say, 'we have obtained the inheritance of the most excellent gods,' and in their joy shall publicly, either by verbal promise or written engagement, give property to this child, though it come not into the possession of the priest, but remain, as before it was given, with the parents, it was given with a view to benefits in a future state: it is his theng-thee. The other children shall not object that it has never come into his possession; let the priest have the whole. If the parents shall make use of it, let them have the right to do so. If after the death of the parents it shall still be forthcoming, let the priest obtain it, and though the relatives plead that it has never been out of the possession of their parents, they shall have no share. Why is this?—because the priest is a child who has closed the gates of hell for his parents, and pointed out the way to the abodes of the Nats, the reward of good works. Thus the Lord Hermit said." [Richardson, pages 316, 317.]

On this authority he held that a gift made by parents at the time of shinbyu is valid although unaccompanied by delivery of possession, but observed that the condition permitting the parents to use the property after giving it is inconsistent with absolute and exclusive ownership by the donee, and that the furthest the Courts could go was to declare the title of the plaintiff to the possession of the property on the death of the parents. In that particular case, as the parents were still alive, the Judicial Commissioner declared the title of the plaintiff to possession of the property (consisting entirely of moveables) on the death of his parents. I venture to think that the correctness of this decision is open to question, and that the suit against the parents was altogether premature. According to the text cited above, it appears that parents who make a gift at the time of shinbyu without delivering possession, retain an absolute power of disposal over the property during their life-time, and it is only if any of the property should remain intact when they have both died, that the donee's claim can be enforced. This view is supported by the extracts (or, more correctly, abstracts from other Dhammathats) given in section 124 of the Digest prepared by the Hon'ble U Gaung (ex-Kin Wun Mingyi in the Courts of the Burmese Kings, Mindon and Thebaw). Rajabala says distinctly that "the donees shall not claim restitution on the death of parents if the property has been expended by them." The Dhamma text is equally clear. "The parents are at liberty to utilize animate and inanimate property given to their son at the time of the latter's entering the order either as a novice or as a monk. But after the death of the parents, the co-heirs of the donee shall not obtain any portion left unexpended by the parents" (that is to say, the donee will get such portion and such portion only for himself). One text, the Davajja, no doubt says that the donors "shall not revoke" such a gift, but the effect of this prohibition is nugatory as it is clear from the other texts (including the Manu Kye which is recognized by the Privy Council as the chief authority) that the parents may dispose of the property completely leaving nothing for the prospective donee. Indeed it may be gathered from the texts cited in section 124 that the rule as to shinbyu gifts is a rule which was intended only to operate as between the donee and his co-heirs. In other words it is a matter only affecting the partition of the estate on the parents' death. I would deduce from the text page 77, (a) that a gift of property made publicly by both the parents (or by the surviving parent if one is dead) at the time of the shinbyu ceremony constitutes as between the donee and his co-heirs a valid gift although possession of the property was not given; but (b) that property so given remains absolutely at the disposal of the parents or the survivor of them for their life-time or his or her life-time.

(1) L. B. R. (1872-92), 30.

MA PAN NYUN v. MA HLA SEIN.

I think it is clear also (c) that if the donee dies leaving either of the donors surviving, the gift has no effect. For the Manu Kye lays down that the donee is to get the property only after the death of the parents and if it has not already been disposed of by them (literally, if it has not been destroyed). The rule as to shinbyu gifts is an exception to the ordinary principle of the Buddhist Law, by which a gift to be valid has to be completed by delivery of possession. It may also be recorded as an exception to the well-recognized principle that a Burmese Buddhist cannot dispose of his property by Will, for by declaring that a certain part of his property is to belong after his death to a particular son, the father virtually bequeaths it to that son. Looking to the exceptional character of the rule, I think, the Courts are bound to construe it strictly and to see that the conditions are exactly fulfilled. The texts, in my opinion, contemplate that the donee himself survives both parents and we should not be justified in extending the benefit of the exception to the donee's heirs in cases where the donee has predeceased his parents.

Our attention has been directed to section 342 of the Digest which gives an extract (or abstract) from the Davajja, the same Dhammathat mentioned above as prohibiting the revocation of a shinbyu gift. This text is as follows:—"Rishi Manu says that parents cannot, on the death of their son, resume from his surviving wife a gift made publicly at the time of his becoming a novice in the holy order."

I think this can apply only to gifts accompanied by possession, a class of gifts which is probably very rare (except perhaps in the case of jewelry and other moveable property), for Burmese parents, as Mr. Burgess remarked in Maung Shwe Thae v. Ma Sain (2), are loth to part with their property, at any rate while their children are young, as in the case of shinbyu gifts. The ordinary rule of Buddhist Law (section 97 of the Digest) permitted parents to revoke gifts even when accompanied by possession and the text in section 242 makes an exception in favour of shinbyu gifts. But it may be noted that the ordinary rule as to revocation has not been enforced by our Courts [see Mra Do Aung v. Shwe U (3) and Maung At Gyi v. Ma U Me (4)]. The exception made by the Davajja in favour of shinbyu gifts cannot, in my opinion, apply to cases where possession was not given, for as already remarked the texts contemplate the survival of the donee himself beyond the life-time of both his parents.

If the views expressed above are adopted, it follows that the plaintiff's claim in this case must fail. Even if Tha Ku survived his father, Paw Tin, he could not obtain the land during the life-time of his step-mother, Ma Lon Gale. (She was married to Paw Tin in 1898 or four years before the shinbyu ceremony). But Tha Ku died before either of his parents. His right to obtain possession of the land remained a mere contingent right up to the time of his death and he had no vested interest in the property which could pass to his heirs.

These findings are sufficient to dispose of the case apart altogether from the question of publicity on which the lower Courts differed. But on the issue as to publicity also, I think the view taken by the District Court is well founded. Out of seventeen witnesses who stated that they attended the shinbyu ceremony, only three gave direct evidence about the gift and there are substantial grounds for distrusting the veracity of at least two of the three. Even if these witnesses are believed, their statements only go to show that the gift (or more correctly speaking, the dedication of the property) to Tha Ku's use after the death of his parents was made, not at the time of the shinbyu celebration which took place according to custom in a manlap at Paw Tin's house, but next at the Pongyi Kyaung. In the evening at the end of the feast the boy was robed and went to the Kyaung. Nothing was said about a gift up to then and not till next day when the guests had dispersed. It is argued that this is sufficiently near in point of time to justify the Court in regarding the gift as made at the time of making the boy a novice. But if the next day is near enough, it might be contended that the next week or even the next month would not be too late. I think we should insist on strict compliance with the terms of this exceptional provision and require the gift to be made coram populo during the actual celebration. The circumstantial evidence which the learned Divisional Judge relied upon as corroborating the direct evidence of a gift at the shinbyu ceremony falls under three heads, the mutation of the names in the Revenue Register, certain admissions made by Paw Tin at Tha Ku's wedding in 1909, and the entry of Tha Ku's name as the owner of the land in the mortgage to the Chetty in 1909. The mutation of names shows certainly that Paw Tin intended to make a gift of this land to Tha Ku, and if possession had been given the gift would hold good, for the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act were not yet in force in 1902. But as possession was not given, the gift could take effect only if it was a shinbyu gift, and there is nothing in the entry in the Revenue Register to indicate that it was such a gift. The entry indicates that the land was allotted to Tha Ku as his share of the family inheritance and this is borne out by the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses, Maung Aung Kin (P. W. No. 7) and Ma Min Nu (P. W. No. 8). Mere mutation of names in the Revenue Register would, of course, be insufficient, without delivery of possession, to give Tha Ku any right in the property as against his parents or on their death against the general body of co-heirs. On this point the ruling in Maung Ni v. Nga Po Min (5) may be referred to.

Similarly as regards the admissions made by Paw Tin at the wedding in 1909, they show that Paw Tin intended to give this land to Tha Ku but they do not touch the question whether the gift was a shinbyu gift.

Lastly, it was contended that Paw Tin having led Tha Ku to believe that Tha Ku was owner of the land and having got him to execute the mortgage of 1909 in that capacity, Paw Tin's widow was estopped from afterwards denying that the land belonged to Tha Ku. There can be no doubt, as the District Judge pointed out, that Tha Ku executed the mortgage instrument because his name appeared in the Revenue Register as holder of the land and it was necessary for him to sign in order to satisfy the Chetty. A case of estoppel would arise only if Paw Tin had made some representation to Tha Ku and if Tha Ku was thereby induced to sign to his detriment whereas he would not have signed if no such representation had been made to him. It is suggested that Paw Tin said to him: "This land is yours and you alone are able to give a good title." But it is just as likely that he said: "I have put this land in your name and you are to get it if you survive me. As it stands in your name, your signature is necessary to the mortgage instrument." Such a representation would probably be sufficient to induce Tha Ku to sign. In any case Tha Ku did not act to his detriment in executing the mortgage. His right in the property was purely contingent and under the Buddhist Law it was open to his father to sell the land outright at any time without reference to him. I think it is clear that there was no estoppel.

On all these grounds I would set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance, and would direct that the appellants' costs in the Divisional Court and in this Court shall be borne by the respondent.

ORMOND, J.—I agree with my learned colleague in holding that under Buddhist Law the gift is invalid and it cannot be valid under any other law. It is unnecessary in this appeal to decide whether a question as to the validity of a gift of land by Burmese parents to their son on the occasion of his taking the yellow robe—a frequent though not a necessary incident of a shinbyu ceremony—is or is not a question of religious usage or institution; and I prefer not to express an opinion on the point. I concur in the order suggested by my learned colleague.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Arcot in Appeal nit No. 355 of 1906, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Chidambaram, in Original Suit No. 1014 of 1905.

FACTS.—The properties in suit originally formed certain nandavanams (flower gardens) attached to the temple of Devaraja Pillayar Swami in Chidambaram belonging to the Vedamba Chetty community of that place. One Chidambaram Chetty having claimed them as his private property, certain members of the said Vedamba Chetty community presented a petition to the Sub-Collector objecting to their registration in Chidambaram's name and praying that the name of the idol of the temple might be substituted for that of one Muthuveerappa Chetty. The Sub-Collector, however, transferred the putta in the names of Chidambaram, Appasami and Subraya. In 1893, the nephew of Chidambaram and the son of Appasami sold the said gardens to one Ponnambalaswami, who improved the property by spending a large sum of money. The plaintiffs brought the present suit as the representatives of the Vedamba Chetty community, for a declaration that the suit properties were trust properties and that the alienation of the same in favour of Ponnambalaswami was not valid and binding on the community and for recovery of their possession after demolishing certain buildings erected thereon by Ponnambalaswami's representative-in-interest. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the property was private property, that they purchased the same bona fide and for valuable consideration without notice of the trust and that they had been in possession for over 12 years and had consequently acquired title by adverse possession. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, after recording findings on all the issues in the case. On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. The plaintiffs thereupon preferred this second appeal.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar, for Respondent No. 2, raised a preliminary objection that the appeal must be taken to have abated as against the 2nd respondent, as no legal representative had been brought in within the six months allowed by the law and that the order of the Division Bench setting aside the abatement was passed ex parte and was liable to be set aside by this Bench as no sufficient cause had been shown for the failure to apply within time and for the delay of about two months and further even if there had been sufficient cause for one of the appellants, there was nothing to preclude the other appellant from making the necessary application. Reliance was placed on Kichilappa Naickar v. Ramanujam Pillai (1), Tripura Sundari Debi v. Dakshina Mohun Roy (2) and Tekait Ajant Singh v. Sundar Mall (3).

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellants, contended that this Bench had no jurisdiction to re-open an order setting aside an abatement passed by another Division Bench; that the only proper method to set aside that order was by review and that had not been done; and that the order was, therefore, final. He referred to Ganeshwar Singh v. Ganesh Das (4). He distinguished the case of Tripura Sundari Debi v. Dakshina Mohun Roy (2) and argued that the petition was not strictly one to bring on record a legal representative, because the successor-in-office of the 2nd defendant was not his legal representative within the meaning of the definition in section 2 (11), Civil Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—The preliminary objection is raised that in consequence of appellants' failure to apply within six months of the death of the original 2nd defendant (which took place on 11th June 1911) to bring his legal representative on record, the appeal must be held to have abated as regards that party.

An application to set aside the abatement was made on 16th December 1912 and on this an order as prayed for was passed ex parte by Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., on 6th February 1913.

Mr. Seshagiri Aiyar argues that this order being passed ex parte is not conclusive; and that he is entitled to ask us to re-consider the matter of the abatement in the light of the further affidavits since filed.

In my opinion this contention cannot be accepted and the order, dated 6th February 1913, is final subject only to review. Order XXII, rule 9 (2), Civil Procedure Code, does not require the issue of notice: and it cannot be said that on this account the order of a competent Bench of two Judges is illegal; or that the subject-matter of it can be re-considered by a different Bench. It is open to any party who conceives himself to be injuriously affected by the order to apply for a review under Order XLVII: but no such application has been made in the present case, and we must, therefore, treat the order as final.

This view appears to me to be strictly in accord with that taken in two of the cases quoted to us [Tekait Ajant Singh v. Sundar Mall (3) and Ganeshwar Singh v. Ganesh Das (4)]. In the remaining case, which is reported as Tripura Sundari Debi v. Dakshina Mohun Roy (2), an ex parte order of a single Judge bringing a legal representative on record was held not to preclude the Bench before which the appeal came for disposal from considering the question of whether the application was within time and if not whether the abatement should be set aside. That case is, however, easily distinguishable. Apart from the fact that it was not an order setting aside an abatement and was passed by a single Judge, there is the important distinction that it appears to have been passed in ignorance of the fact that the application for substitution of the legal representative was made after the prescribed time and that the appeal was liable to be abated, that is to say the question which the Bench was asked to decide had not been considered before at all.

In my opinion the preliminary objection must be set aside, and the appeal disposed of on its merits.

MURUGA CHETTY v. RAJASWAMY.

TYABJI, J.—A preliminary objection is taken before us that the appeal must be taken to have abated as against the original 2nd defendant, or rather that the setting aside of the abatement, to which I shall presently refer, was invalid, or otherwise of no effect as against the present 2nd defendant.

The 2nd defendant (Veerappa Ganana Desikaswamigal) died in June 1911. The appeal against him, therefore, abated in December 1911. An application was made to the High Court on behalf of the appellants for setting aside the abatement and for causing the legal representative of the deceased to be made a party to the proceedings, on the 16th of December 1912. The application was supported by an affidavit in which it was stated that the applicant did not know of the death of the 2nd defendant till October 1912. It was heard by a Bench of the High Court consisting of Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ. We are informed by the learned Pleader for the appellants that an explanation of the delay between October 1912 and the 16th of December 1912 was asked, and that, on certain letters being read to the Court, the explanation was accepted; and on the 6th of February 1913, it was ordered "that the abatement be set aside and that the name of Annamalai-swami be entered in the record of the second appeal and in the register of this Court as the legal representative of Veerappa Ganana Desikaswamigal, the said deceased 2nd respondent in Second Appeal No. 1045 of 1907."

It is argued on behalf of the legal representative of the 2nd defendant that, as a matter of fact, there was no sufficient cause within the meaning of Order XX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, preventing the appellant from continuing the appeal and that, therefore, the order setting aside the abatement was wrongly made and that we should now consider the appeal as having abated. It is said that we have power to cancel or otherwise to disregard the order setting aside the abatement, because that order was made to the prejudice of the 2nd defendant in proceedings to which he was not a party. The order is said to be wrongly made, because from the affidavit filed by the appellants it is clear that there was a delay of about two months, for which it is argued that no proper explanation is forthcoming, and because, even if there was any sufficient cause preventing one of the appellants, there was none as regards the other.

Order XXII, rule 9 is imperative in this sense that, provided that "it is proved that he (the applicant) was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit", there is no option left to the Court, for it is laid down that in that event "the Court shall set aside the abatement." There is no appeal from an order setting aside the abatement, though there is one from refusal to do so: Order XLIII, rule 1 (k); nor can we in this case assume to ourselves the powers which a Court of Appeal may have under the ruling of Kichilappa Nuickar v. Ramanujam Pillai (1). It, therefore, remains to consider whether we have inherent jurisdiction to reconsider the question whether the abatement should have been set aside on the 27th of February 1913. It is argued that we have this jurisdiction because the respondent's rights have been prejudiced by the order setting aside the abatement and the argument was supported by the following words which were used by the Privy Council in Ganeshwar Singh v. Ganesh Das (4):—

"Their Lordships entirely agree with the learned Judges of the High Court that it is an elementary principle, which is binding on all persons, who exercise judicial or quasi-judicial powers, that an order should not be made against a man's interest without there being given to him an opportunity of being heard."

In that case the question was whether the plaintiff could obtain possession of certain property from the defendant and this depended upon whether an execution sale was rightly set aside by the Commissioner of Patna, and whether the absence of the purchaser at the time when the order setting it aside was made was sufficient to invalidate that order as against the purchaser. Their Lordships' after making the remark cited by me, say:—

"But, however this may be, it seems to their Lordships that the proper remedy of the purchaser, if aggrieved by this order having been made in his absence, was to apply to the Revenue Authorities for a re-hearing, and that it is now too late to ask for a remand on that ground."

This is, in effect, a re-statement of the penultimate paragraph of the judgment of Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ., whose judgment was under appeal. They are reported to have said in Gunessar Singh v. Gonesh Das (5):—

"A similar reasoning would prevent our entertaining any objection to the Commissioner's order on the ground that he had not heard the purchaser. If the purchaser was aggrieved on this account, there is no doubt that he could have found an appropriate remedy in the procedure of the Revenue Court; but whether that be so or not, we cannot treat as invalid an order made by the Tribunal to which the Legislature has entrusted the power of making such order. We have no power to enquire into the circumstances under which the order was made or into the propriety of the order."

It is, therefore, clear that their Lordships of the Privy Council approved of the decision of the High Court that the High Court had no power to "treat as invalid an order made by the Tribunal to which the Legislature has entrusted the power of making that order"; and this notwithstanding that that Tribunal, in making the order in question, had in the opinion of the High Court "violated an elementary principle which is binding on all persons who exercise judicial or quasi-judicial powers".

It cannot be questioned in the case now before us that the order setting aside the abatement was made by the Tribunal empowered to make it; and, even if it is permissible to us to assume, for the purposes of argument, that on the materials then before the Court, the order ought not to have been made, it cannot be contended that there was any irregularity vitiating the proceedings; for it is admitted that the application under Order XXII, rule 9, may be made ex parte, and that in the usual course it would be made ex parte.

There is, it is obvious, one distinction between the case just cited and the present one. In that case, the order sought to be set aside was that of a Revenue Court. Here it is an order of the High Court in these very proceedings. But, sitting in the Court in which we do, we have no power to interfere with the order passed by Benson and Sandara Aiyar, JJ., and there have been no proceedings for getting a review of that order. Indeed when it is considered how inapplicable any method of procedure either of review or of appeal would be for interference by us with the order in question, it seems to me to be clear that the Legislature intended such an order to be final so far as this Court is concerned.

I must now refer to two decisions on which reliance was placed. The first is Tripura Sundari Debi v. Dakshina Mohun Roy (2). In that case there never was any order setting aside the abatement. The legal representative of the 4th defendant Tripura, who was the appellant, applied to be put on record when six months had elapsed after the death of the deceased appellant, and was put on record without the abatement having been set aside; nor was the attention of the Judge called to the fact that the appeal had abated when the appellant's representative was put on the record. Then, at the hearing of the appeal, for the first time the question was considered whether the abatement that had taken place on the expiry of the six months should be set aside. The Court permitted affidavits and counter-affidavits to be filed, considered them, and came to the conclusion that there was no reason why the abatement should be set aside. The case is no doubt authority for the proposition that, if after the appeal has abated the legal representative is wrongly brought on the record without the abatement being set aside, then the question whether or not the abatement should be set aside has still to be considered by the Court to whose notice that fact is brought for the first time. It has no bearing, as it appears to me, on the point whether we have power to set aside or disregard the setting aside of the abatement in the present case.

The other case relied upon before us is that of Tekait Ajant Singh v. Sundur Mall (1). That case seems to be distinguishable in this respect that there the question which the Subordinate Judge had to consider was one necessarily affecting the merits of the subject-matter of the suit; it affected the original plaintiff because he was made a pro forma defendant instead of plaintiff, on the ground that he had assigned his rights to the applicant, and that the rights on the basis of which he had come to the Court were no more vested in him; it affected the defendants because the scope of the suit was enlarged so as to include the rights not only of the original plaintiff, but also of a stranger to the suit whose assignee the applicant claimed to be. It was admitted there that the further hearing of the suit on the merits could not proceed without those questions being determined; but the Subordinate Judge thought that a fresh suit was necessary for their determination.

In the appeal now before us the question whether the order setting aside the abatement was made rightly or wrongly will not affect the merits of the appeal in any way. The question depends merely upon whether the appellant was prevented by sufficient cause from making his application earlier. The causes preventing the appellant from making the application were quite independent of and did not affect the rights of the deceased respondent and his legal representative.

My conclusion is, therefore, that the order of Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., setting aside the abatement was made by a Court perfectly competent to do so; that we have no power to question the correctness of that decision and that without doing so we cannot now consider that the appeal has abated.

It is unnecessary in this view to consider the other points argued by Mr. Rangachariar, and to determine whether the successor-in-office of the 2nd defendant is his legal representative within the terms of the Civil Procedure Code, section 2 (11), and whether Article 177 or Article 181 of the Limitation Act was applicable.

I agree for these reasons that the appeal must proceed on the basis that its abatement has been set aside.

[The appeal was then heard on the merits].

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellants:—The District Judge has decided the case only on the ground of limitation mistakenly treating the suit as one in ejectment. He has not considered the other points raised in the case and decided in the Court of first instance. Nor has he found when the possession became adverse. His judgment cannot be supported.

Mr. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyangar (with him Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar), for the Respondents argued contra:

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the properties referred to in the plaint are trust properties, for the removal of certain buildings erected on the land and for delivery possession of the land to the plaintiffs on behalf of the community, to which the plaintiffs allege that they and the defendants Nos. 4 to 27 belong. The claim was resisted on several grounds which seem to have been sufficiently raised in the issues framed in the suit.

The District Munsif somewhat reluctantly recorded findings on all the issues. He felt himself constrained to do so by the state of the pleadings. The District Judge has not considered all the issues. He seems to have overlooked the fact that the suit was not one merely for ejectment as he states in the beginning of his judgment. The pleadings in the suit are by no means perfect. But it seems that the real points on which the parties were at issue were, whether the property was private property or was to be held in trust for the community of the plaintiffs; and secondly, whether the rights of the community (if any) had been lost by a valid gift, or by adverse possession or by purchase in good faith for consideration without notice of the trust. As a subsidiary point it may also have had to be decided whether though the community may have the rights that they claim, they can now, on the facts as stated in the plaint, ask for immediate possession of the land. The subsidiary point does not affect the question whether the plaintiffs can claim the declaration above referred to. But we wish to record that the plaintiffs by their Pleader had to concede at the hearing that the last sentence of paragraph 2 of the District Judge's judgment cannot be attacked by the plaintiffs. That sentence is as follows:—

"On the plaint allegations the suit for ejectment is clearly not sustainable, for 1st defendant has not left Chidambaram and he is certainly not dead".

The District Judge has ultimately decided the case apparently on the sole ground that the suit is barred by limitation. He seems to have misunderstood the nature of the suit which he has treated as one for ejectment only, overlooking the other points on which the parties were really at issue. His finding on the question of limitation cannot, therefore, be accepted. For the purpose of his finding on the question of limitation he seems to have assumed that the community was originally the owner of the land. In that case, if persons purporting to act as trustees on behalf of the community, and allowed so to act by the community, give possession of the land to a third person, that person's possession cannot initially be adverse to the community. The question that has to be decided in such a case is whether the possession which was originally permissive ever became adverse and, if so, at what time and whether it continued adverse for the period required either for creating rights under section 28 of the Indian Limitation Act or for preventing under Article 142 or Article 144 of the first Schedule to that Act the rightful owner from asserting his rights by suit.

On the points which arise, therefore, the District Judge has not expressed any opinion. We must consequently ask the District Judge to record findings on all the issues in the case on the evidence on record. We have felt it necessary to indicate why we consider it desirable to ask for findings, but in so far as our remarks proceed on assumptions of fact we do not wish to restrict the District Judge in his consideration of the evidence. The plaintiffs will, however, be bound by the concession which their Pleader was forced to make and there cannot in any case be a decree for immediate possession.

The findings should be submitted within six weeks from this date and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

[In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of South Arcot submitted a finding on all points in favour of the plaintiffs, except that he found that the plaintiffs could not maintain the suit as they had not asked for the appointment of trustees as a consequential relief.]

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the 3rd Respondent:—The claim for a declaration is barred under Article 120, Limitation Act, as the cause of action therefor arose in 1893, on the date of sale.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the 7th Appellant:—There is no question of limitation, as there is no evidence to show that the 7th appellant was aware of the sale within six years of suit. The cause of action arose only when this appellant had knowledge of the denial of title. Thirumala Rao v. Kadekar Durgi Shettethi (6).

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, in reply:—Want of knowledge on the part of the 7th appellant is not sufficient. Other members of the community were aware of the sale and their knowledge was enough to bar the right of the community. Further, declaration being only a discretionary relief, this was a case in which it ought to be refused.

JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings. The 1st appellant states that he does not press the appeal. The 7th appellant, however, claims that on the findings accepted by us, there ought to be a declaration that the properties referred to in the plaint are trust properties belonging to the Vedamba Chetty community, subject to the right of the 1st defendant to be in possession thereof so long as he lives in Chidambaram.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the 3rd defendant, argues that the claim for a declaration is barred under Article 120 of the Limitation Act as it accrued at the date of the sale in 1893. The 7th plaintiff denies that he had any knowledge of this sale-deed within six years of the date of the suit. Following Thirumala Rao v. Kadekar Durgi Shettethi (6), to which one of us was a party, we hold that the cause of action for a declaratory suit based on a denial of title does not arise until the plaintiff has knowledge of the denial. Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar argues, however, that some of the members of the community had knowledge at the date of the sale-deed, as they were parties to it. In our opinion, the knowledge of some of the members cannot affect the right of the others.

It is then argued that in our discretion we ought not to make the declaration. When the majority of the co-owners are proved to have had knowledge of the denial of title, it may, no doubt, be a reason for declining to grant a declaration in favour of one of the other co-owners who asserts that he had no knowledge. In the present case, however, it seems to us that it is necessary for the declaration to be made, as otherwise the whole of this litigation will have been fruitless, though the defendant set up a false deed of gift and a collusive sale. The plaintiffs, however, claimed to be entitled to possession to which they were not entitled. We think, therefore, that the declaration should be given but without costs. Each party will bear his costs throughout.

Where the mortgagee of the stock in trade of a shop, who took possession of the stock and who received the incomings and paid the outgoings of the business carried on by the mortgagors, was sued by the landlord of the shop-premises for rent:

Held, that the mortgagee could not be held liable for any rent of the premises since there was no contract between the landlord and the mortgagee regarding payment of rent and since the mortgage being of goods only and not of the lease or tenancy of the rooms, the mortgagee did not acquire any interest in the rooms.

Petition against the judgment and decree of the Judge of Small Cause Court, Rangoon, dated the 10th December 1914, in Civil Suit No. 6545 of 19 4.

Mr. J. R. Das, for the Applicant.

Mr. Doctor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was for rent of two rooms, which the plaintiff had let to the 1st and 2nd defendants in which they carried on trade. They mortgaged their stock in trade to the 3rd defendant who took possession of it. The mortgagors continued to carry on the business, but the 3rd defendant-mortgagee received the incomings and paid outgoings.

The plaintiff sued him as well as the 1st and 2nd defendants for the rent of the rooms and a decree has been given against all three defendants. The 3rd defendant (mortgagee) applies for revision on the ground that the decree as against him is contrary to law.

This is the case. The mortgage was of the goods only and not of the lease or tenancy of the rooms. There was no contract between the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant for him to pay the rent, and the latter did not acquire any interest in the rooms. He was not a transferee of any interest in immoveable property and the cases referred to by the learned Judge did not apply. The law applicable was that stated in Madhub-money Dassee v. Nando Lall Gupta (1)

The decree against the 3rd defendant is set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs as against him only.

The plaintiff must pay the 3rd defendant's costs of this application, two gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fees.

DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 251, 263—Partnership—Dissolution—One partner authorised to collect outstandings and pay debts—Extent of authority, whether includes power to acknowledge debts—Acknowledgment.

In the absence of express evidence of authority, an acknowledgment of a partnership debt by an ex-partner, after the dissolution of partnership, is not binding on any ex-partner other than the one making it. Where, however, an ex-partner is authorised to collect the outstandings and pay all the debts of the partnership, such authority includes the lesser power of acknowledging debts. [p. 676, col. 2; p. 678, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad in Appeal Suit No. 527 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Satur in Original Suit No. 1308 of 1911.

FACTS.—A partnership, consisting of two individuals (the 1st and 2nd defendants), was dissolved in 1906. As the assets and liabilities could not be divided then and there, one of the ex-partners (1st defendant) was authorised by the other (the 2nd defendant) to collect the outstandings and pay all the debts. On 27th May 1909 the 1st defendant acknowledged a debt due by the partnership in favour of the plaintiffs. The present dispute is whether such acknowledgment by the 1st defendant is binding on the 2nd defendant.

MUTHUSWAMI NADAN v. SANKARALINGAM CHETTY.

This second appeal first came on for hearing before Ayling and Hannay, JJ.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rau, for the Appellants:—The acknowledgment is binding on the 2nd defendant, because it was made in the course of winding-up of the partnership. The evidence of the 2nd defendant himself shows that the 1st defendant was authorised to acknowledge the debt (evidence referred to). The authority to adjust an account of business, necessarily implies one to acknowledge a debt. See Story on Agency, paragraph 138, and Kondamodalu Linga Reddi v. Alluri Sarvarayudu (1).

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and P. S. Vaidyanatha Aiyar, for the Respondent:—Even in the case of going concerns, an express authority to acknowledge liability is required. See Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (2) and Sheik Mohideen Sahib v. Official Assignee of Madras (3). A fortiori, in the case of a dissolved partnership express authorisation is essential. The evidence pointed out by the other side does not show any such authorisation. The 2nd defendant expressly says that he did not so authorise. The Subordinate Judge has found that there was no express authority. The acknowledgment is, therefore, not binding on the 2nd defendant.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rau, in reply:—Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (2) and Sheikh Mohideen Sahib v. Official Assignee of Madras (3) are doubted in K. R. V. Firm v. Sathayavada Sitharama Swami (4).

This second appeal coming on for hearing the 8th of September 1914, and having stood over for consideration till the 16th September 1914, the Court (Ayling and Hannay, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision in this appeal is, whether the acknowledgment of liability by the 1st defendant on 27th May 1909 is binding on the 2nd defendant. The original liability was admittedly incurred on account of a partnership between the 1st and the 2nd defendants; but this partnership had ceased in 1906. It has been held in two cases in this Court, Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (2) and Sheik Mohideen Sahib v. Official Assignee of Madras (3), that a part-payment or acknowledgment by one partner of a going concern will not bind another partner (so as to save limitation) in the absence of evidence of authorisation. Mere proof of the partnership would not be sufficient. In a more recent case, K. R. V. Firm v. Sathayavada Sitharama Swami (4), Wallis, J., expresses doubts of the correctness of these rulings, and appears to hold that authorisation might be presumed from the ordinary course of partnership business. But, however this may be, such a presumption could hardly be drawn in the case of an acknowledgment made after the dissolution of partnership. In such a case, it seems to us clear that express evidence of authority must be forthcoming, if the acknowledgment is to be held binding on any ex-partner, except the one who made it. The presumption which Wallis, J., would draw in the case of existing partnerships could not be applied to a case like the present.

It was argued before us that such evidence was forthcoming in the deposition of the 2nd defendant himself. This runs as follows:—

"After we separated, I did not authorise the 1st defendant to sign promissory notes for settlement of accounts on behalf of me also....."

"Cross-examination:—.....The 1st defendant said that the assets and liabilities could not be divided then and there, that he would himself collect outstandings and pay off liabilities and that we may divide the balance. I agreed to this....."

"Re-examination:—.....I then allowed the 1st defendant to collect outstandings and pay off creditors but did not authorise him to renew liabilities."

Regarding this evidence, the Subordinate Judge simply remarks that no authorisation to acknowledge debts is to be found in it. We must understand him to mean that although he does not disbelieve the evidence in so far as it favours the plaintiffs (which he could hardly do, seeing it is that of the 2nd defendant himself), he does not find anything in it which, if accepted, would amount to an authority to acknowledge liability. The appellants' Vakil argues that he has overlooked the principle enunciated in Story on Agency, paragraph 138, and quoted with approval in Kondamodali Linga Reddi v. Alluri Sarvarayudu (1), that "where an agent is authorised to pay money for work done for his principal, or where he is referred to, to settle and adjust any account or business, his admissions of the existence of the debt, and of its validity, will be sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations."

We do not think the Subordinate Judge has weighed the evidence from this point of view and we feel constrained to call for a finding on the following

Issue :—

"Was the 1st defendant expressly or impliedly authorised by the 2nd defendant at the time of dissolution of partnership, or afterwards, to acknowledge liability for the outstanding debts of the firm?"

The findings should be submitted within six weeks from this date and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad submitted the following

FINDING.—In this appeal I am called upon to submit a finding upon the following issue :—

"Was the 1st defendant expressly or impliedly authorised by the 2nd defendant at the time of the dissolution of partnership, or afterwards, to acknowledge liability for the outstanding debts of the firm?"

2. The burden of proving this issue lies on plaintiffs, and the only evidence upon which reliance is placed is that of 2nd defendant. In the judgment of the High Court in which a finding is called for, it is stated that in the case of an acknowledgment made by one partner after dissolution of partnership, "express evidence of authority must be forthcoming, if the acknowledgment is to be held binding on any ex-partner, except the one who made it." Reading the evidence of the 2nd defendant, I do not find in it any express authority given by him to first defendant to acknowledge debts. In his examination-in-chief he clearly says that he did not authorise the 1st defendant to sign pro-notes or settlement of accounts on behalf of him also. In cross-examination, he says that he agreed to 1st defendant's proposal to collect outstandings and pay off liabilities. Even here he does not appear to have been asked, and certainly does not say, that 1st defendant wanted authority to acknowledge debts and that he agreed to his doing so. And in re-examination he expressly says that he did not authorise him to renew liabilities.

3. There is, therefore, to use the words of their Lordships found in the judgment calling for a finding, no "express evidence of authority."

4. I am called upon to weigh the evidence from the point of view laid down in the following passage: "Where an agent is authorised to pay money for work done for his principal or where he is referred to to settle and adjust any account or business, his admissions of the existence of the debt, and of its validity, will be sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitation."

5. I understand this passage to mean that authority to settle and adjust any account or business implies an authority to acknowledge debts. Even if such be the case, such an authority cannot be implied from 2nd defendant's statement in cross-examination to the effect that he agreed to 1st defendant's proposal that he should "himself collect outstandings and pay off liabilities." The 2nd defendant never agreed to 1st defendant settling and adjusting any account or business; he simply agreed to his collecting outstandings and paying off liabilities. And from an authority to collect outstandings and pay off liabilities, a power to acknowledge liabilities cannot be implied. It may be otherwise if a general power to settle and adjust a business is given, but such is not the case here. I may also state that no case of agency was set out in the plaint, and that 2nd defendant was sought to be bound by 1st defendant's acknowledgment, as they were partners.

6. That 2nd defendant would not have given 1st defendant a general authority to settle and adjust accounts is apparent from the fact that under the award, Exhibit II, both the partners are to collect the outstandings and pay off the debts.

7. I, therefore, find the issue in the negative.

[The second appeal came on for final hearing after the return of the finding on 5th August 1915.]

HOE HIN v. BALTHAZAR.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rau, for the Appellants:—The Subordinate Judge has misunderstood the order calling for the finding. The authority to collect outstandings and pay debts does really include one to acknowledge debts. See Kondamodalu Linga Reddi v. Alluri Sarvarayudu (1) and Story on Agency, paragraph 138. Further, he does not reject the evidence of the 2nd defendant. The finding cannot, therefore, be supported.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and P. S. Vaidyanatha Aiyar, for the Respondent:—The Subordinate Judge has found that the authority to pay debts is limited to the amount actually collected.

JUDGMENT.—We cannot accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge, who does not appear to have properly appreciated the remarks in our order calling for it.

He does not reject the evidence to the effect that the 1st defendant was authorised to pay outstanding debts of the firm: and we can find no support for Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar's suggestion that he found this authority to be limited by the amount of collections. There is nothing to indicate that this aggregate of debts paid and acknowledged exceeded the aggregate of collections of assets.

We must, therefore, take it as proved that the 1st defendant was authorised to pay all debts; and from this, the lesser power of acknowledging debts is to be inferred.

We modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by declaring the 2nd defendant also liable for the decree amount. The 2nd defendant will bear the plaintiffs' (appellants') costs in this second appeal.

Decree modified.

Mr. Bagram, for the Applicant.

Mr. Gregory, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The objection that the Receivers could not sue without the leave of the Court must, I think, prevail. The order appointing Mr. S. Balthazar Receiver merely appointed him Receiver and did not specify any power for him. It cannot be assumed by implication that he was appointed with all the powers allowed by Order XL, rule 1. The order appointing Mr. M. Joachim and Mr. B. C. Balthazar to act jointly with Mr. S. Balthazar is to the same effect as the order appointing the latter. The order, therefore, gives no specific power to any of the respondents to sue. It could have done so as Order XL, rule 1 (1) (d), allows such power to be conferred on a Receiver. As regards the cases cited by the learned Small Cause Court Judge, that of Jugat Tarini Dasi v. Naba Gopal Chaki (1) was concerned with a Receiver appointed with full powers. In the other two cases quoted by him the Receiver was appointed to let and sell and exercise other powers.

Here he was given no powers at all except to receive.

The decree passed by the learned Judge is modified and instead thereof a decree for Rs. 66 is passed against applicant. As regards costs I order that respondents do pay applicant's costs in both Courts.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants:—The landlord is entitled to levy rent on a portion of the holding allowed to remain fallow. This right cannot be deprived by custom or contract. Vide section 4, Madras Estates Land Act, 1 of 1908.

JUDGMENT.—Two questions are common to most of these second appeals and they are:

(1) Whether the zemindar (appellant) is entitled to charge 12 fanams per kurukkam on dry lands as rent or only to 10 fanams?

(2) Whether he is entitled to levy rent on the dry area left waste without the tenant's negligence?

The first question has been decided as a question of fact by the District Judge and we can see no grounds for interference on second appeal with that finding, which has been based on a consideration of the whole evidence.

On the second question the appellant's learned Vakil (Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar) relied on section 4 of the Estates Land Act for his contention that neither custom nor contract could deprive the zemindar of his right to charge rent on the area left uncultivated. But the case reported as Segu Rowthen v. Alagappa Chetty (1) and the decisions in Second Appeals Nos. 1244 and 1245 of 1913 of this Court have held that agreements and customs entitling the tenants to claim non-liability for rent on the area left fallow can be successfully set up notwithstanding section 4 of the Estates Land Act.

In one of the second appeals before us the question is whether, when the plaint was directed against a dead man and the plaint was afterwards amended as a plaint against his living legal representative, the Court had jurisdiction to treat the suit as one brought against the legal representative and decide it on that footing. Veerappa Chetty v. Tindal Ponnem (2) is clear authority against the appellant and we follow it.

There are additional questions involved in those second appeals which have been filed against the decisions in Appeal Suits Nos. 128, 146, 158, 159 to 163 and 118 of 1914 on the file of the District Court. But those questions are questions of fact, namely, whether the tenants had raised second crops on their lands, whether certain lands are dry or wet, and what is the proper rate for plan-tain cultivation. They have all been decided on admissible evidence against the appellant.

We, therefore, dismiss the second appeals.

An application under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), for restitution is not in the nature of an application to execute any decree and, therefore, Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act applies to such an application. [p. 681, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Divisional Judge of Hanthawaddy, dated the 11th March 1914, in Civil Appeal No. 5 of 1914, confirming that of the Sub-Divisional Court of Kyauktan.

Mr. P. N. Chari, for the Applicant.

Mr. Munshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No. 55 of 1906 the respondent sued the applicants for specific performance of a contract to sell and for delivery of certain immoveable property.

His suit was dismissed, but the decree was reversed in first appeal and plaintiff-respondent went into possession. The applicant then appealed to the Chief Court with the result that the original decree was restored.

This was on the 12th December 1907.

On 31st January 1910, applicant filed an application for execution of his decree as regards costs and on 22nd January 1912 filed a suit for mesne profits enjoyed by the respondent while in possession.

This was dismissed by virtue of section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and he then on 7th April 1913 applied under the same section for an order granting the same relief.

The question is, whether this application is an application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in Schedule I of the Limitation Act and falls under Article 181 of that Schedule in which case it would admittedly be barred, or whether it is an application for the execution of a decree within the meaning of Article 182 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act in which case the prior application for execution would admittedly save it.

Various cases were cited by Counsel on the point, which was a vexed one even under section 583 of the old Code, but this is an application under section 144 of the present Code, and the alterations introduced by the Legislature have been so great that unless we are to consider them meaningless and objectless which is impossible, cf., Ram Kanai Ghosh v. Raja Sri Sri Hari Narayan Singh (1). These older authorities are only useful as pointing out the divergencies of opinion, to put an end to which it may be assumed was one of the reasons for the change of language. In the first place the position of the section is altered. In the old Code the section relating to these applications found place in Chapter XLI, which deals with appeals from original decrees. Its corresponding place in the new Code should, therefore, have been in Part VII, but as a matter of fact it is placed in Part XI which deals with miscellaneous matters. Its connection, therefore, with the reversing decree is not so obviously close as it was under the former Code, and in proportion as its connection weakens or vanishes, the argument that it is an execution of that decree weakens or falls. Then, too, section 583 of the old Code was the section that provided how Appellate Court decrees should be executed. Now we have sections 37 and 38 providing how appellate decrees are to be executed and placed within the appropriate Chapter dealing with execution. There is not a word about execution in section 144, all reference is studiously omitted. Section 583 dealt chiefly with execution and referred to persons entitled "under a decree" to any benefit—words that seem to me to lend colour to the argument that the section only applied when the relief applied for was expressly granted by the decree. In the new section those words are also studiously omitted. The changes cannot, in my opinion, have been unintentional and the combined result, I think, is that where, as here, the decree does not expressly order restitution or other relief, but such is the necessary sequela of the decree, any person entitled—no longer a party only—as under the former Code may make a miscellaneous application on which the Court may pass such orders as it may think fit, and that this is not an application to execute the decree.

The present application would, therefore, fall under Article 181 of the Schedule of Limitation Act and be out of time. Consequently the appeal is dismissed. I make no order as to costs.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of IMAM, J.—This is an application by a firm of merchants, Bridhichand Kesrichand, asking the Court to set aside on the ground of misconduct an award, dated the 29th August 1914, purporting to have been made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, or to speak more accurately by arbitrators nominated by the Chamber. The respondents are also merchants carrying on business under the name and style of Chaitram Rambilas.

On the 2nd October 1913 by a contract bearing No. 1/121, the petitioners agreed to sell, and the respondents agreed to purchase, 500 bales of Damukdia Jute weighing $3\frac{1}{2}$ maunds each (or $1\frac{1}{2}$ maunds optional) guaranteed to yield after cutting 40 per cent. good sacking warp, shipment within one month from date, at 12 per maund delivered at the ghat of the buyers' mills. The contract provided an arbitration clause that runs thus:—

"Any dispute arising out of this contract shall be referred to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, whose decision shall be accepted as final and binding on both parties to this contract."

On the 11th and 13th October 1913 in fulfilment of the contract the petitioners delivered to the respondents 1,200 half bales in two lots of 551 and 649 at the Central Jute Mills and received 90 per cent. of the price in cash. Thereafter a dispute arose between the parties as to the quality of the jute supplied. In April 1914 the respondents under the arbitration clause of the contract referred the dispute to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. The reference having been made, the Registrar of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Tribunal of Arbitration called upon the petitioners to submit a statement of their case. After some correspondence that passed between the petitioners' Attorneys, Messrs. Pugh & Co., and the Registrar, the petitioners wrote a letter to the latter on the 4th May 1914 of which the portion material to the question before me runs thus:—"We regret to say with all respect to your Tribunal that this matter should be heard by Court, as the matter involves point of law and is one in which evidence has to be taken. The jute in question was sold by us under the above contract as 40 warp, but we are informed that the same was sold and delivered as 60 warp to Messrs. Andrew Yule & Co." In reply to that letter the Registrar on the 13th May 1914 wrote to the petitioners that the dispute must proceed to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the contract. On the 14th May 1914 the petitioners proceeded to state their case, at the same time mentioning that they had no objection to put forward their claim before the Tribunal as long as evidence was taken which was, according to their contention, most necessary. The arbitrators appointed by the Chamber then proceeded to adjudicate upon the case. The petitioners' complaint is that the arbitrators refused to allow them to adduce evidence to establish their contentions and proceeded with the arbitration according to the Rules of the Tribunal of Arbitration established by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and not according to the law under the Indian Arbitration Act. The petitioners' contention is that the arbitration clause in the contract is merely an agreement to abide by the decision of the Chamber without accepting to be governed by the wide powers of that body as expressed in their rules. On behalf of the respondents the authority of Mr. Justice Harington's decision in Ganges Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. Indra Chand (1) is cited. In that case the contract provided a similar arbitration clause and that learned Judge dealing with it said :

"They chose to propose that their disputes should be disposed of by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. They chose this Association. It is one of the duties of this Association to dispose of such disputes by arbitration according to its rules. Having offered to be bound by decision of this Association, they cannot now be heard to say that they are not bound by the rules of the Tribunal of their choice."

While according to that decision all due weight and respect, I am not prepared to agree with it on this point. In the arbitration clause no mention of the rules has been made and no assent to be governed by any procedure that the Chamber might choose to adopt has been signified. The Rules of the Chamber empower the Tribunal to deal with a case unfettered as they think best, and no obligation has been cast upon them to examine witnesses, even if the parties wish it, or to conform to the ordinary methods of arbitration. Under the agreement the parties chose to have the Chamber to arbitrate on any dispute between them, but they nowhere said that they consented to the exercise of such a provision in the agreement. The Chamber cannot be credited with any higher powers than any other arbitrator. The decision of Mr. Justice Harington was cited before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in Nabin Chandra Saha v. Sinclair Murray & Co. (2) in support of a contention similar to the one pressed by the present respondents, and that learned Judge expressed his disagreement with the proposition. The refusal of the Tribunal to allow the petitioners to adduce evidence vitiates the award, and I accordingly set it aside. The respondents will pay the costs of this application.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Imam made apparently under section 4 of the Indian Arbitration Act. There was an arbitration followed by an award. But it is alleged that there was misconduct on the part of the arbitrators; and it is on the ground of this misconduct that the application was made to the Court and succeeded before the learned Judge. The misconduct suggested was the failure to hear evidence. Whether there was that failure or not is a matter in dispute.

But the way in which the case was presented to the learned Judge and in which he understood it appears from this passage in the judgment: "The petitioners' complaint is that the arbitrators refused to allow them to adduce evidence to establish their contentions and proceeded with the arbitration according to the Rules of the Tribunal of Arbitration established by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and not according to the law under the Indian Arbitration Act. The petitioners' contention is that the arbitration clause in the contract is merely an agreement to abide by the decision of the Chamber without accepting to be governed by the wide powers of that body as expressed in their rules." It is apparent, therefore, from this that it was admitted that the misconduct depended upon the alleged non-applicability of the rules governing an arbitration by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. I cannot attribute any other meaning to the words of the judgment which I have just quoted.

The first question, therefore, which we have to consider is whether these rules were imported into the contract. Even without the assistance of any authority it appears to me that these rules were imported into the contract, and that without such importation the contract would be insensible so far as it related to arbitration. For it would involve the ridiculous position that every member of the Chamber of Commerce would have to sit on the arbitration. So that on the contract itself I should have felt no doubt. But apart from that there is a very careful judgment of Mr. Justice Harington in Ganges Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. India Chand (1) delivered as far back as the 5th June 1906, where the contract was in the same terms as that with which we are now concerned. The learned Judge came to the conclusion which I have indicated as a correct view of the contract. That decision was certainly binding on the learned Judge, and according to my opinion should have been followed by him. It may not be binding on us in the strict sense. But I think it is entitled to every respect and it agrees with the view I entertain on the subject.

Therefore, it appears to me that on the basis on which this case was argued and conducted before Mr. Justice Imam there was no misconduct because the rules of the Chamber of Commerce were applicable.

It appears to us unnecessary to consider other matters. But I cannot refrain from pointing to the fact that the application, verified and supported in the way it is, forms a most unsatisfactory basis on which to claim relief under section 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act. It is so unsatisfactory that I do not think that there should be a remand.

In my opinion the appeal should be allowed and the application dismissed. The respondents should pay the costs of the hearing before Mr. Justice Imam and before this Court.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree that the appeal should be decreed. The fact that the Chamber of Commerce has framed rules for its arbitration is, I should have thought, well known to every trader in Calcutta, particularly to those accepting contracts stipulating for arbitration by the Chamber of Commerce. However this may be, I entirely agree with the judgment of Mr. Justice Harington in the case referred to by the Chief Justice that if a party to a contract has agreed to submit to an arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, he must be held to be bound by the rules of that Chamber.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice.

Madras City Municipalities Act (III of 1904), ss. 3 cl. (27), 248 (1)—Erection of sunshade overhanging drain—Drain, if part of "public street"—Powers of President.

Under the term, "public street" as defined in section 3 clause 27 of the Madras City Municipalities Act (III of 1904), the space covered by a drain is included and is vested in the Municipality even if it be private property. [p. 683, col. 2.]

Mothe Achayya Garu v. Municipal Council of Ellore, 4 Ind. Cas. 828; 7 M. L. T. 66; 19 M. L. J. 757, followed. Where a sunshade overhangs such drain, the President can, under section 248 (1) of the Act, treat it as a "projection" and remove it after notice to the owner. To exercise his powers under that section, it is not necessary for the President to prove that the sunshade interferes "with the repairing and proper management of the drain." [p. 684, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the City Civil Judge of Madras, in Original Suit No. 473 of 1911.

Mr. P. Doraiswami Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Ethiraja Mudaliar and Muhammad Ibrahim Sahib, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The finding of the lower Court that the plaintiff land (Exhibit DD) belongs to the plaintiff subject to certain rights in the Municipality, cannot and is not seriously attacked by the appellant's learned Vakil. Under the definition of "public street" in section 3, clause 27, of the Presidency Municipalities Act, the space covered by the drains is included in the public street vested in the Municipality. The sunshade of the plaintiff's house overhangs this drain space forming part of the public street. Section 248 (1) of the Act empowers the President to give notice to the owner of any building "to remove any projection made against or in front of such building in any public street." Assuming without deciding the phrase "in any public street" in the section qualifies the word "building" and not the word "projection" [see Mothe Achayya Garu v. Municipal Council of Ellore (1)], we think that the word projection" itself and the context imply that the thing which is indicated by that word must project into or over the space covered by the public street. The sunshade in question admittedly does project over the drain space and hence it is a "projection" which the President is entitled to remove after notice. We are unable to accept the view of the learned City Civil Judge that if the sunshade does not interfere with "the repairing and proper management of the" drain, the President is not empowered to have it removed. The words of section 248 (1) do not fetter the President's powers in this respect and only require that the thing ordered to be removed should be a "projection" as construed above.

We, therefore, modify the decree of the learned City Civil Judge by directing the deletion of the following words from that decree, (a) from the words "either to direct" up to "plan or", (b) the words "or the sunshade" and (c) the paragraph beginning "and it is ordered and decreed". The parties will bear their respective costs in this appeal.

Appeal partly allowed. Decree modified.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 104 (h), 42, 145, 47—Surety—Arrest—Appeal.

A decree of a Small Cause Court was sent for execution to the Court of a Munsif. In execution of that decree the judgment-debtor was arrested and detained in the civil prison, but he was released on the petitioner standing his surety. On his failure, however, to satisfy the condition of his release, the petitioner, his surety, was arrested in execution of the decree and directed to be detained in the civil prison. The petitioner's appeal was rejected by the District Judge as forbidden by section 104, clause (h), Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that although an order directing the arrest of a person in execution was excepted from appeal by clause (h) of section 104, Civil Procedure Code, sections 42, 47 and 145 of the Code gave the petitioner a right of appeal. [p. 684, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE J.—The first question which we have to decide in this case is whether or not there was an appeal from the Munsif to the District Judge. The latter has held that there is not.

We cannot go into the merits of this case as all the facts are not before us. Therefore, I limit my observations to the question whether the applicant was entitled to be heard before the District Judge.

I think he has made out his right of appeal to the District Judge, because although section 104¹ clause (h), excepts from appeal an order directing the arrest of a person in execution of a decree, we must also look at the other sections of the Code. Under section 42, the Court executing a decree sent to it has the same power in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself, and the order in executing such decree is subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself. In the present case, the decree of the Small Cause Court was sent for execution to the Court of the Munsif. Now there would have been an appeal from the order of the Munsif. Then, according to section 42, there would be an appeal from his order as a Court executing a decree. Further, under the provisions of section 145 of the Code, a surety is for the purposes of appeal to be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47 and an order under section 47 is an appealable decree.

Therefore, I think that the Rule must be made absolute, in so far as the order of the District Judge refusing to hear the appeal is hereby set aside, and the matter must be re-heard by him.

Pending the hearing of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court the petitioner will

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—In this case, both the lower Courts after careful consideration have construed the gift-deed, Exhibit I, as conveying to the donee (the wife of the donor) only a limited interest in the property. I do not feel justified in coming to a different conclusion. The general rule of construction is undoubtedly in favour of the view of the learned Subordinate Judge. As Mr. Mayne puts it, "gifts by a husband to a wife of immoveable property, even though accompanied by express words of inheritance, are not alienable unless distinctly declared to be so." In this case, there is no specific provision for alienation, and the special clause relied on by the appellants is simply the words 'sarva swathanthrathudan'; and I am not satisfied that they are sufficiently clear and specific to outweigh the usual presumption and present the donee with a full title. I have considered the numerous reported cases quoted by both sides in which various documents of different wording have been interpreted by Courts. The only case in which this phrase occurs is an unreported case, Appeal No. 26 of 1896, in which they were re-inforced by another clause, "without any one else having any right to the property." The learned Judges also commented on the improbability of the testator employing so much verbiage to confer no larger an estate than would have come to the beneficiary if he had died intestate. I do not think the interpretation of the words in that case is of much help now.

I would dismiss this second appeal with costs.

TYABJI, J.—The ordinary rule of law is that "unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property, and in the legal incidents thereof." (Section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, paragraph 1. See also section 82 of the Indian Succession Act.) The authorities are clear that ordinarily a gift to a Hindu lady implies a different intention, viz., that the lady takes not a full estate with power of alienation, etc., but merely a woman's limited estate, and so when all that appears is that there is a transfer and it is in favour of a Hindu lady, she takes a limited estate. When, however, there are words showing that a larger estate was intended to be given, that intention is given effect to.

There are numerous cases in which similar points have come up for decision. Thus where the power to adopt was given and where together with immoveable property moveable property was also given and the rights to the latter were expressly limited, the limitation has been attached to the immoveable property also [Koongbehari Dhur v. Premchand Dutt (1) and Seshayya v. v. Narasamma (2)]: similarly, where the wife and adopted son are jointly given the property [Bhujanga Rau v. Ramayamma (3)], without express words that the wife has powers of alienation, etc. [Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (4)].

On the other hand, when the word "malik" which means (full) owner was used, the Privy Council held that that implied that the full estate was intended to be conveyed and was sufficient to displace the inference from the ordinary wishes of a Hindu. The strongest case in favour of the respondent cited to us seems to me to be Harilal Pramlal v. Bai Rewa (5). There the Judges were very doubtful, the words being: "Just as I am the owner of the property at present, in the same way after my death my wife Ujam is the owner," but the decision proceeded at least in part on the fact that the other circumstances made those words ambiguous, and in the lower Courts all that was suggested that they meant was that the wife was to be kept in joint possession, and not that the wife took the full interest. The Court did not consider itself justified in reversing the decision of the lower Courts. In the present case, we have the express words "you and your heirs (offspring) should enjoy the lands with all rights." The operative part of the deed is very short: "As I have married you, I have given you this day as a matter of favour all the dry and wet lands belonging to me and worth Rs. 400. You must yourself pay the principal and interest on the mortgage deed for Rs. 100 in respect thereof executed by me in favour of Unniyur Veerappa Udayan and you and your heirs should enjoy the lands with all rights." I see great difficulty in interpreting the reference to the offspring and to the enjoyment and to "all rights" if the donee is to have only the limited right of a Hindu female, as has been held by the lower Courts.

I find, however, that both the lower Courts presided over by Hindu Judges have in very careful judgments arrived at a conclusion different from that which I am inclined to take and my learned brother also agrees with their view. I am, therefore, not prepared to hold that that conclusion is wrong and with some hesitation I agree that the second appeal be dismissed with costs.

interest in a moiety of premises known as No. 63, Dhurumtolla Street, which the plaintiff claims to have bought in execution of a mortgage-decree in Suit No. 527 of 1908. The suit has been dismissed by Imam, J., and from his judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

The decision of this suit depends upon whether or not this property has been validly dedicated as wakf or not. If it has, then the suit must fail. The dedication is said to have been effected by a document of the 16th July 1864. It is in the form of an English indenture and is engrossed to be a conveyance to Fatima Begum and Fyezuddin, their heirs, representatives and assigns, of the entirety of the premises now in suit, upon trust that they, the said Fatima Begum and Fyezuddin, their heirs or representatives or other trustees or trustee for the time being should, from time to time, demise the said hereditaments and premises to such persons or person on such terms and at such rent as they should think fit, and should from time to time appoint such person or persons to act as sircars or a sircar in the collection of the said rents as they should think fit with full power to discharge such sircars or sircar and to appoint others or another in his place, and should apply the rents and profits of the said hereditaments and premises, first, in payment of the expenses of the collections of the said rents and profits and of the management of the salary of the said sircars or sircar and otherwise and of the execution of the trust and next, in payment of the expenses of the repairs of the said hereditaments and premises and should apply the surplus of the said rents and profits after making the payments aforesaid in the due and proper observance of the annual Muhammadan festival of the Muhurrum. Fatima Begum is the defendant of that name. Fyezuddin is dead, and the other defendants are his representatives. On the 20th of October 1907, Fatima Begum executed a document by which there was expressed to be mortgaged to the plaintiff the half share now in suit, it being recited that she was absolutely seized and possessed of or otherwise well entitled to that half share. It was on the basis of this mortgage that the decree was passed, in execution of which the plaintiff claims to have purchased this half share. Fatima Begum has appeared in the suit and put in a written statement alleging the wakf character of the property. She has, however, taken no part in the discussion before Imam, J., or this Court. The other defendants have appeared and contested the plaintiff's claim, contending that the property is wakf, or that at any rate what they describe as their moiety is unaffected by the mortgage and consequent sale. It is unnecessary to discuss any technical defect there may be in the form of the suit: the substantial question is, whether there has been a valid dedication or not, and it is on these bases that the case has been fought before us.

The plaintiff has urged many objections to the validity of the wakf. The first point made is that the gift was to Fatima Begum and Fyezuddin on a condition, and that is inoperative because the Muhammadan Law does not permit a condition to be attached to a gift. The recital to the deed, however, makes clear the executant's purpose, for it runs in these terms: "whereas the said Prince Mahomed Syeduddin is seized of or entitled to the hereditaments and premises hereinafter described for an absolute estate of inheritance and he is desirous of dedicating the same to the service of Imam Hassan and Imam Hossain and for religious purposes in the manner hereinafter mentioned." The object of the gift is plain, and the introduction of trustees is merely the employment of machinery whereby the gift is carried into effect. The trustees are not donees, and it would be far too narrow a view to hold that the gift is vitiated by a condition. Mr. Chakravarti would go the length of contending that all gifts through the instrumentality of trust are bad. It would be difficult to reconcile that view with the language of the High Court and the Privy Council in Bishen Chand Basawat v. Nadir Hossein (1). In my opinion, this objection fails, and I hold that the provision in favour of the due and proper observance of the annual Muhammadan festival is not invalidated by the introduction of trustees as part of the machinery for carrying it into effect.

(1) 15 C. 329; 15 I. A. 1; 12 Ind. Jur. 170; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 113.

RAM CHARAN LAW V. FATIMA BEGUM.

But, then, it is contended that the disposition does not constitute a wakf, and Mr. Chakravarti has relied on the decision of Delroos Banoo Begum v. Nawab Syad Ashgar Ally Khan (2) as conclusive in his favour. But this argument appears to me to rest on a misreading of the judgments of the High Court and the Privy Council in that case. The defendant there dedicated the whole of her property in perpetuity and provided that the income derived from the endowment, after the payment of the Government Revenue, should be divided into twenty-eight parts, fifteen parts whereof should be applied to the expenses of the Fatiha of Mahomed and the Imams as well as to those of the first ten days of the Muhurram and of the holy days and the repairs of the imambara and the tomb; seven parts should be received by the amlahs and servants, whose names should be inserted at the foot of the document in question or any other document bearing the defendant's seal and signature, and which the said servants might have in their possession, some from generation to generation and others as long as they retain service; and the remaining six parts should be received by the mutwallis, i. e., the defendant and her co-mutwalli. The plaintiffs as members of the Muhammadan community (in the above case) sued the defendant as the mutwalli of the endowment for her removal from that office, on the ground only of misfeasance with the wakf estate. Leave to institute the suit was obtained under Act XX of 1863. It was objected that there was no jurisdiction to grant leave as the alleged endowment did not come within the scope of the Act, that there was no intention of creating an absolute wakf, and that the defendant was not aware of the contents and legal effect of the deed at the time of its execution. The other defences need not be mentioned. In the Court of first instance the plaintiff's suit was decreed. In the High Court this decree was reversed and the suit was dismissed, on the ground that the appropriation was not of a public character and that Act XX of 1863 did not apply to it. It followed that the Judge had no authority to give the plaintiff leave to sue and that his decision was ultra vires. But while the learned Judges determined that there had been no grant of land for public purposes within the meaning of the Act, read in the light of Regulation XIX of 1810, they by no means decided that the dedication did not constitute a wakf. On the contrary, the Court agreed in thinking that so far as words went, it was a wakf which could have bound the appropriator, but held, in view of the dedicator's position as an illiterate and prejudiced woman with no professional assistance, that the dedication was not binding. This is made abundantly clear by the concluding words of the judgment, where it is said—"As to the objections raised by the defendant that the wakf was indefinite and void, I think it enough to say that it, in my judgment, fully answered all the requirements of the Imameea Law, and that if it had been really and knowingly executed, it would have bound Delroos Banoo Begum without the power of revocation." The case was taken on appeal to the Privy Council and the judgment was affirmed,* on the ground that the dedicator was not bound by the deed, as the precautions required in the case of pardanashin executants were not observed. There is, however, no trace of any suggestion that, apart from this, a wakf was not legally constituted; rather does the judgment indicate that its validity, apart from the executant's incapacity, was unquestioned. I, therefore, see nothing in this case that tells against the validity of the endowment now in question, and, if anything, it is an authority in its favour. And in support of the view that a wakf was legally constituted, reference may be made to Phul Chand v. Akbar Yar Khan (3), Biba Jan v. Kalb Husain (4) and Mazhar Husain Khan v. Abdul Hadi Khan (5).

Nor do I think that it is made out that the deed of the 15th July 1864 was a colourable transaction; indeed, the plaintiff cannot well contend that it was fictitious or had no operation, for his suit is one for partition, and it is only by virtue of this deed that any of the defendants acquired any interest in the property that would support a suit for partition. Equally futile is any

Where, in an application to sue in forma pauperis the allegations in the plaint suggest a prima facie case and show a cause of action, it is not open to a Judge to dismiss it on surmises which are not based on any evidence or on the pleadings filed in the case. The proper course is to frame an issue and decide it on evidence taken upon that issue.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, in Original Petition No. 88 of 1914.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I think the Subordinate Judge acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction with material irregularity in dealing with the petitioner's pauper application. The petitioner stated that her husband died in January 1902, and that the 2nd defendant disposed of the property in April 1903. Her case was that the cause of action for this suit arose in April 1903. According to that statement in the plaint the suit is in time. The Subordinate Judge considered it very likely that the husband died before the 30th January 1902 and that as the plaint was presented on the 30th January 1914, the suit was barred by limitation. He is not justified in assuming, without any proof in that behalf, that the husband died before the 30th January 1902 and from the allegations made in the petition there is nothing to suggest that the suit was not in time. Moreover, in this case before the judgment was delivered by the Subordinate Judge, an affidavit was put in by the pauper applicant alleging that she was in possession of the lands till 1903 and that in paragraph 5 of her petition she intended to allege and did allege though not in clear terms that the property was in her possession till that date. If the Sub-Judge entertained any doubt regarding the question of limitation he might have raised a preliminary issue and taken evidence upon it and come to a conclusion before disposing of the application. If the allegations in the plaint suggest a prima facie case and show a cause of action, it is not open to the Judge to dismiss it on surmises which are not based upon any evidence or on the pleadings filed in the case. In Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Harish Chandra Acharjee (1) the learned Judges examined the plaint to see whether the lower Court was right in its conclusion that the plaint did disclose a cause of action. In a very recent case* decided by this Court the learned Judges held that evidence may be taken upon a preliminary point before deciding the question of poverty or the question of there being a subsisting cause of action for the suit. Under these circumstances I cannot but regard the procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge as being irregular. I must, therefore, set aside his order and direct him to take the petition on his file and dispose of it according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Petition allowed.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation Act (I of 1886), s. 154, cl. (f)—Unrecorded proprietor not heard in partition proceedings—Declaratory suit, whether barred—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 66, 74—Document in possession of defendant—Production of document not sought—Genuineness of document not questioned—Discretion of Court—Certified copy of Letters of Administration, admissibility in evidence of—Public document.

An estate wherein the plaintiff claimed a share was the subject of partition by the Revenue Authorities. The plaintiff was not a recorded proprietor, and, consequently, his application to intervene in the partition proceedings was rejected and he was denied an opportunity to be heard. Before the completion of those proceedings the plaintiff instituted a suit seeking a declaration that the share which had been allotted to his predecessor-in-interest was his property:

Held, that the suit was not barred under the provisions of clause (f) of section 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, and that it was open to the Civil Court, at that stage, to make a declaration of title in favour of the plaintiff. [p. 691, col. 1.]

A certified copy of an order of a Probate Court to the effect that Letters of Administration be granted to the person named with a copy of the Will annexed is a public document within the meaning of section 74 of the Indian Evidence Act and is consequently admissible in evidence. It would also be admissible under section 66 of the Act if the original document is in the possession of the defendant even if no steps are taken to call upon him to produce it in Court, because such steps may be waived at the discretion of the Court specially where no question of genuineness is raised. [p. 691, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the order of the District Judge, Assam Valley Districts, confirming that of the Munsif, Gauhati, dated the 30th December 1911.

Babu Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellants.

Babus Mohini Mohan Chakrabarty and Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first three defendants in a suit for confirmation of possession of land on declaration of title. The plaintiff seeks relief in respect of an one-fourth share of an estate; the Courts below have made a decree in his favour to the extent of one-sixth share. Upon this appeal, the decree of the District Judge has been assailed on two grounds, namely, first, that the suit was barred under the provisions of clause (f) of section 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886; and, secondly, that the District Judge has erroneously determined the share of the plaintiff to be one-sixth instead of one-twelfth, by improper exclusion of evidence which was legally admissible. In our opinion, there is no substance in the first contention, but there is no answer to the second objection.

As regards the first ground, we observe that clause (f) of section 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation provides that no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in the distribution of land or allotment of revenue on partition. The estate wherein the plaintiff seeks a share was the subject of partition by the Revenue Authorities in a proceeding instituted in 1902, and terminated on the 6th October 1910. The plaintiff was not a recorded proprietor, and, consequently, his application to intervene in the partition proceedings was rejected. He, thereupon, instituted this suit on the 30th May 1910 for declaration of his title to a share of the estate and for confirmation of possession therein. The relief sought by the plaintiff plainly does not relate to the distribution of land or allotment of revenue of an estate on partition. The plaintiff seeks a declaration that the share which has been allotted to his predecessor-in-interest is his property. This declaration, if made in favour of the plaintiff, will not disturb the distribution of lands or allotment of the revenue on partition by the Revenue Authorities. The suit is consequently maintainable. This view is in accordance with the decision of Muhammad Jan v. Sadanand Pande (1). We are not unmindful that the case mentioned has been criticised in Khasay v. Jugla (2), Muhammad Nasar-ullah Khan v. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (3), Debi Saran v. Ramjas (4) and Lachman Das v. Hanuman Prasad (5). There are no doubt expressions of wide generality in the judgment in the case of Muhammad Jan v. Sadanand Pandey (1), but they are not necessary for the determination of the question raised before us: this much is clear that the suit is maintainable when the plaintiff was denied an opportunity to be heard in the partition proceedings before the Revenue Authorities, Awadh Bihari Lal v. Ishri Prasad (6). We have here the additional fact that when the suit was instituted the partition proceedings had not been completed, and consequently it was open to the Civil Court, at that stage, to make a declaration of title in favour of the plaintiff. The first contention consequently fails.

As regards the second ground, we observe that the Courts below have excluded from evidence a certified copy of Letters of Administration granted to two of the defendants, Gurudutt Katki and Chandradutt Katki, in respect of the estate of Kasinath Katki who had made a testamentary disposition of his property before his death. In our opinion, the evidence has been erroneously excluded. The certified copy produced is a copy of the order of the Probate Court to the effect that Letters of Administration be granted to the persons named, with a copy of the Will annexed of the deceased Kasinath Katki. The view may well be maintained that the document of which a certified copy has been produced, is a public document within the meaning of section 74 of the Indian Evidence Act, for it is a document which forms the record of the act of a public Judicial Officer in British India, namely, the act of the Judge of the Probate Court. The certified copy is consequently admissible. This view does not conflict with the decision of Ponnammal v. Sundaram Pillai (7), where a copy was tendered of a record in a Ceylon Court, which was not even proved to have been certified as a correct copy. The view may also be maintained that the certified copy is admissible under section 66, inasmuch as the Letter of Administration granted to the administrators was in the possession of some of the defendants who were interested to oppose the claim of the plaintiff. No doubt, the procedure was not strictly regularised as steps were not taken to call upon the persons in possession of the Letters of Admininistration to produce it in Court. But such steps might be waived at the discretion of the Court, specially as no question of genuineness arises here. We are of opinion that the document should have been received in evidence. If it is received in evidence, there is no controversy that the share of the plaintiff is not one-sixth but one-twelfth, because the Will shows that there had been a testamentary disposition of the properties of Kasinath Katki and his share in the estate did not pass to the plaintiff.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is varied to this extent, namely, the share of the plaintiff will be declared to be one-twelfth and not one-sixth. The decree will further state from the share of what person this share is to be carved out in favour of the plaintiff. This specification will be inserted in the decree when it is drawn up on the basis of partition papers which have already been called for by an order of this Court. As the appellants have succeeded in part only, there will be no order for costs of this appeal.

Decree varied.

JUDGMENT.—It is quite clear in this case that the agent was tired of waiting for his principal to send a successor, and that he eventually threw up the agency at Rangoon and came back to Madras in March 1909. This was a termination of this Agency and was a starting point for limitation. The fact that he went back to give evidence and again acted for a time until the principal sent a successor cannot prevent the running as regards the first agency. It is not pleaded that there was any acknowledgment of liability to account after the termination of the first agency, and it is not shown that any of the documents exhibited amounts to such an acknowledgment of liability to account for the first agency.

In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is whether the respondent is estopped by the fact that certain land stood in the Revenue Registers in the joint names of herself and her husband from proving that the land in question was her sole and separate property. She was living on the property and, in my opinion, it cannot be reasonably supposed that anyone would lend money on it without inquiry from her as to what her interest was. No reasonable man would, in my opinion, be induced by such a circumstance to refrain from inquiring of her personally as to her interest. No reasonable man could suppose that he was intended to act merely upon the fact that the tax receipts were made out in the names of the plaintiff and her husband. The fact should rather have put him on inquiry to ascertain what her real interest was. In my opinion there was no estoppel and the mortgagee was grossly negligent in refraining from making the most obvious inquiries before he lent his money. The appeal must be dismissed with costs, 3 gold mohurs.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 11th November 1914, and having stood over for consideration till the 16th November 1914, the Court (Oldfield and Tyabji, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The decree under appeal is one declaring that a mortgage to the 1st and 2nd defendants of the plaintiffs' tarwad property by the 3rd defendant and a lease of it to him are not binding. The 4th defendant, the present appellant, was impleaded as being in possession of the property by the mortgage from the 3rd defendant, in consequence of the allegations in the 1st and 2nd defendants' written statements. But the necessary amendment in the plaint was, however, not made. The 4th defendant's first complaint here is that a decree has been passed against him, explicitly by the lower Appellate Court for profits, and by implication for possession, when no relief against him was asked for, and the plaint disclosed no cause of action against him. There is no doubt that the District Munsif and those concerned in the litigation were guilty of carelessness, in not making the necessary amendment, before beginning the trial. But we find that the 4th defendant never called attention to the omission in the two lower Courts; and it is in fact only on a liberal construction of his ground of appeal that he has been allowed to argue it here. On the other hand, his written statement directly traversed the allegations on which the claim against him is based. He explains that he appealed to the lower Appellate Court only to remove the cloud on his title, not on the understanding that the District Munsif's decree against him was for possession. But there is nothing in his appeal grounds, which indicates that this was so. In the circumstances, though we think the District Munsif's omission regrettable, we do not consider that the 4th defendant was under any misapprehension as to the case he was contesting, or that he was entitled to relief on this ground. It is a repetition of this plea in another form that the lower Courts have not considered separately the 4th defendant's case as to the amount advanced by him in addition to that required for the discharge of the 3rd defendant's decree debt or the inclusion of other properties besides those in A Schedule in his mortgage. The answer is that the 4th defendant never attempted to contest this portion of the case on any separate footing, did not in fact file any copy of the decree and has not referred to any contention of this nature in his appeal grounds here or in the lower Appellate Court. In these circumstances this objection deserves no consideration. It is urged next that the lower Appellate Court's finding as to the nature of the debt for which the 4th defendant paid money, is not sustainable, and that even if the debt was not binding on the tarwad, the 4th defendant is protected by his bona fide belief that it was so. We concur fully in the lower Appellate Court's finding which is one of fact, against the binding nature of the debt, and we hold that though its embodiment in a decree might have been prima facie justification for the 4th defendant's belief that it was binding, there was sufficient in the decree itself to put him on inquiry into the validity of the proceedings. He has not given evidence or offered any acceptable explanation for his failure to make such inquiry. He, therefore, cannot succeed on the ground that he acted in good faith. It is then argued that on the lower Appellate Court's findings of fact, the property is partible with reference to Ummanga v. Appadorai Patter (1) and the 4th defendant should have a decree against the 3rd defendant's share. This was never suggested in the lower Courts and we cannot allow it to be put forward for the first time here. Lastly, exception is taken to the finding that the A Schedule property belongs to the tarwad and not to the 3rd defendant alone. We cannot allow the objection that the ownership of this property was not put in issue. For the course of the trial makes it clear that it was and was understood to be covered by the second issue. That issue was no doubt general in its terms. But no complaint was made that it did not cover the point now in question until the hearing in this Court and the parties evidently contested it on the assumption that it did so. The correctness of the finding that the property belongs to the tarwad is, however, disputed on its merits. The property is in the name of the 3rd defendant in the title-deed, Exhibit E. It was acquired by the deceased father of the 3rd defendant by that document. It is no one's case that he acquired it as tarwad property. The alternatives are that he acquired it either for the 3rd defendant or for his wife and family (including 3rd defendant), the latter now composing the tarwad. In these circumstances the objections to drawing a presumption from the fact that Exhibit E is in 3rd defendant's name, which might be valid in the case of a junior member of a joint family, do not arise here. The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, held that this presumption is counterbalanced by the probability for which he vouches on his own knowledge of Malabar habits, that the property was intended to be a provision for the widow and family of the father. He does not refer to the other evidence on the plaintiff's side. We cannot accept this. It is not alleged that the making of such provision is or has ever been recognised by authority as a custom, which can be treated as invariable. If as the learned Subordinate Judge relies on it, it is merely a common incident, that may create a probability in the light of which the other evidence available may properly be appreciated. But it alone cannot justify the rejection of the clear evidence, which Exhibit E affords in the 4th defendant's favour. In these circumstances we must call on the Subordinate Judge to submit a revised finding on the issue :

"Whether the A Schedule property belongs to the tarwad or to the 3rd defendant" in the light of the foregoing and on the whole evidence on record. The finding should be submitted within six weeks and seven days will be allowed for filing objections. The remand will be to the Court for the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Calicut, the Court having been transferred to that station.

In compliance with the above order of this Court, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat at Calicut submitted the following

FINDING.— * * * *

On a consideration of all the circumstances and the evidence I find that the property belongs to the tarwad.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 24th October 1914.

Mr. F. O. O'Neill, for the Appellant.

Babu Ajit Prasad, for the Respondent.

SHAFIQ-UZ-ZAMAN v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under the provisions of section 46, Act III of 1907, arising out of proceedings with regard to an insolvent of the name of Shafiq-uz-zaman. An order was passed on 27th January 1914, by the District Judge of Lucknow under the provisions of section 16, Act III of 1907, on the application of Chhanga Mal and Jawahir Nath creditors declaring Shafiq-uz-zaman to be an insolvent. The Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki has been appointed as Receiver and manager of landed property belonging to the insolvent, which produces an income of about Rs. 50,000 a year. The amounts of debt that rank against the insolvent are more than Rs. 12,00,000; the exact amount cannot be stated at present. On the 2nd July 1914, Mr. O'Neill sent to the District Judge of Lucknow a proposal on behalf of the insolvent for a scheme of arrangement of his affairs, to the effect that tenants and other persons in certain of the villages belonging to the insolvent should be approached to see if they would be ready to purchase under-proprietary or occupancy rights; it was suggested that it would be possible by the sale of such rights to raise sufficient money to liquidate the whole of the debts due from the insolvent. The District Judge, Mr. Sherring, consulted the Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki as Receiver. The latter appears to have put himself in communication with such persons and other tenants and to have ascertained that a certain number of persons were ready to purchase rights of the nature described and to pay considerable sums for their acquisition. After a certain amount of inquiry had been made by the Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki the matter came again before Mr. Warburton, the District Judge of Lucknow, who had in the meantime taken over charge from Mr. Sherring. He passed the following orders with reference to the scheme on 24th October 1914.

"Mr. O'Neill files statements showing that he expects 1390 tenants to pay 30 year's purchase of their rents to obtain occupancy rights, and thus to raise Rs. 12,39,847-11, for the payment of the debts of Shafiq-uz-zaman which amount to about that sum. This is a matter completely out of my experience and beyond my understanding. But I have no objection to the Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki as Receiver raising money under this scheme if he finds it practicable and if he thinks, having regard to all considerations, that it should be proceeded with. In that case he will, of course, have full power to utilize the services of the debtor and his servants and his advisers to such extent as may seem to him proper. I note that Mr. O'Neill informs me that the figure given above (1390 tenants and Rs. 12,39,847-11) refer to holdings which comprise nearly 10,000 bighas or about half the cultivated area of the estate. This perhaps is by design, so that the debtor's sisters who are suing him for half the estate may not object to this scheme for raising money. Nothing has been said as to whence the tenants will get the funds for the proposed transaction, and the Receiver in his capacity of Deputy Commissioner may think that a fatal objection to the whole scheme."

This order does not definitely decide whether this scheme is or is not to be laid before the creditors, and contains no suggestion for its submission to them. The insolvent has appealed against the District Judge's order, and his appeal was admitted by an order of this Court dated 18th January 1915, under the provisions of section 46 clause 3 of Act III of 1907.

Under the provisions of section 27, Act III of 1907, it is laid down that when such a proposal is made, the Court shall fix a date for the consideration of the proposal and shall issue a notice to all creditors by publication in the Local Official Gazette and in such other manner as may be prescribed. The District Judge must under the terms of the Act fix a date for consideration of a proposal and issue notice to all creditors and put the scheme before them. We have examined the record and find that there is nothing to show that notice of the date fixed for consideration of the scheme was issued to all creditors by publication in the Local Official Gazette and in other manner. We cannot find that any notice was issued, although we observe that the Receiver of the property other than the landed property and the representatives of two creditors were present in Court on 24th October 1914. It is not clear how they had obtained information of the date of hearing. A letter No.

SHAFIQ-UZ-ZAMAN v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER.

1039, dated 7th September 1914, from the Deputy Commissioner, Barabanki, was considered. This letter does not contain a report on the scheme. It says that 529 tenants out of 1,127 have verified their agreement to purchase and 56 new tenants have agreed to purchase occupancy rights, and that it appears worthwhile to give the scheme a trial.

The procedure laid down under the provisions of section 27, Act III of 1907, is based on the procedure in the English Bankruptcy Act. The insolvent is permitted of right to make a proposal for a composition or a proposal for a scheme of arrangement of his affairs for the consideration of his creditors, and the duty of the Court on receiving this scheme is to lay it before the creditors, convening a meeting of the creditors by the issue of notices in an authorized form and additional notices in a form according to its own discretion. The first step is to bring the scheme to the notice of the creditors. The next step is to ascertain their views at a meeting convened under the provisions of the section. If a majority in number and three-fourths in value of all the creditors whose debts are proved and who are present in person or by Pleader resolve to accept the proposal, the Court notes that the proposal is duly accepted by the creditors. But if on a consideration of the proposal there is not a majority in number and three-fourths in value of all the creditors whose debts are proved and who are present in person or by Pleader in favour of the acceptance of the scheme, the proposal will stand rejected, whatever be the opinion of the Court as to its merits. When the scheme has been duly accepted by the creditors it is the duty of the Court to consider whether it shall or shall not approve the proposal. The fact that the proposal is approved by the creditors does not involve its approval by the Court. In the case of Burr, In re, Board of Trade, Ex parte (1) Lord Esher laid down at page 472 that in bankruptcy cases the Court has very often to protect creditors against themselves, and that is the duty of the Court to see that the Officers of the Court of Bankruptcy do not do that which would be of the very worst example in bankruptcy matters. Under the provisions of Act III of 1907 a District Judge has a similar duty to perform, and section 27 lays down some of the principles which should guide him in execution of that duty. Under the provisions of sub-section 4 a District Judge has to refer the matter, after the scheme has been duly accepted by the creditors, to the Receiver, if a Receiver has been appointed, for a report. A reference appears to have been made in the present case to the Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki, but no sufficient report has so far been received from him. The letter of the 7th September 1914 cannot be considered to be a report on the practicability of the scheme. It contains tentative comments. Next the District Judge has to consider objections which may be made by or on behalf of any creditor. In the present case it has been impossible for the District Judge to carry out this part of the procedure as no notice has been issued to the creditors and the large majority were not present in person or by Pleader. Next the District Judge has to consider under the provisions of sub-section 5 if facts are proved on proof of which the Court would be required either to refuse, suspend, or attach conditions to the debtor's discharge, and whether there is reasonable security for payment of not less than three-eighths of the amounts due on all the unsecured debts provable against the debtor's estate, and if there is not reasonable security for such payment the District Judge must refuse to approve the proposal; and sub-section 6 directs that the District Judge is to be left discretion to decide whether the proposal should or should not be accepted. In the present case the District Court has not complied with the provisions of section 27. When the report was originally received Mr. Sherring should have issued notice to all creditors. That was not done, and in the circumstances the insolvent rightly demands that such notice should now be issued.

We accept the appeal and direct that this notice shall now be issued.

After a meeting of the creditors has been convened, the learned District Judge will proceed to take their opinions according to the procedure laid down in sub-section 2. Two forms have been laid down by the Calcutta High Court of notice to the creditors of the date of consideration of such scheme

An agency is terminated by the death of the principal and the agent does not continue to be the agent of the heirs of the deceased principal as he was before his death, but if the agent continues to work for the heirs a new agency is created by implication; and if under such new agency the parties agree that accounts should be submitted from year to year, a suit for accounts would be governed by Article 89 and not by Article 115 of the Limitation Act. Where a principal's suit against his agent is governed by the second alternative provided in Article 89 of the Limitation Act, namely, where time runs against the principal from the date of termination of the agency, and a suit is brought within three years, the principal is entitled to accounts for the entire period of the agency. If there has been a demand for accounts and the agent has not responded to the call, there is, by implication, a refusal within the meaning of Article 89. If, however, the principal demands an account and the agent submits papers, there is not necessarily a refusal on the part of the agent to render accounts unless the agent fails to respond to the further demand of explaining the papers submitted by him. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first defendant in a suit for accounts. The facts material for the decision of the questions of law raised before us may be briefly stated. On the 5th September 1895 the defendant was appointed agent of the plaintiffs and their co-sharers for management of their estate. The defendant and his father at the time hypothecated immoveable property as security for the due performance of the duty of the first defendant as agent. This bond was executed in favour of persons who were proprietors of a half share of the entire property. One of these, Radhika Mohan Das, was interested to the extent of one-eighth share; another, Rakhal Chandra Das, for himself and as guardian of his infant brother, Brojo Gopal Das, was interested to the extent of another one-eighth share. Two other persons, Gobind Lal Das and Keshab Lal Das, were each interested to the extent of one-eighth share. The proprietors of the remaining one-half share were not parties to the transaction, but it has been alleged—and that statement has not been challenged—that the defendant was also their agent for the purpose of collection of rent. This agreement continued in force till the 19th August 1904, when its terms were varied in the manner following, viz., the defendant undertook to collect the rent of one-fourth share separately and to submit separate collection papers in respect of that share year after year. In the interval, Radhika Mohan Das had died in the year 1900 and his interest in the property had vested in Rakhal Chandra Das and Brojo Gopal Das; but there was no new contract in writing between these persons and the defendant, although the latter continued to act as their agent as previously. The defendant was discharged from his office on the 7th August 1908. This suit for account was commenced against him on the 7th August 1911 by the plaintiffs who are representatives of the one-fourth share-holder other than Gobind Lal Das and Keshab Lal Das. These latter have not joined as co-plaintiffs and have consequently been joined as pro forma defendants. The plaintiffs claim accounts for the period from the 14th April 1901 to the 7th August 1908. The claim is resisted by the defendant on the merits as also on the ground of limitation; he urges that he has rendered accounts and is under no further obligation to the plaintiffs, and further contends that, if this plea is not established, the claim is barred by limitation.

MADHUSUDAN SEN v. RAKHAL CHANDRA.

The Court of first instance decided in favour of the defendant and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has set aside that decision and has made a preliminary decree for accounts from the 14th April 1901 up to the 7th August 1908. On the present appeal, it has been urged on behalf of the defendant that the entire claim is barred by limitation. In our opinion, this contention cannot possibly prevail.

The defendant and his father hypothecated immoveable property as security for the due discharge of the duty of the defendant as agent of the plaintiffs and their co-sharers. The plaintiffs seek to realise from the defendant whatever sum may be found due to them on adjustment of accounts, by sale of the immoveable properties hypothecated. The suit is consequently one to enforce a charge on immoveable property within the meaning of Article 132 of the Indian Limitation Act. This view is supported by the decisions in Hafezuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Saha (1), Troilukhyanath Mandal v. Abanish Chandra Roy (2), Sures Kanta Banerjee v. Nawab Ali Sikdar (3) and Venkatachalam Chetty v. Narayanan Chetty (4). It has been pressed upon us, however, on behalf of the appellant that a contrary view is supported by the case of Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (5). But as was pointed in Troilukhyanath Mandal v. Abanish Chandra Roy (2), the case of Hafezuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Saha (1) was not brought to the notice of the Division Bench that decided the case of Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (5). For this reason that decision was not followed either in Troilukhyanath Mandal v. Abanish Chandra Roy (2) or in Sures Kanta Banerjee v. Nawab Ali Sikdar (3). In these circumstances, we adopt the view taken in Hafezuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Saha (1) and hold that the claim of the plaintiffs in so far as they are in a position to enforce a lien on immoveable property is not barred by limitation. This brings us to the question, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to enforce a lien on immoveable property in respect of their entire claim.

On behalf of the appellant, it has been contended that when Radhika Mohon Das died in 1900, the agency of the defendant under him terminated. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon section 201 of the Indian Contract Act, which provides that an agency is terminated by the death of either the principal or the agent. On behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents, it has been argued that a contrary view may be supported by a reference to the terms of section 209 which defines the duty of the agent on termination of the agency by the death of the principal. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention. Section 209 is in these terms:—"When an agency is terminated by the principal dying or becoming of unsound mind, the agent is bound to take, on behalf of the representatives of his late principal, all reasonable steps for the protection and preservation of the interests entrusted to him." This provision does not indicate that the agent continues to be the agent as he was before the death of the principal. If he continues to be the agent, no such provision as is embodied in section 209 is needed. On the other hand, if we contrast the provisions of section 253 which defines the effect of the death of any partner on a partnership, it becomes plain that under section 209 an agency is terminated by the death of the principal or the agent. Clause (10) of section 253 lays down that, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, partnerships, whether entered into for a fixed term or not, are dissolved by the death of any partner. In section 209 we miss the expression "in the absence of any contract to the contrary" which finds a place in section 253. We hold accordingly that the agency of the defendant was terminated in 1900 with regards to the share of Radhika Mohan Das, and that thereafter a new agency was created by implication in respect of that share as between the defendant and the representatives of the deceased: Mohendra Nath Ghosh v. Jadu Nath Mullik (6). In respect of the account of this share consequently the plaintiffs are not entitled to enforce a lien on immoveable property under the terms of the original contract of the 5th September 1895, Behari Lal Roy v. Hara Kumar Dutta (7) and Sures Kanta Banerjee v. Nawab Ali Sikdar (3). The question next arises, what period of limitation is applicable with regard to this portion of the claim of the plaintiffs. On behalf of the appellant, it has been contended that Article 115 applies and that as, on the 19th August 1904, the parties agreed that accounts would be submitted from year to year, there was a breach of obligation of the defendant at the end of each year, so that under Article 115, this portion of the claim is barred by limitation. In support of this view, reference has been made to the decisions of Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhyay (8), Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury (9), Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (5) and Jhapajhanessa Bibi v. Bama Sundari Chaudhrani (10). The first three of the cases mentioned, no doubt, lend some support to the contention of the appellant. But it must be observed that, as pointed out in Jhapajhanessa Bibi v. Bama Sundari Chaudhrani (10), there is a strong current of authority in the contrary direction. The cases of Jogendra Nath v. Deb Nath Chatterjee (11), Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (12), Hafezuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Saha (1) and Chandra Madhab Barua v. Nabin Chandra Barua (13) show that Article 89 is applicable to cases of this description. It is worthy of note that in the cases of Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury (9) and Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (5), the attention of the Court was not invited to the decision of Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (12) where it had been pointed out, on a review of the earlier authorities including the decision of the Judicial Committee in Asghar Ali v. Khurshed Ali (14), that Article 89 is applicable to a suit for accounts by a principal against his agent. We may observe parenthetically that the appellant has argued that the case before the Judicial Committee was not in reality a suit by a principal against his agent. We are unable to give effect to this contention. The suit was brought by the then plaintiff for money in the hands of the defendant, who had consequently to account for the sum which he had taken and spent; and the Judicial Committee held that the suit was one for accounts, governed by Article 89 of the Indian Limitation Act. We hold accordingly that Article 89 is applicable in respect of this portion of the claim of the plaintiffs. We do not think it necessary to refer the question for the decision of a Full Bench of this Court, first, because the point is really concluded by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Asghar Ali v. Khurshed Ali (14), and, secondly,¹ because the later decisions to the contrary did not take notice of the earlier decisions which are precisely in point. It is further worthy of note that Mr. Justice Coxe who reluctantly followed the decision of Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (5) in Jhapajhanessa Bibi v. Bama Sundari Chaudhrani (10) was of opinion that the contrary view taken in Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (12) gave effect to the true intention of the Legislature.

We now proceed to examine the effect of the application of Article 89 to the case before us. That Article provides that a suit by a principal against his agent for moveable property received by the latter and not accounted for may be instituted within three years from the date when the account is during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused, or where no such demand is made, when the agency terminates. On behalf of the respondent it has been strenuously urged that the case is governed by the second alternative, namely, that time runs against the plaintiff from the date when the agency terminates. The reason for this contention is obvious, because if it prevails, the plaintiffs would be entitled to accounts for the entire period claimed; for, as was pointed in Sures Kanta Banerjee v. Nawab Ali Sikdar (3) and the same view had been taken by the Judicial Committee by implication in Jawahir Singh v. Lachman Das (15) and by the Bombay High Court in Nathubhai Bhikandas v. Devidas Mangaldas (16), if the suit has been brought within three years, the plaintiff is entitled to accounts for the entire period of the agency. The appellant has fully appreciated the danger of this argument, and accordingly contended strenuously that the case falls within the first alternative, namely, that here the account was demanded and refused during the continuance of the agency. To substantiate this contention, reliance has been placed upon a letter written admittedly by the plaintiffs to the defendant on the 24th April 1909. In this letter, it was stated that the defendant had submitted account papers for 1311 and 1312 Fasli but had not explained them. He was accordingly called upon to appear before the plaintiffs and explain, as soon as possible, the accounts up to the end of the year 1312 Fasli. The defendant admittedly has not responded to this call. The question is, whether there has been a demand and refusal within the meaning of Article 89. Our attention has, in this connection, been invited to the cases of Hori Narain Ghose v. Administrator-General of Bengal (17), Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury (9) and Chandra Madhab Barua v. Nabin Chandra Barua (13). The cases of Hori Narain Ghose v. Administrator-General of Bengal (17) and Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury (9) show that if there has been a demand for accounts and the agent has not responded to the call there is, by implication, a refusal within the meaning of Article 89. A different view appears to have been taken in Chandra Madhab Barua v. Nabin Chandra Barua (13). In that case, there were apparently repeated demands by the principal, with which the agent had failed to comply. The Court held that as the demands were made while the business was in existence, limitation would run from the termination of the business. The facts of the case do not appear, however, fully either from the judgment or from the report; but, if this was intended as a formulation of a general principle applicable to all cases, we are unable to accept it as well-founded on principle. In our opinion, if there has been a demand, failure to respond to the demand is refusal within the meaning of Article 89. There may, however, be cases where omission to render accounts may not be a refusal within the meaning of Article 89. To take one illustration, if the principal demands an account and the agent submits papers, there is not necessarily a refusal on the part of the agent to render accounts. But, in the case before us, after the papers had been submitted, there was a further demand upon the agent to explain them. To this he failed to respond. In these circumstances, there was a refusal within the meaning of Article 89. Consequently, the claim for accounts up to 1312 Fasli in respect of the share of Radhika Mohan Das, is barred by limitation. In respect of the accounts for the remaining period, there is nothing to show that there was a demand and refusal; consequently the claim for accounts from 1313 Fasli is governed by the second alternative in the third column of Article 89 and is not barred by limitation.

Finally, we have to deal with the question of the mode in which accounts should be rendered. On behalf of the defendant the position has been maintained that as soon as the defendant as agent of the plaintiffs submitted his account papers, his duty was discharged, and that the plaintiffs are under an obligation to examine these papers without his assistance. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon observations in Chand Ram v. Brojo Gobind Das (18) and Upendra Kishore Rai Chaudhury v. Ram Tara Debya Chaudhury (19). We are unable to agree in the view put forward on behalf of the appellant. The duty of an agent when he is called upon to render account to his principal was explained by the Judicial Committee in the case of Hurrinath Rai v. Krishna Kumar Bakshi (20). It is well-settled that his obligation towards his principal does not terminate merely by the submission of account papers; he is bound to explain those papers, and if, on accounts taken, it is found that he has in his hands money which belongs to his principal, he is bound to pay that sum. This principle has been recognised in a long series of cases: Shushee Shekhar Audhikaree v. Suleem Biswas (21), Aliaahmad alias Boolaki v. Nusibun Bibee (22), Annoda Persad Roy v. Dwarkanath Gungopadhya (23), Ram Chunder Shaha v. Manick Chunder Banikya (24), Shih Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (12) and Ram Das v. Bhagwat Das (25). But the defendant here has not explained the papers, at any rate, the papers subsequently to 1310 Fasli and, consequently, he must render accounts when they are taken by a Commissioner.

As regards the submission of the papers, it has been argued on behalf of the defendant that up to the time when collection was joint he had submitted some of the collection papers to the pro forma defendants and other papers to the proprietors of the eight-annas share known as the Guha Babus. The Court of first instance found that the papers had been so submitted and in this view the defendant is under no obligation to submit papers again to the plaintiffs. It is plain, in so far as the papers relating to the time during which the collection was joint are concerned, that it is a matter between the landlords themselves and steps must be taken by the Court at the instance of the plaintiffs to compel the pro forma defendants and the Guha Babus to produce the papers which were made over to them by the defendant. The powers of the Court in this respect are ample and have certainly not been exhausted: every endeavour must be made by the Court below to obtain the papers from those persons. But, we desire to make it clear that the defendant cannot be held responsible for the production of the papers, if they are not produced by the persons to whom they were submitted by him.

There remains only one other point for consideration. On behalf of the defendant it has been urged that the trial Court found expressly in his favour that the papers up to 1310 Fasli had not only been submitted but explained. Upon this point, the Subordinate Judge has not come to an explicit finding. One fact, however, is patent; namely, that the co-sharers of the plaintiffs are satisfied with the accounts up to the end of 1310 Fasli they, at any rate, have not put forward a claim in respect of the accounts for that period. In view of the special circumstances of this case, we hold that in respect of the accounts up to the end of 1310 Fasli the plaintiffs must establish that the accounts have not been explained to them by the defendant. If they make this out to the satisfaction of the Court below, the defendant must explain the papers before the Commissioner. But in respect of the period subsequent to 1310 Fasli the defendant is clearly under an obligation to produce such papers as have not already been produced and to explain all the papers to the satisfaction of the Court.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge varied in the manner following. The plaintiffs will have a decree for accounts against the defendant in respect of one-eighth share for the entire period claimed in the suit, and for the sum which may be found due on account of this share, they will be allowed to enforce their claim by sale of the immoveable properties hypothecated. In respect of the one-eighth share originally vested in Radhika Mohan Das, the claim for accounts is dismissed up to the 13th April 1906 (that is, up to the end of the year 1312 Fasli). But the plaintiffs are entitled to an account in respect of that share for the period commencing with the 14th April 1906 (corresponding to the 1st Baisakh 1313) up to the date of the termination of the agency on the 7th August 1908. In respect of any sum which may be found due to the plaintiffs with regard to this share, the plaintiffs will have a money-decree against the defendant. Steps will be taken by the Court below to compel the pro forma defendant and the proprietors of the one-fourth share who are not parties to this suit, to produce such papers as were placed in their hands by the defendant. The defendant will explain the accounts subsequent to 1310 and he will produce such papers as have not already been filed by him. In respect of the accounts antecedent to 1310 Fasli, the plaintiffs must establish to the satisfaction of the Court that they have not been explained by the defendant, and the defendant will be called upon to explain the accounts antecedent to 1310 Fasli only if the plaintiffs establish this. If the Court fails to secure the production of the papers made over to the co-sharers of the plaintiffs, the accounts covered thereby will be taken only if the plaintiffs are able to place other relevant materials before the Commissioner; if the plaintiffs fail to do so, the accounts covered thereby will not be taken. Each party will pay his costs in this Court. The costs in the Court of first instance and before the Subordinate Judge, as also the costs of the accounts now directed, will abide the ultimate result of the suit.

Appeal allowed; Decree verified.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 155 OF 1914.

RESPONDENTS.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) ss. 16 (4), 46 (4)—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 7, 29 (a)—Charter Act (24 & 25 Vict. C. 104), s. 15—Official Receiver, whether necessary party to suit against insolvent's property—Power of Court to excuse delay in presentation of appeal—Appeal, when to be treated as revision.

Per Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.—An Official Receiver is a necessary party to any proceedings affecting the insolvent's estate when once it has become vested in him under section 16 (2) (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Any order affecting the estate in his absence is clearly illegal. Proceedings so instituted cannot be rectified by impleading him subsequently in an Appellate Court. [p. 704, col. 1.]

An appeal against an order affecting the estate of an insolvent even if presented out of time can be treated as a revision petition and a High Court can interfere with such an order under section 15 of the Charter Act if it is clearly illegal and interference is necessary in the interests of justice. [p. 704, col. 2; p. 705, col. 1.]

Abdullah v. Salaru, 18 A. 4; A. W. N. (1895) 124, followed.

Per Oldfield, J.—In regard to the applicability of sections 5 and 12 (2) of the Limitation Act to the orders passed under section 46 (4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, there is no reason for distinguishing between cases under the Madras Forest Act and the Provincial Insolvency Act and the time taken in obtaining copies of judgment cannot be deducted in favour of an appellant. [p. 704, cols. 1 & 2.]

Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India, 5 Ind. Cas. 884; 34 M. 505; 7 M. L. T. 132 (F. B.); 20 M. L. J. 283, followed.

Dropadi v. Hira Lal, 16 Ind. Cas. 149; 34 A. 496; 10 A. L. J. 3, dissented from.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J. (dissenting)—The power to excuse delay in the presentation of an appeal under section 5 of the Limitation Act, can also be exercised in regard to appeals presented beyond period of limitation prescribed by a special or local law; in the cases which hold otherwise, the question did not distinctly arise for decision. [p. 705, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Godavari at Rajahmundry, in Insolvency Appeal No. 551 of 1913 (in Insolvency Petition No. 8 of 1909).

Mr. B. Narasimha Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Chenchiah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J. — The appellant is 10th creditor of a person, who has been adjudicated insolvent by the District Judge of Godavari, and, besides being an unsecured creditor, has, according to his counter-affidavit filed in the lower Court, a mortgage on part of the property now in question. The petitioner in the lower Court, here respondent, is another creditor, who alleged in his petition, Insolvency Appeal No. 551 of 1913, that he held an agreement, executed by the insolvent, his son, to transfer the property to him in discharge of his debt, that he had once prayed for execution of a document by the Court or Official Receiver, in whom the assets had vested, that, receiving no orders, he had later asked for leave to sue, and that, again receiving no orders, he finally asked for a direction to the Official Receiver to execute the document. Respondent made the defendant alone a party to his petition and appellant says in his counter-affidavit that he appeared to oppose it after hearing of it merely by chance. The lower Court passed the order under appeal, directing the Official Receiver to execute a transfer as prayed. It also in the same order allowed a claim by respondent to two items as his own and not the insolvent's property.

One defect in this order is that it makes no reference to the important contentions of appellant, inter alia, that the agreement in question could not prevail against his mortgage for want of registration and was unenforceable owing to lapse of time and that the claim to two items, which does not appear to have been made in the petition under disposal, had already been negatived by the Court after inquiry. But the proceedings were subject to the more fundamental objection, that, though the insolvent's assets had vested in the Official Receiver under section 16 (2) (a) Provincial Insolvency Act, the lower Court dealt with them by its order in the absence of that officer and without hearing his objections. We are astonished that this mistake should have been made and we cannot regard it as rectified by the impleading of the Official Receiver in this Court. The result is that the lower Court has passed an order irregular in a material respect and of no legal effect, since the person directly concerned has had no opportunity to oppose it.

It is, however, argued that no interference with this result is possible, because this appeal is out of time, inasmuch as section 46 (4), Provincial Insolvency Act, contains nothing authorising an appellant to deduct time spent in obtaining copies from the period of limitation it fixes, and the Provincial Insolvency Act being a special law within the purview of section 29 (1) (b) of the Limitation Act, section 12 (2) of the latter enactment is also inapplicable; and it is further contended that section 5 of the Limitation Act, is inapplicable for similar reasons and that we, therefore, cannot take the course, which my learned brother proposes and excuse the delay. On the first point I should follow Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (1), in preference to Dropadi v. Hira Lal (2), holding that valid ground for distinguishing between cases under the Madras Forest Act and the Provincial Insolvency Act has not been shown and decide that the appeal is out of time. On the second point I should not be prepared to dissent from my learned brother's proposal to give weight to the circumstances of the case and the novelty of this objection and excuse the delay, if it were clear that it could legally be excused, and, if the matter were res integra. I should be inclined to the view taken in Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (3). Reference under Forest Act V of 1882 (4) and Seshama v. Sankara (5), that the general provisions of the Limitation Act, including section 5, are applicable, inasmuch as they do not alter or affect any period of limitation within the meaning of section 29 (1) (b). Later decisions however of this Court, Veeramma v. Abbiah (6) and Appa Rau Sanayi Aswa Rau v. Krishnamurthi (7), are to the contrary effect, and it would be necessary either to follow them or refer the matter to a Full Bench for authoritative decision.

My learned brother, however, agrees with me that in the exceptional circumstances of this case, an alternative course is open to us, which we propose to take, to treat the appeal as a revision petition and deal with it as such, under section 15 of the Charter Act. Those exceptional circumstances consist in the clear illegality of the lower Court's action, the fact that its order may, if acted on, prejudice the creditors as a body, though it cannot really bind them or the Official Receiver, who represents them. There is the further circumstance that, if interference is delayed, respondent might alienate the property and irreparable loss might result. Abdullah v. Salaru (8) is a precedent for interference with an appealable decision. In these circumstances we revise the lower Court's order by setting it aside and directing that the petition before it be re-heard after the Official Receiver has been made a party, and be disposed of with reference to all of his and appellant's contentions. There will be no order as to costs in this Court. Costs to date in the lower Court will be provided for in the order it eventually passes.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree that the District Judge's order has to be set aside for the reasons given by my learned brother, so I concur in the order passed by him under section 15 of the Charter Act.

On the question whether section 5 of the Limitation Act gives this Court the power to excuse the delay in the presentation of this appeal, I agree with the decisions of Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (3); Reference under Forest Act (4) and Seshama v. Sankara (5), which answer that question in the affirmative. The case of Veeramma v. Abbiah (6) was not concerned with the power of the Court to excuse delay under section 5 but with the provisions of section 7 of the old Limitation Act (present section 6), the application of which provisions would have "affected" and "altered," the period of limitation provided by a special Statute by excluding the interval during which the plaintiff was under disability and thus by lengthening the period. The decision in Appa Rau Sanayi Aswa Rau v. Krishnamurthy (7) no doubt, interprets the reasoning in Veeramma v. Abbiah (6), as involving the conclusion that section 5 of the Limitation Act is also inapplicable to a case governed by a special Statute. With the greatest respect I feel inclined to doubt if the reasoning of all the three Judges who decided the case of Veeramma v. Abbiah (6), really leads to that conclusion, though some of the observations in the judgment of one of the learned Judges (Shepherd, J.) might so point. I respectfully dissent from the decision of Appa Rau Sanayi Aswa Rau v. Krishnamurthy (7), the learned Judges who decided that case themselves conceding that the argument urged before them in favour of the applicability of section 5 appeared "to have considerable force."

Appeal allowed; Petition remanded.

THE BANK OF BENGAL—PLAINTIFF—

versus

R. M. M. L. MUTHIA CHETTY—

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 17, construction of—Distinct causes of action—Civil Procedure Code Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—One debt guaranteed by different guarantors—Single suit against debtor and guarantors—Court-fee payable on amount of debt guaranteed or on different amounts guaranteed.

Where the plaintiff sues the principal debtor on a cash credit account and also in the same suit seeks decrees against the several persons who have guaranteed that account for the full amounts to which they have guaranteed it, by separate pro-notes or mortgages, the plaint is chargeable under section 17 of the Court Fees Act with the aggregate amount of fees due on the amount claimed from each and all the guarantors separately. [p. 707, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference, dated the 14th June 1915, made by ROBINSON, J.—The plaintiff Bank sued a Chetty Firm for the amount due on a cash credit account and also certain persons who had guaranteed re-payment of the amount due to the extent of Rs. 25,000 each. The Bank required such guarantors to endorse to the Bank promissory notes for the amount of the guarantee drawn in their favour by the Firm to be guaranteed and further required the guarantors to execute a letter of guarantee in a certain printed form.

The plaint is stamped on the amount claimed from the Chetty Firm and the question is whether it should not be stamped on the various amounts for which decrees are asked for against each guarantor or in other words whether section 17 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, does not apply to the case.

In Civil Regular No. 114 of 1915, I decided that a very similar suit embraced two or more distinct subjects. In that suit the Bank did not sue the principal debtor as it does in the present case, but I do not think that this makes any difference. Again in the former suit the aggregate amount of the sums claimed from the various guarantors exceeded the amount due by the principal debtor while in the present case it is less. The Court-fee, however, if section 17 applies, would exceed Rs. 3,000 in the present case while on the other view it would be less than Rs. 2,000.

Mr. Giles adheres to his previous arguments and asks me to refer the matter to a Bench of Judges and says that section 12 of the Court Fees Act allows no appeal from the decision of the Court of the first instance.

It is to be noted that the agreement as to the cash credit account is made on a different date to the various contracts of guarantee with the various guarantors and that the contracts of guarantee are not all made on the same dates. They must, therefore, be regarded as separate and distinct contracts and the causes of action on them are separate and distinct.

In Perchiappa Chetty v. Po K'n (1) a Full Bench of this Court held that the words "distinct subjects" were practically synonymous with "distinct causes of action."

As regards the principal debtor the cause of action is the agreement as to the cash credit account and the amount due. As regards each guarantor it is these facts plus the contract of guarantee. The former facts are common to the cause of action against each guarantor but they have to be supplemented in the case of each by proof of the separate and distinct contracts of guarantee. The subject of the suit or the cause of action consists of all the facts the plaintiff must prove and which form the foundation of his claim against each guarantor. These being distinct it appears to me that the suit embraces two or more distinct subjects and that section 17 applies, for each separate contract made with the same or different persons constitutes a separate cause of action.

Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is strongly pressed and it is urged that the plaintiff must join all his claims in a single suit and that the explanation thereto declares that the obligation and a collateral security and successive claims arising under the same obligation are to be deemed to constitute but one cause of action. It is urged that these guarantees are merely collateral securities. I venture to doubt the correctness of the argument that plaintiff must join all these causes of action in one suit and also that these contracts of guarantee are merely collateral securities, but even if it be correct it seems to me that this provision, which is one of procedure only, was meant for the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits and does not touch the matter provided for in section 17 of the Court Fees Act.

That section is aimed at protecting the revenue from loss by lawful act on the part of plaintiff that is by separate causes of action being lawfully combined in one suit and the question still remains whether the suit as framed embraces several distinct subjects.

The matter is, however, not free from difficulty and involves large sums of money and will arise in several suits before the Court. I think it right, therefore, to refer the following question for decision by a Bench of this Court.

Where the plaintiff sues the principal debtor on a cash credit account and also in the same suit seeks decrees against the several persons who have guaranteed that account for the full amounts to which they have guaranteed it, should the plaintiff bear a Court-fee calculated on the amount claimed from the principal debtor or on the various amounts claimed from each and all the guarantors whichever is greater?

Mr. Giles, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J.—The plaint in the suit is headed "suit for the balance of an account and to enforce security:" it has not been claimed, however, that it is a suit for the balance due on a mutual, open and current account falling under Article 85 of the first Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. No other Article in that Schedule referring to an account is applicable, so that the suit must really be a suit for money lent governed by Article 59 of the first Schedule, if the lending of the money can be separated from the promissory notes and the equitable mortgages.

The guarantee agreements contemplate that the Bank shall, subject to a specified condition, be at liberty to take steps to enforce payment of the promissory notes referred to in the agreements. This is what the Bank is doing in the suit. In the 30th paragraph of the plaint, exemption from the ordinary period of limitation for suits on the notes is claimed. It appears to me that so far as the guarantors are concerned the suit must be regarded as one on promissory notes and so far as the mortgagor-defendant is concerned as a suit upon a mortgage. Each note is a separate cause of action, and the mortgage affords an entirely distinct cause of action.

The suit, in my opinion, embraces two or more distinct subjects and the plaint is chargeable under section 17 of the Court Fees Act. I would answer the question referred as follows:—

The plaint is chargeable with the aggregate amount of the fees to which plaints embracing separately each of the promissory notes and a plaint in a suit on the mortgage would be chargeable.

TOWMEY, J.—I concur.

ORMOND, J.—The claim is based on two mortgages and seven promissory notes. Each of the promissory notes might have formed the subject-matter of a separate suit, and they form the only cause of action against defendants Nos. 19 to 24 respectively.

The facts that the mortgages and promissory notes were given as security for a consolidated loan by the Bank to A. L. A. S. R. M., does not consolidate the several causes of action into one for the purpose of Court Fees Act.

In my opinion the claims have been rightly taken to be distinct subjects within the meaning of section 17 of the Court Fees Act.

APPEAL AGAINST APPELLATE ORDER No. 67
OF 1914.

August 19, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

VARADARAJA MUDALI—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT—APPELLANT

RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182, cls. (5), (6), construction of—"Applying in accordance with law," meaning of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 99—Disability of mortgagee to bring mortgaged property to sale—Change in procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 14—Sale permitted—Subsequent application for execution—Res judicata.

Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, 1908, should receive a fair and not too technical a construction so as to enable the decree-holder to obtain the fruits of his decree. [p. 709, col. 1.]

Deo Nuraia Singh v. Sri Bhagwat Naik, 10 Ind. Cas. 411; Kamakshi Pillai v. Ramasami Pillai, 18 M. L. J. 14; Jamma Dat v. Bishnath Singh, 3 Ind. Cas. 817; 6 A. L. J. 944, followed.

Clauses (5) and (6) of Article 182, Schedule I, to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) are independent and exclusive of each other and the provision contained in the one clause cannot be imported into the other. [p. 708, col. 2.]

Therefore the mere issue of a notice under section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, has the effect of starting the period of limitation afresh whether the application for execution upon which such notice was issued was one "in accordance with law or not". [p. 709, col. 1.]

Where substantive rights are decided in an order passed in an execution proceeding; such decision is, no doubt, res judicata and subsequent applications are barred if the procedure under which such applications were made remains the same. [p. 709, col. 2.]

Vyapuri Koundan v. Chidambara Mudaliar, 18 Ind. Cas. 607; 24 M. L. J. 26; 37 M. 314, referred to.

Where an order dismissing a previous application for execution was based on the view that the then existing procedure made it illegal for the decree-holder to claim the relief, that order will not operate as res judicata when that procedure is changed, and gives the decree-holder a right to claim that relief. of the Court of the District Munsif of Namakal in Execution Petition No. 812 of 1912, in Original Suit No. 253 of 1894 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly.

FACTS.—The plaintiff, a mortgagee, obtained a decree for money apart from the mortgage and in execution brought the mortgaged property to sale. No order for sale was made, as that would be in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the application for execution was dismissed. The new Code of Civil Procedure, Order XXXIV, rule 14, made an alteration in the mortgagee's rights, and confined his disability only to claim under the mortgage. The decree-holder presented another application and on that, a notice was issued. Both the lower Courts held that the issue of notice saved limitation under clause (6) of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and the subsequent application was not barred by res judicata. The present appeal is against that order.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Appellant: The application for sale being one in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was not one in accordance with law, "under clause (5) of Article 182 and would not save limitation." The subsequent application is barred by res judicata, as the application previously made was decided on the merits. The fact that the Code of Civil Procedure, Order XXXIV, rule 14, altered the mortgagee's right would not improve his position.

Mr. P. R. Ganesha Iyer, for the Respondent: The issue of notice under clause (6) of Article 182 is enough to save limitation. Question is only one of proceedings and the doctrine of res judicata does not apply.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The judgment-debtor is the appellant. His learned Vakil Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri has raised two contentions in his arguments before us, those two contentions being :

(a) that the application in execution made by the decree-holder dated 4th March 1908 was barred by limitation and,

(b) that the relief prayed for in that application could not be granted to the decree-holder, the matter being res judicata against the decree-holder by reason of a prior execution petition, dated 13th September 1905, praying for the same relief having been dismissed on the ground that by section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act the decree-holder could not bring to sale the attached property subject to the decree-holder's own mortgage in execution of the money-decree, though that decree was obtained on a cause of action other than the mortgage document. (Some other contentions suggested before us need not be noticed as they have not been raised in the grounds mentioned in the memorandum of appeal.)

Contention (a) on the question of limitation is based on the argument that the application of 13th September 1905 was not in accordance with law as it prayed for a relief which could not be legally granted by the Court and that an application not in accordance with law cannot furnish a fresh starting point of limitation as the expression used in clause 5 of Article 182 of the Limitation Act is "the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order." But the learned District Judge does not rely on clause 5 of Article 182 but on clause 6 of the same Article. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri, therefore, further argued that clause 6, though it used the wide phrase "the date of issue of notice to the person against whom execution is applied for to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him" must be confined to the date of the issue of such notice in respect of an execution application made in accordance with law and ought not to be extended to the date of issue of notice in respect of an application not in accordance with law. (The execution petition of 1905 was dated 13th September 1905 and the date of the issue of such notice seems to have been about a week later.) I see no sufficient reason why the words "in accordance with law" found in clause 5, should be introduced into clause 6 when the Legislature has not thought fit to do so." Mr. Venkatarama Sastri argued that if those words are not introduced the mere issue of a notice in respect of an execution petition might be contended to give a fresh starting point for limitation. The answer to this objection is that a fresh starting point can be given to a right to sue or to apply only when the right had not become barred on the date of the alleged fresh starting point and that a right to sue or to apply, once barred by limitation, cannot be revived. This was the answer made to a similar argument addressed for the judgment-debtor in the case reported as Jamna Dat v. Bishnath Singh (1).

Next it was argued that the issue of notice in respect of an execution application not made to the proper Court might be contended to give a fresh starting point of limitation if clause 6 was given too wide an interpretation. The answer to this objection is that an application made to a Court having no jurisdiction will be treated as waste paper, and such an application to such a Court is also of no value in the eye of the law.

Article 182 should receive a fair and liberal and not too technical a construction so as to enable the decree-holder to obtain the fruits of his decree. That the language of the Article ought not to be strained in the judgment-debtor's favour has been held in numerous cases which are quoted at page 470 of Rustonjee's Book on Limitation. In Deo Narain Singh v. Sri Bhagwat Naik (2) Mookerjee and Caspersz, JJ., held that the issue of a notice under section 248 of the old Civil Procedure Code was sufficient to save a decree from the bar of limitation under the old Article 179 corresponding to present Article 182 even though it was issued upon an application which was not in accordance with law.

In Kamakshi Pillai v. Ramasami Pillai (3), Miller and Munro, JJ., held the same view following Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 86 of 1905 and Pachiappa Achari v. Poojali Seenan (4). I am prepared to follow these two decisions and the decision Jamna Dat v. Bishnath Singh (1) as the dangers alleged to arise by giving too wide an interpretation to clause 6 are not real dangers as I have already tried to point out. The case of Kamakshi Pillai v. Ramasami Pillai (3) does not expressly refer to clause 5 of Article 179 of the old Code corresponding to clause 6 of the present Article 182 and in some of the other cases quoted before us, the application for issue of notice was itself treated as a step-in-aid of execution so as to fall under clause 4 of Article 179 of the old Code (corresponding to clause 5 of Article 182 of the new Limitation Act). However, the decisions of Deo Narain Singh v. Sri Bhagwat Naik (2), and Jamna Dat v. Bishnath Singh (1) refer to clause 5 of Article 179 and are direct authorities which, as I said, I shall follow. I would, therefore, overrule the first contention as to limitation.

As regards res judicata the dismissal of the earlier application of 1905 was based on the then existing law of procedure when properties are sought to be brought to sale after they are attached subject to a mortgage in the decree-holder's own favour. A decision, especially on a question of procedure cannot be treated as res judicata when that procedure itself is changed by the Statute Law. Whether substantive rights are decided in an order passed in execution proceedings, such decision is, no doubt, res judicata in subsequent execution applications. [See Vyapuri Koundan v. Chidambara Mudaliar (5).] The only judicial determination on the application of 1905 was that on the procedure law as it then stood, the decree-holder could not pursue the line of remedy which he then wanted to follow. The new remedy in execution given by the new Statute created a new right to apply in execution for the remedy formerly disallowed and the dismissal of a former application on the ground that there was then no right to apply for that particular line of remedy cannot be res judicata when the new right to apply is relied on. A plaintiff can maintain a suit on a new cause of action which did not exist when he brought a former suit for the same relief, though that suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to that relief on the cause of action on which he based it.

MG. SAN BWIN v. NAGAMUTU.

A decree-holder can, therefore, it seems to me, similarly, maintain an application for a new line of remedy granted by a new Statute even though his former application for the same relief had been rejected before his right to the new relief arose. As was said by the Privy Council in Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (6): "But if it be established that the respondent was mortgagor in 1854 with the right of redemption, why should he be barred of his right merely because at an earlier date" (1853) "he may have had no right to the property at all?" (The respondent had brought a former suit for possession basing his right on an alleged proprietorship right created in 1853 and had failed in that suit.) "The respondent's present claim certainly did not arise out of the cause of action which was the foundation of the former suit." Let us again take a case where the brother of the husband of a childless Hindu widow sued during her life-time for recovery of property in her hands on the ground that he and her husband were undivided in interest and she took unlawful possession of the property and his suit was dismissed on the ground that he and his brother were divided in interest and the properties sued for belonged to his brother solely. If after the dismissal of such a suit, the widow conveyed the properties to him and he again sued for possession on the strength of that conveyance, his new claim cannot surely be defeated by the plea of res judicata. I see no difference in principle whether the second suit or application is based on a new cause of action or on a new right created in the plaintiff or applicant by new Statute Law. The whole question has been elaborately considered by Sir Bhashyam Iyengar, J., in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (7) and it is difficult to add anything useful to the considerations mentioned in his judgment as to the principles to be applied by a Court in coming to a decision on the plea of res judicata. [I would, however, just refer to the two cases in Alimunnissa Chowdhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (8) and Babu Baij Nath Goenka v. Raja Pudmanand Singh (9) in which

Mortgage—Prior usufructuary mortgagee's rights—Rights of purchaser of equity of redemption in decree of 1st mortgagee's suit to which puisne mortgagee was not made party—Declaratory suit by puisne mortgagee without asking for further relief, maintainability of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 67—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1.

A second mortgagee in possession under a mortgage under which he was entitled to possession, cannot be lawfully ousted from possession by his mortgagor or by the 1st mortgagee or by a purchaser at a sale under a decree in a suit on the 1st mortgage to which he was not a party. The purchaser in such a suit, whether he is a 1st mortgagee or a stranger, does not acquire the rights of the mortgagor as at the date of the 1st mortgage but only those that subsist in him at the date of the suit. [p. 712, col. 1.]

Therefore a puisne mortgagee's suit for declarations that the decree and sale in the first mortgagee's suit was inoperative against him and that the purchaser was not entitled to disturb his possession, without asking for further relief is maintainable. [p. 712, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—Eliminating from the plaint unnecessary and irrelevant matter the state of facts on which the plaintiff asked a declaratory decree was as follows:—In 1905 the 3rd defendant Ma The and two others (U. Lin and Ko Lon) mortgaged two holdings of paddy land, one of which is the subject-matter of this suit, to the first defendant firm for Rs. 750 by a registered mortgage without possession. In 1910 the 1st defendant firm pressed for payment and Ma The borrowed Rs. 1,100 from the plaintiff with which she paid to the 1st defendant firm her share of the debt to that firm. As security for this Rs. 1,100 Ma The mortgaged one of the holdings to the plaintiff by a registered deed. This mortgage was usufructuary and under it the plaintiff was to hold possession of the holding for six years, the principal not being re-payable until the expiration of such period. In pursuance to this mortgage the plaintiff had entered into the possession of the land and was in possession of it when the suit was filed. In 1913 the 1st defendant firm had sued the mortgagors on the mortgage of 1905 for Rs. 300 principal and interest due, and had obtained a mortgage decree for such amount of principal Rs. 172-8 interest, and Rs. 52-8 costs. The decree directed that in default of payment of Rs. 525 with interest at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum from the 16th October 1912 the two mortgaged holdings were to be sold. The plaintiff was not a party to the suit and no mention was made of his having the usufructuary mortgage over one holding. The holdings were sold under the decree and the 2nd defendant bought the one mortgaged to the plaintiff for Rs. 735; an order had been made at the instance of the 2nd defendant ordering Ma The to deliver up the land to him. The plaintiff apprehended disturbance of his possession under his usufructuary mortgage.

The prayer of the plaint is.

1. That it may be declared that the decree in Civil Regular Suit No. 448 of 1912 (the suit on the 1st defendant firm's mortgage) and the sale of the land in Civil Execution No. 150 of 1913 of the Township Court of Yedashe is inoperative against the plaintiff's interest in the land and voidable, and

2. That the defendant No. 2 the purchaser at the sale in execution is not entitled to disturb the plaintiff's possession.

It may be said at once that the plaintiff can have no right to a declaration that the sale under the decree is voidable either at his instance or that of any of the mortgagors. There is, however, a question whether he can prove what he alleges; he is not entitled to a decree containing the other declarations he asked for.

The Sub-Divisional Judge did not appreciate the real point involved in the case, which is whether the plaintiff as a puisne usufructuary mortgagee who was not made a party to a suit on the 1st mortgage as he should have been under Order XXXIV, rule 1 of the Procedure has a right to a merely declaratory decree. The Divisional Judge discussed some of the very numerous decisions on the rights of puisne mortgagees, and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not adopted either of the two remedies open to him, and that further relief being open to him his suit for a mere declaratory decree would not lie.

The rights of a puisne mortgagee who has not been made a party to a suit on the 1st mortgage, has been the subject of much discussion in the Indian High Court. It has been dealt with fully by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Mulla Veetil v. Achuthan Nair (1) which, although it is a most important decision, has not so far been included in the official reports. The cases in all the High Courts which had any bearing on the question were considered at length and the Courts held that the following propositions were established viz. :—

1. A second mortgagee is entitled to the same rights as the 1st mortgagee with reference to his security having regard to the nature of his mortgage.

2. The purchaser of the equity of redemption after the 1st mortgage and the 2nd mortgagee both stand on the same footing with reference to their respective rights against the 1st mortgagee when they have not been impleaded in the suit instituted by him on his mortgage.

3. Those rights are unaffected by the suit of the 1st mortgagee to which they are not made parties and the decree passed therein made in pursuance thereof.

4. The purchaser in such a suit, whether it is a 1st mortgagee or a stranger, does not acquire the rights of the mortgagor as at the date of the 1st mortgage but only those that subsist in him at the date of the suit.

The question referred was "whether a first mortgagee who has purchased the mortgaged property in execution of a decree on his mortgage and sues for possession, or in the alternative for the recovery of his money, is entitled to a decree for possession subject to redemption by a puisne mortgagee with possession who was not a party to the suit by the first mortgagee"? The answer of the Full Bench was in the negative.

The judgment makes it clear that a stranger who buys is in no better position than a first mortgagee who buys at the sale in pursuance of his decree. Their Lordships say, "the authority, therefore, of the Judicial Committee is clear for the position that whatever rights the second mortgagee as such may have at the date of his mortgage whether to possession (if his mortgage be one with possession and the previous mortgage without it) or to sale or foreclosure under section 67 (of the Transfer of Property Act), such rights remain altogether unaffected by the suit of the first mortgagee without the second being a party to it and the sale in execution of his decree." This judgment arrived definitely at the conclusions which at the latter decisions were tending towards, and it appears to me to undoubtedly state the law accordingly. Their Lordships say that there is nothing in Goverdhana Dos v. Veerasami Chetti (2) to support the contentions of the respondent who argued in favour of an affirmative answer to the question referred. Adopting this judgment the plaintiff in this case, if he was a second mortgagee in possession under a mortgage under which he was entitled to possession could not be lawfully ousted from possession by his mortgagor, or by the 1st mortgagee or by a purchaser at a sale under a decree in a suit on the 1st mortgage to which he was not a party. That being so a suit for declarations that the decree and sale in the 1st defendant's suit was inoperative against him, and that the 2nd defendant was not entitled to disturb his possession was open to the plaintiff in this case, and he was not obliged to seek further relief. All he wants is to be left in the possession which he alleged he had at the time he filed his suit. It is open to him to choose his own time for enforcing other rights which the law may give him in respect of his usufructuary mortgage.

(2) 26 M. 537.

The case will be remanded for trial, but the issues fixed by the Sub-Divisional Judge are not appropriate. I fix the following issues:—

1. Did Ma The mortgage the holding in suit to the plaintiff by an usufructuary mortgage and was the plaintiff in possession of the holding under such usufructuary mortgage at the time the suit was filed?

2. Was the plaintiff a party to the suit by the 1st defendant firm on their 1st mortgage over the lands?

If the 1st issue is answered in the affirmative and the second issue in the negative plaintiff will be entitled to the declaratory decree which he asks for except in so far he asks that the decree obtained by the 1st defendant and the sale under it are voidable.

It will be unnecessary for the Sub-Divisional Court to go into any question of collusion or fraud, or whether the 2nd defendant had notice of the plaintiff's mortgage. This Court has held that the registration of a document concerning land affords notice to all persons dealing with it subsequently, consequently the 2nd defendant cannot resist the plaintiff's claim on the ground that he was a bona fide purchaser of the land without notice of the plaintiff's mortgage.

The appeal is allowed, the decrees of both the lower Courts are set aside and the case is remanded for admission under its original number and for trial on the issues I have fixed.

The first and the second defendants must pay the plaintiff's costs of the appeals in the Divisional Court and in this Court.

A certificate will issue to the appellant under section 13 of the Court Fees Act.

Note.—First defendant was not made a party to the appeal either in this or in the Divisional Court. No mention was made in the decree to pay the plaintiff's costs by him.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are reasonably clear, and can be shortly stated as follows: Defendants Nos. 9 to 13 are the uralans or trustees of a temple known as the Tiruvegapura Devaswami, and the lands referred to in the suit are the property of the temple, and at the period material to this suit the management of the property of the temple was vested in the whole body of uralans. In 1904 the lands in question in this case were mortgaged to the 1st defendant on behalf of the tavazhi of defendants Nos. 1 to 6 with a corresponding obligation on them to pay certain rents and revenues while in possession to the uralans (Exhibit A). In this state of things, the 9th defendant, who appears for some reason to have been on bad terms with his fellow uralans, brought a suit against them, obtained a decree, and attached in execution the moveables of the temple, including the vessels and jewels necessary for the performance of the daily worship. It thereupon became an urgent matter to free the vessels and jewels, and the plaintiff came forward with the requisite funds. Meetings of the uralans were held which the 9th defendant though summoned, refused to attend, and it was agreed that the plaintiff should be reimbursed by making over to him certain of the rents and revenues due under Exhibit A. For this purpose a karar was drawn up, Exhibit B, and it is on this document that he brings his action. As drawn up, the contracting parties are expressed to be all the five uralans of the one part and the plaintiff of the other part; but the 9th defendant could not be got to execute it and in fact never did execute it. Finally it was executed by the remaining four uralans on the 24th April 1909 and handed to the plaintiff, who forthwith paid into Court the moneys necessary to release the moveable property of the temple. When the plaintiff endeavoured to recoup himself by collecting the moneys due to him under Exhibit B, he was met by a refusal based upon various grounds and among them the allegation that the moneys had already been paid to defendants Nos. 9 and 12, and in support of this allegation a receipt was produced dated 27th November 1910 and signed by defendants Nos. 9, 12 and the anandravan of defendant No. 11's tarwad (Exhibit I). He thereupon instituted the present suit; so far he has failed in both Courts below, and he now comes in second appeal before this Court. No one conversant with the facts of th case can fail to entertain strong suspicions that the alleged payment to the 9th and 12th defendants was a fiction, and Exhibit I a sham document concocted to defeat the plaintiff's just claim and that was part of his case in the Courts below. The manner in which this issue was treated below is most cursory and unsatisfactory; however both Courts have found that the payment was made; that is a finding of fact in support of which there was no doubt some evidence and we must accept it here. That being so, two questions only arise for our decision. First, was Exhibit B a valid document or was it vitiated by the fact that only four of the five contracting trustees executed it and secondly, was the payment evidenced by Exhibit I, a good discharge to the defendants from the plaintiff's claim? At one time a third point was suggested, viz., that Exhibit B only effected an assignment of an actionable claim but this was not seriously pressed, and is at once refused by an examination of the documents. As to the first point, the law is well settled and clearly understood both in this country and in England. The majority of a body of charitable trustees can legally bind the whole body [Wilkinson v. Malin (1), Whiteley, In re, London (Bishop) v. Whiteley (2) and Charavur Teramath v. Urath Lakshmi (3)] but if a document is drawn up in the name of all, and it is the intention of the parties that all should execute it, it will be incomplete and inoperative till all have done so. See Sivasami Chetti v. Sevugan Chetti (4), Latch v. Wedlake (5). It is a question of fact as to what was the intention of the parties. In this case the District Munsif has found as a fact that they intended the document to be executed by all the five trustees, and the District Judge has accepted his finding; if there is evidence to support that finding, we cannot interfere with it in second appeal; if there was no evidence to support it, it is our duty to set it aside. Upon a careful consideration of the facts, we think that not only was there no evidence in support of this finding, but that all the evidence points wholly and conclusively the other way. The document was drawn up certainly as early as the 17th March 1909, as on that day the four trustees sent an urgent notice to the 9th defendant informing him that it was drawn up, that his signature to it was required, and that if he did not sign it the other four would sign it without him and "give it the same effect as if he had also taken part" (Exhibit C1). Another equally urgent notice in similar terms was sent to the 9th defendant on the 9th April (Exhibit C). As he did not answer these communications, the document was executed by the other four trustees on the 24th April and handed to the plaintiff, who thereupon paid the money in satisfaction of the decree. The Judges below have been misled by an answer in the plaintiff's cross-examination, which appears in the deposition as follows:—

The intention when Exhibit B was written was that 9th defendant should also execute it." That is doubtless perfectly true; but the learned Judges have overlooked the fact that more than a month elapsed between the writing of the document and its execution that during that month the 9th defendant had been asked repeatedly to sign, and had failed to do so, and that the remaining urualans had announced their intention of signing themselves and delivering the document to the plaintiff. The intention of the urualans is sufficiently evidenced by their own words in Exhibits C 1 and C 2; that of the plaintiff is equally manifest from the fact that as soon as he got the document signed, he parted with his money. We think that there was no evidence to support this finding of the lower Courts, and we set it aside and declare Exhibit B to be a valid and binding document.

There remains the question as to whether the payment to two of the five trustees is a valid payment. There is no doubt that even one out of many trustees can receive and give a good discharge for rent and similar payments of income, if he has or is held out by his co-trustees as having authority to do so. Here it is not contended that the two urualans had any such authority actual or by estoppel. But it is said that though the Indian Trusts Act does not apply to charitable trusts; its provisions should guide us by analogy in matters of this sort; and that was the view adopted in Rambabu Parbu Mirasi v. Members of the Committee of Management of Savasthan Shri Dev Rameshwar of Achare Antaji Ramchandra Nadkarni (6); and that section 42 of the Indian Trusts Act, if applied, validates this payment. The Court in that case (Jenkins, C. J., and Ranade, J.) applied the provisions of section 42 of the Act to a case of charitable trust; and proceeded to give an interpretation of the section. It runs as follows:—

"Any trustees or trustee may give a receipt in writing for any money, securities or other moveable property payable, transferable or deliverable to them or him by reason, or in the exercise, of any trust or power; and, in the absence of fraud, such receipt shall discharge the person paying, transferring or delivering the same therefrom, and from seeing to the application thereof, or being accountable for any loss or misapplication thereof."

It will be noticed from the report of the Bombay case (6) that the learned Judges quote the section as beginning "any trustee may," whereas the words are "any trustee or trustees may." They proceed to interpret the section as meaning that any member of a body of trustees may give an effectual receipt for a payment made to him solely. We do not agree with this decision; and we do not think that the learned Judges would have decided it as they did, if their attention had been drawn to the sections of the English Statutes upon which the Indian section is modelled. These sections are 23 and 24 Vict. c. 149, section 29; 22 and 23 Vict. c. 35, section 33; and 44 and 45 Vict. c. 41, section 33. Before the first of those enactments, a person who paid money over to trustees was responsible to the cestui que trust for seeing to the proper application to the trust of the moneys so paid. The object of the English sections (their purport is the same, but they apply to different classes of trust) was to put an end to so great a hardship, and to discharge those who in good faith paid trustees from any further responsibility as to the disposal of the moneys. Such being the origin of the English sections we think it is clear that on their true construction the words "any trustee or trustees" mean "the trustee where there is only one, the trustees where there are more" and we see no reason for applying a different construction of the words of the Indian Trusts Act. Accordingly we hold that the payment to the 9th and 12th defendants, and the receipt, Exhibit I, failed to discharge defendants Nos. 1 to 6, and leaves them no answer to the plaintiff's claim.

The appeal is allowed with costs in all Courts, and the plaintiff must have a decree in the terms of his plaint except as regards the rent due for the Malayalam year 1080, which is not now pressed. In default of payment within six months, the properties in suit must be sold.

Appeal allowed; Suit decreed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the plaintiff to have it declared that he is not the husband of the defendant. The onus is, therefore, upon him: in most of the cases cited the application was the wife under the maintenance section of the Criminal Procedure Code, in which it would be for the applicant to prove affirmatively that she was married to the respondent in accordance with Chinese Customary Law. In Fone Lan v. Ma Gye (1) where the plaintiff had to prove affirmatively a right under Chinese Customary Law, it was held that he had failed, a result not to be wondered at, considering the conflict that prevails amongst the available authorities and amongst Chinese witnesses themselves. In Pai Beng Teng v. Ko Maung (2) which was also a civil case, being an application by a Chinaman to administer the estate of his wife a Burmese woman, the learned Judge seems to have held that under the circumstances of the case the applicant would whatever law was applicable be entitled to grant of Letters. In T. Wain Shain v. Ma Hnin Hlaing (3) which was again a civil suit brought by a Burmese girl for the restitution of conjugal rights it was held that she had failed to prove the validity of the marriage. In fact from the authorities cited to me it would appear to be the case that the party on whom the onus lies usually fails. In the present case here is almost an unanimous consensus of opinion not amongst the Chinamen called by the wife but also amongst the Chinamen called by the husband that the marriage is valid. Thus Sa Tin Hi, plaintiff's witness No. 3, says I recognise plaintiff and defendant as man and wife and defendant not as kept mistress. In case of elopement amongst Chinese Buddhists when the girl is brought back to her parents and the latter consent to the union, it would be recognised as a marriage if no other marriage ceremony be performed even if defendant does not visit plaintiff's parents, still, she will be recognised as his wife; witness No. 5 agrees with witness No. 3, witnesses Nos. 2 and 4 also say that in this particular case they would recognise the union as legitimate as the pair have children a somewhat extraordinary reason but the fact remains that the plaintiff is unable to produce a single person of his own nationality who does not regard him as the husband of the defendant.

There are, as it seems to me, all admissions made against the plaintiff by persons whom plaintiff has himself called forward as persons likely to know his customary law. The ratio decidendi with at least three of them is that it suffices if the girl's parents consented to the marriage.

Thus P. W. No. 2, Lim Chaik, says that the custom in this country for a run-away couple is that after a little time the girl is brought back to her parents and the latter consent to the union, it will be recognised as marriage if no other ceremony is performed, even if defendant do not visit plaintiff's parents she will be recognised as plaintiff's wife.

Plaintiff's witness No. 4 says in Burma if a young Chinaman elopes with a Burmese girl and if the parents of both sides consent marriage becomes valid. Plaintiff's 5th and the last witness says in case of elopement if the girl is brought back and her parents consent, the marriage becomes valid.

Turning to the authorities cited. I cannot find anything, definitely prohibitive of such a custom. Parker in his Chinese Family Law speaks of certain preliminaries as being gone through in the case of a first class marriage, but he also speaks of inferior categories of women who he says are still wives. Alabaster on the other hand would make the Chinaman monogamous and their women mere concubines, vide page 171. It is evident, however, that he considers the consent of the parents, is the important thing even for the head wife and it is significant that when he goes into details that he says to constitute a valid marriage the written assents of the relatives must be given. The consent of the father of the woman will suffice but not that of the mother?" He does not mention the consent of the father of the bridegroom as necessary. Having regard to the veneration of the Chinese sons for their parents one would expect it to be necessary at any rate for a first class marriage, but in face of the contradiction between these two authorities I am not prepared to hold affirmatively that a lesser wife may not be a lawful wife or that in the absence of these ceremonies that may be necessary for a first class marriage, the tie of the bridegroom obtains the consent of the girl's parents, may not still be lawful and the girl be an inferior wife. The question as already stated will or may largely depend in the present state of the authorities available on the question on whom the onus lies.

(3) 4 Ind. Cas. 801; 4 Bur. L. T. 124.

MUHAMMAD SUBHAN BAKHSH v. ABDUL RAHMAN KHAN.

I should, therefore, not be prepared to hold that this woman was a mere mistress of the plaintiff if it be shown that he asked for and obtained the consent of the girl's parents to a more regular union, even after an elopement.

Let us look at plaintiff's own evidence. It does not prepossess one in his favour. He says distinctly I never visited defendant's parents' house with U Taik and Gwan Taik before or after the birth of her second child, neither did I go from Gwan Taik's house with U Taik and Ma Paw, I do not know if U Taik and Ma Paw went. A moment later he, however, admits that he did go but says that he did not enter, that he went with them in spite of his willingness to the re-union proposed by them—again he says—it is true. U Taik and Ma Paw took me to defendant's house to speak to her parents to come to a reconciliation with them for having deserted plaintiff. On the other hand the evidence of Gwan Taik, U Taik, Ma Thein Gywe is directly to the effect that the parents did consent and I am not prepared to hold that what they consented to was an illicit union. In other proceedings plaintiff as he himself admits sought to prove that she was a wife but a divorced wife because he had deserted her for three years. He seems to be a person that will take up any position that he considers will suit him without regard to its truth. In my opinion he did apply to the girl's parents for their consent to a regular union. Gwan Taik occupies a respectable position and seems to be related to the defendant and I believe his indignant assertion that he would not have been a party to any other kind of application and I am not satisfied that the union so sought by the bridegroom and consented to by the bride's parents did not constitute a valid marriage. I must, therefore, decline to interfere with the judgments of the Courts below and dismiss the appeal with three gold mohurs costs.

Appeal, abatement of—Application to set aside—Insufficient cause—Neglect of appellant—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 4, 9—Case, if can proceed against other respondents.

Where one of the respondents died on 10th July 1912 and on 16th October 1912 the fact was brought to the notice of the appellant's Counsel by the Chief Court office, but no further steps prior to the hearing on 21st January 1913 were taken while the parties lived at Delhi and there was no difficulty to know the respondent's death or ascertain the names of his heirs and where consequently the appeal was ordered to have abated against the deceased respondent:

Held, that the appellant's carelessness and the culpable means adopted by him for trying to conceal his neglect were sufficient for declining under Order XXII, rule 9 (2), Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to set aside the order of abatement and that the case could not proceed against other respondents. [p. 718, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 1st of December 1909, dismissing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal, R. B., for Muhammad Ismail deceased, Respondent.

ORDER.

SHAH DIN AND CHEVIS, JJ.—(January 21st, 1913.)—Muhammad Ismail, respondent No. 3, is dead and no application has yet been made to bring his legal representatives on the record.

Mr. Shadi Lal has put in an affidavit by one Sheikh Mumtaz-ud-din, said to be one of the sons of Muhammad Ismail, stating that the latter died on the 10th July 1912 and that he left several heirs who are his legal representatives for purposes of this case. A certified copy of an extract from the register of births and deaths has been filed in support of the affidavit showing that the deceased died on the 10th July, 1912.

MUHAMMAD SUBHAN BAKHSH v. ABDUL RAHMAN KHAN.

As no application to bring the legal representatives of the deceased, Muhammad Ismail, on the record has been made within the prescribed period of limitation, the appeal abates as against him under Order XXII, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code. The case is adjourned till Monday, the 27th January, to enable the appellant's Counsel to make up his mind whether he would press the appeal against respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Chaudhri Rambhaj Datta, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Clarence Kirkpatrick and K. Santanam, representing Mumtaz-ud-Din, son of Muhammad Ismail, deceased, defendant No. 3.

ORDER.

KENSINGTON, C. J. AND LEROSIGNOL, J.—(November 19th, 1914.)—On the 21st January 1913 the Chief Court ordered abatement of this appeal as against the defendant-respondent, Muhammad Ismail, and gave the plaintiff-appellant an opportunity of considering up to 27th January whether the appeal would be pressed against the remaining respondents, defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

On the 27th January 1913, an affidavit by the plaintiff-appellant, dated the 25th, was presented and the Court thereon directed that notice should issue to the legal representatives of Muhammad Ismail to show cause why the order of abatement should not be set aside, and also directed that if the abatement was set aside the appeal would be heard on the merits.

There are on record affidavits by Mumtaz-ud-Din, eldest son of Muhammad Ismail, dated 9th January and 30th October 1913 and by various other persons, and the question of abatement has been fully argued.

We find that there has been great carelessness on the part of the plaintiff-appellant. Muhammad Ismail died on the 10th July 1912 and it is admitted that on the 16th October 1912 the fact was brought to the notice of Mr. Muhammad Shafi's clerk by the Chief Court office. Mr. Muhammad Shafi seems to have communicated with his client but to have taken no further steps prior to the hearing of 21st January 1913.

In support of the plaintiff-appellant's affidavits it is urged that he on 2nd December 1912 moved the Tahsildar of Delhi to assist him in procuring a detail of the heirs of the deceased, but we find that though the application (put in by Mr. Ram Bhaj Datta and attached to the record) professes to be dated 2nd December 1912 no order was passed by the Tahsildar till the 28th January 1913. There is every reason to believe that this application has been intentionally antedated in order to give support to an erroneous affidavit.

Further we find that all parties concerned live in Delhi and we cannot believe either (1) that plaintiff had any real difficulty in ascertaining the names of the heirs of deceased, or (2) that he was unaware of Muhammad Ismail's death till October 1912 or thereabouts.

Considering the plaintiff's carelessness and the culpable means adopted by him to try and conceal his neglect we decline under Order XXII, rule 9 (2), Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the order of abatement.

Mr. Ram Bhaj Datta then asks that the appeal may proceed against the defendant-respondents Nos. 1 and 2. We do not understand the attitude adopted, but it is necessary that fresh notice should be given to these respondents before that portion of the appeal can be argued.

Fresh date for hearing of the appeal as against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 only.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K.B., for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

KENSINGTON, C. J. AND RATTIGAN, J.—(February 1st, 1915.)—Mr. Shafi now informs us that after considering the position arrived at under the previous Bench Order of 19th November 1914, he is unable to press this appeal against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who are now the sole respondents.

As indicated in the previous order we recognise the correctness of this attitude, and we understand that this is the explanation of the failure of those respondents to appear. We accordingly dismiss the appeal, making no order as to costs.

DECREE-HOLDER—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181, applicability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 3, 6, applications under—Limitation.

Applications under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, are not governed by Article 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 any more than applications for orders absolute under Order XXXIV, rule 3. [p. 720, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Comilla, dated the 13th November 1911, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Comilla, dated the 20th of May 1911.

FACTS.—The decree-holder was the mortgagee under a mortgage dated 2nd March 1901 in which the due date was 12th February 1902. The suit on the mortgage was brought on 11th February 1905 and the decree was made on 1st April 1905. The mortgaged property was sold in pursuance of this decree and the sale was confirmed on 12th September 1907. An application for personal decree was made on 31st January 1911. On that date both the new Code of Civil Procedure, Act V of 1908, and the new Limitation Act, IX of 1908, were in force. And the question was raised whether the application was not necessarily barred under Article 181 of the new Limitation Act.

The first Court gave effect to this contention, but the lower Appellate Court reversed the decision on the question of limitation and remanded the case for trial on the merits, and against that order this appeal was preferred. But before the appeal came on for hearing the order of remand was carried out, and though the appellant was debarred from questioning the propriety of the remand, he was heard on the question of limitation which was still open to him.

Babu Dharendra Lal Kastagir, for the Appellant.

Babu Sasadhar Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal arising out of a decision given by the Subordinate Judge of Comilla on the 13th November 1911 holding that a certain application under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act was not barred by limitation and that the suit must be remanded to the Munsif for determination of what balance is legally recoverable from the defendant otherwise than from the property sold. An appeal was preferred to this Court on the 15th July 1912 and the first ground was with regard to the question of limitation; the second ground was with regard to the order of remand, the third was the general ground that the learned Subordinate Judge has misconstrued the law. That can only refer to the law of limitation which was the only question raised.

As regards the remand we find that the defendants-appellants have been guilty of the greatest laches. The appeal, which they filed on the 4th May 1912, was without the certified copy of the Munsif's judgment and could not be admitted till the 15th July. The talabana was not filed till the 10th January 1913, and meanwhile the learned Munsif had heard the remand and decided it in November 1912. We have seldom met with a case where the appellant deserved less consideration from this Court. But as regards the question of limitation it is, of course, quite open to him still to argue that.

This is the only point which we can consider. It raises a somewhat new point. The mortgage-decree was passed on the 1st April 1905, the mortgage was dated the 2nd March 1901 the due date was 12th February 1902, and the plaint in the mortgage suit was filed on the 11th February 1905. On the authority of the ruling in Rahmat Karim v. Abdul Karim (1) the plaintiff had his personal remedy at the date of the institution of the suit. The question which has been raised in this case is whether he loses that personal right by reason of his not having made the application for personal decree under Order XXXIV, rule 6, within three years of the date of the confirmation of the mortgage sale which took place on the 12th September 1907. The application which he did make was on the 31st January 1911. On that date the new Code of Civil Procedure was in force, and it is argued that Article 181 must necessarily apply to an application of this nature. It was held that the section which corresponded to section 181 in the later Limitation Act, namely Article 178, did not apply to an application by a mortgagee for a supplemental decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act and since the new Civil Procedure Code has come into force, there has been the ruling in the case of Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (2), where Mr. Justice Mookerjee, in delivering the judgment of the Court follow the decision to which one of us was a party in Rahmat Karim v. Abdul Karim (1) and applies it to Order XXXIV, rule 3, which is the case of order absolute in a mortgage suit.

It is urged that what applies to Order XXXIV, rule 3, does not apply to Order XXXIV, rule 6. But we are unable to accede to this contention. Not only are both the cases in our opinion strictly parallel but the rule of law and justice which was the ratio decidendi of the case in Rahmat Karim v. Abdul Karim (1), applies as has been shown by Mr. Justice Mookerjee to both the cases equally. The passage to which we were referred in his judgment may be quoted: "It may be conceded that Article 178 of the Limitation Act of 1877 did not apply to applications beyond the scope of the Civil Procedure Code, but it does not follow that that Article or the corresponding Article of the Limitation Act of 1908, applies to all applications made in the course of a suit. It may be pointed out, in the first place, that the preamble to the Limitation Act of 1908 states expressly that the object of the Legislature was to consolidate and amend the law of limitation relating to only certain applications to Courts. In other words, the Limitation Act does not profess to provide for all kinds of applications to Courts whatsoever. The Act certainly does not apply to applications to the Court to do what the Court has no discretion to refuse," and this is one of those matters in which the Court has no discretion to refuse if it is legally recoverable. The words "legally recoverable" cannot possibly apply to any question of limitation "nor can the provisions of the Act be held to apply to an application to the Court to terminate a pending proceeding, the final order in which has been postponed for the benefit of the defendant or for the convenience of the Court. In cases of this class, it has been suggested that the right to make the application may indeed be deemed to accrue from moment to moment; if this view is adopted, any exception on the ground of limitation cannot obviously be supported;" and in this connection the learned Judge cites the case of Rahmat Karim v. Abdul Karim (1) to which we have already referred and applies it in support of the principle which he here lays down. It is, therefore, clear that applications under Order XXXIV, rule 6, are not governed by Article 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 any more than applications for order absolute under Order XXXIV, rule 3.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Judge was right in holding that the suit was not barred by limitation and he was right in making the remand and we dismiss the appeal and direct that all costs including the costs in remand be paid by the appellant to the respondent.

We mark our sense of the defendant's dilatory conduct by doubling the ordinary hearing fee and making it two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

RESPONDENTS.Provident Insurance Societies Act (V of 1912), ss. 2 (8), 21—Company undertaking life insurance business, registration of, before starting business.

A Company embarking in the business of life insurance must be registered under the Provident Insurance Societies Act before business can be carried on under the conditions laid down in that Act. [p. 722, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated September 20th, 1913.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, for the Crown.

Mr. N. C. Sen and Babu Hem Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred by the Government against an order passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, on the 20th September 1913, acquitting the respondents Sital Chandra Pal, Surendra Nath Chowdhry, B. P. Ghose and Purna Chandra Ghose of an offence punishable under section 21 of the Provident Insurance Societies Act (V of 1912). That section provides that any provident insurance society which makes default in complying with any of the requirements of this Act, and every Director, Manager or Secretary or other officer or agent of the society who is knowingly a party to the default, shall be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, etc.

The learned Presidency Magistrate on an apparent misreading of the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher in the case of Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Oriental Assurance Co., Ltd. (1), thought that the Company in question called the "New King Insurance Company, Limited" was not amenable to Act V of 1912, inasmuch as it was a Company which had share capital divided into shares. But this is obviously untenable upon the construction of the plain wording of the Act in section 2, sub-clause (8), where it is stated that a provident insurance society means any person or body of persons, whether corporate or unincorporate, which receives premiums or contributions for insuring money, etc. That clearly lays down that whether the society already in existence is a corporate company before, or whether its share capital is divided into shares or not, registration under the Provident Insurance Societies Act is necessary before business can be carried on under the conditions laid down in that Act. There is nothing in Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment to the contrary. It appears that the legal advisers of the Company were misled, first, by a remark which Fletcher, J., made in the course of the argument; and, secondly, by a passage in his judgment at page 578. The remark was that the defendant Company cannot be a provident insurance society as a provident society is not incorporated under the Companies Act but registered or inscribed under the Provident Insurance Societies Act. That is against the view taken by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, for what Fletcher, J., says is that a Company incorporated under the Companies Act cannot be a provident insurance society by reason of its registration under the Companies Act, not that any society may not be both a Company and a provident insurance society; and again in the passage in his judgment at page 578 what he says is that the Company he was dealing with considered that, by issuing policies not exceeding Rs. 500, they can bring themselves under the heading of a provident insurance Company, and were entitled to carry on business untrammelled by the provisions of the law. This is not so, because under the Provident Insurance Societies Act registration has to be made subject to certain conditions which are set out in the Act and which have to be approved of by the Registrar, and these provisions do not apply to a Company which has a share capital divided into shares. In saying this he does not say that a Company which wishes to carry on the business of a provident insurance Company need not be registered under the Act, but he says that the conditions which are set out in the Act obviously do not apply to a Company which has already complied with these conditions in its published prospectus under another Act, and what he is referring to is the form of the policy and he holds that, so far from having complied with the law, they have simply tried to avoid the provisions of another Act, namely, the Indian Life Insurance Act of 1912, which were intended to prevent a Company from embarking in the business of life insurance unless and until they had the amount of cash that was necessary for them to deposit with the Governor-General in Council in order to meet their obligations. So in this case the Act V of 1912 which is before us was intended to prevent the Company from embarking in the business of life insurance unless and until it had been registered under the Act. There seems to have been a misunderstanding, and the learned standing Counsel, who appears for the Government, does not press for anything more than a nominal penalty. But a mistake of law cannot take the defendants out of the word 'knowingly' in the section.

(1) 21 Ind. Cas. 258; 40 C. 570.

EMPEROR V. RAM SARUP.

The order of acquittal must, therefore, be set aside, and in lieu thereof the respondents Nos. 1 to 3 will each be fined Rs. 5. The respondent No. 4, Purna Chandra Ghose, against whom proceedings do not seem to have been pressed in the Court below, will be exempted from this order.

We understand that the society has already applied for registration but that the Government has not yet made rules necessary to carry out the purposes of the Act, and, in the circumstances, we are of opinion that this conviction should make no difference whatever to the result of any such application.

Appeal allowed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE NO. 302 OF 1915.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

RAM SARUP—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 51—Suspension of rent—Right of zemindar to recover rent—Landholder collecting suspended rent by distraint, if commits offence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188.

An order suspending or remitting arrears of rent is not an order prohibiting the land-holder from receiving the same if tendered, or attempting to realize the same by lawful means. [p. 724, col. 1.]

Therefore a land-holder endeavouring to collect suspended arrears by process of distraint is not guilty of an offence under section 188 of the Penal Code. [p. 724, col. 1.]

Its effect is simply to deprive him of his right of suit in respect of the arrears remitted or of the suspended arrears during the period of suspension. [p. 724, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge of Bareilly.

REFERENCE.

Ram Sarup, a zemindar of Mauza Darabnagar, has been tried summarily and convicted of an offence under section 188, Indian Penal Code, in that he distrained and attempted to collect rents for 1321 Fasli in October 1914 (1322 Fasli) in disobedience of an order of the Collector of which he had cognizance; that the payment of those rents had been suspended.

He has been fined Rs. 150 and this is an application for revision.

The first ground is that section 188 cannot apply to the facts of the case, and this is expanded in ground 4, that there is no proof that the disobedience caused any obstruction, annoyance or injury.

It is, I think, a little unfortunate that a test case of this nature should have been tried summarily. Apparently the only evidence taken was that of the vasil-bagi navis who proved the orders suspending rent signed by the zemindar. What exactly Ram Sarup did is not clear but from a report of the Deputy Collector, dated 23rd November 1914, as a result of which these proceedings were initiated, it appears that Ram Sarup distrained many holdings of the tenants for the arrears of rent without deducting the amount of suspended rent of 1321 Fasli. These tenants filed a complaint against the zemindar.

The fact of the distraint seems to have been admitted by Ram Sarup, for in his examination he seeks to excuse himself for his conduct, and does not deny it. The order of suspension was lawfully promulgated by the Collector under section 51, Tenancy Act. That order was disobeyed, the attempt to collect the suspended rents by distraint amounting to a disobedience. Nor can it be argued that disobedience did not cause obstruction and annoyance to the tenants concerned though it would have been well to take the evidence of the tenants. I should not, therefore, be prepared to recommend revision of the finding and sentence on this view of the facts alone.

But their legality is, I think, open to question on the grounds stated in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the application for revision.

Section 51 of the Tenancy Act provides a special remedy for the disobedience to the order, and in cases of failure to comply with the direction of a Statute the special remedy provided by the Statute should be followed and no other can be supposed to exist (Ref. Mew's Digest of English Case-Law, 1911 Edition, Volume 13 under 'remedy given by a Statute, how far exclusive' page 1959).

Whenever there is an intention to apply the provisions of the criminal law to acts authorised or required by particular Statutes, that intention is always made clear by express words to that effect. (Ref. Ratan Lal, Law of Crimes, 1911 Edition, page 63, under section 41, Indian Penal Code). Section 149 of the Tenancy Act is an instance to this effect. The disobedience to an order of the Collector under section 51 is nowhere in the Tenancy Act made a criminal offence. Section 26 of the General Clauses Act, it is true, enacts that where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence. Ram Sarup's act was an offence under section 51, Tenancy Act, and it can, I think, be held to come within the terms of section 188, Indian Penal Code. (I note, however, that the application for revision, ground 3 says that the punishment specified in section 51 has 'been undergone').

But the principle referred to by me above that a special Act of the nature of the Tenancy Act is intended to be complete in itself as regards offences committed against the rent law is, in my opinion, the one that must prevail. It has been followed by the Courts in this country the ruling of Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman (1), being an instance in point.

The result is that I consider that as the Tenancy Act provided a special remedy for disobedience to an order under section 51 the Collector was not competent to sanction prosecution for an offence under section 188, Indian Penal Code, in respect of that disobedience.

Whether any action could have been taken on a complaint brought by one of the tenants concerned under some section of the Indian Penal Code is a matter which the Collector might have considered that was an alternative method of bringing home to the zemindar the consequence of his action which was most reprehensible, but the Collector, qua-Collector, had, it seems to me, no remedy but that provided by section 51 itself, i.e., the immediate realisation of the suspended revenue.

I, therefore, refer the case for orders of the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the sentence be set aside and the fine refunded.

I further note that the Magistrate who tried the case had in a previous page of the proceedings expressed the opinion that Ram Sarup should, without doubt, be prosecuted under section 188, Indian Penal Code, and I think that in the circumstances it would have been better that some other Magistrate should have tried the case.

The report will be sent to the Magistrate for any explanation or remark that he may have to offer before submission to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.—The facts disclosed by this order of reference are peculiar. Ram Sarup is a land-holder of a village Darabnagar in the Bareilly District. By an order lawfully passed and promulgated under section 51 of the Agra Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901), a portion of the rents due from tenants of that village had been suspended. Ram Sarup was aware of the order of suspension but he endeavoured to collect suspended arrears by process of distraint. He has been prosecuted for having disobeyed an order promulgated by a public servant, lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, directing him to abstain from such act. The learned Sessions Judge has doubted the propriety of the conviction and the sentence of Rs. 150, fine which followed the prosecution and has referred the matter to this Court for orders. The effect of an order suspending or remitting rent under section 51 of the Tenancy Act already referred to is not to prohibit the zemindar or zemindars affected by such order from collecting the same. This is obvious from sub-clause 5 of the said section which prescribes the consequences which will result in the event of a land-holder's succeeding in collecting rents which have been suspended or remitted. If the tenants are in fact sufficiently well off to pay the suspended rents I cannot see that any principle of public policy is violated by permitting them to do so. The appropriate consequences will follow under the provisions of the Tenancy Act itself. It will be presumed that a mistake was made in suspending rents and land revenue in a village where the tenants are in fact able to pay, and the zemindar will become immediately liable for payment of the suspended arrears of land revenue. The difficulty in the present case seems to have arisen because of Ram Sarup's attempt to invoke the power of distraint. The whole facts are not before me, and, moreover, the question whether distraint can lawfully be levied in respect of rents under suspension is one entirely within the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts. I should have thought myself that such distraints could be successfully contested by the tenants under section 142 of the Tenancy Act, whereby the distrainer can be put to proof of his claim to the contested arrears just as if he were the plaintiff in a suit to recover the same. It is expressly laid down that a suit for the recovery of suspended arrears of rent will not lie during the period of suspension. If I am mistaken in this view—and I conceive it possible that some difficulty may have been felt by reason of the definition of what constitutes an "arrear of rent" given in section 101 of the Tenancy Act—then the question of the re-drafting of the provisions of that Act relating to distraint deserves the attention of the Legislature. As regards the effect of section 51 of the Tenancy Act I feel no doubt whatever. An order suspending or remitting arrears of rent is not an order prohibiting the land-holder from receiving the same if tendered or from attempting to realise the same by lawful means. Its effect is simply to deprive him of his right of suit in respect of the arrears remitted or of the suspended arrears during the period of suspension. Ram Sarup either had a right in law to distrain for these suspended arrears, or he had not. I should have thought that he had not, and in that case the distraints levied by him can be set aside and he is liable to compensate the tenants inconvenienced thereby. If, however, it be held that the suspension of arrears of rent does not deprive the land-holder of his power of distraint during the period of suspension I am unable to hold that he is liable to punishment for availing himself of his legal right.

I set aside the conviction and sentence in this case; the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

Under section 12 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, the Government Advocate's certificate must be as to something decided by the Judge and there is no power to certify as to anything decided by the Jury; the Court dealing with the case on the certificate cannot deal with any other part of the case until it has determined that there is an error on the part of the Judge on some point contained in the certificate. A Court dealing with a certificate is not a Court of Appeal and is subject to limitations even as a Court of review. [p. 727, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J.—The accused, S. P. Ghosh, was tried with five other accused at a Criminal Sessions of this Court at which I presided on the following charge:—

"That you on or about the 31st day of March 1915 in the Pegu creek near Dawbong committed dacoity in that you conjointly confined Moungh Lun Mong and his crew, beat and robbed them of Rs. 20".

The general effect of the story of Mg. Lun Moungh and those with him was shortly as follows. Eight of them were going up the Pegu river at night in a Burmese paddy boat: the helm of their boat fouled the anchor chain of a barge anchored in the stream. One of the crew of the Burmese boat fell into the river. Lun Moungh asked the men on the barge to send their sampan to rescue the man, but they refused to do so, and they tied the helm of the Burmese boat to the chain of the barge and would not release it. A sampan put off from the barge to another barge anchored near by, and brought back some Indians. The Burmese were then told that the clerk had come and that they must come on to the barge. They got into it and were told to go into a small room on the deck. When they went in they were told by the third accused S. P. Ghosh to sit down. He asked them their names and took these down in writing. When this was done the 1st accused in the case demanded to know which of them had abused him, and without more kicked Lun Moungh severely. The second accused then seized him by the hair and pressed his head down and the 1st accused beat him very severely with a stick. He also beat others, and all the Indians in the room set to either kick or beat the Burmans. Two Indians stood at the door armed with dahs evidently to prevent the Burmans leaving the room. While the assault was going on the first accused demanded payment from Lun Moungh of Rs. 20 under threat of the assault on him being continued to extreme lengths. Lun Moungh through fear of his threat asked one of his men to get the money. This man was allowed to go back to their boat and having got the money he paid it to the first accused. The Burmans were then allowed to go back to their own boat which was released. According to Lun Moungh it was the 3rd accused who said they might go when the money was paid. The defence of those of the Chittagonian accused who admitted that they had been on the barge was that there had been a fight between them and the Burmans in consequence of which the third accused had been called to the barge and no further violence occurred after that. The defence of the 3rd accused was that he only got to the barge when the fight was over, and that all that he had to do with the affair was to ask what the row had been about, look and see what damage had been done to the barge and take the name of the tindal or steersman of the Burmese boat, and tell the bargemen to push it away. He said it was his duty in case of damage to a barge to take down the name of the tindal of the boat causing damage and to report to his superiors. His version denied the Burmans' story about their having been with him in the small room on the barge. It was proved that he made no report to his superiors. Only one of the Burmans spoke to this accused having taken part in the violence, and his evidence as to this was obviously open to doubt. The Magistrate had committed him on the ground that as the demand for money was said to have been made in his presence, and the beating was said to have gone in his presence, he must be held to have been a party to the plan of getting money from the Burmans. The prosecuting Counsel put the prosecution's case against this accused before the Jury on the same grounds.

His case was that the circumstances pointed to a plan having been formed amongst all those on board the barge to get the Burmans to come on to the barge and to go into the room, confine them there, and then beat them and get money from them. I told the Jury in the course of my summing up that assuming that they did not believe the one witness who spoke this 3rd accused having joined in the violence they should not convict him merely because he was present when the violence took place and the money was demanded, and that before they could convict him they must be satisfied that he was a party to a plan for obtaining money from the Burmans by violence or threats or that he had in some way joined or had a part in extorting the money from Lun Moun by the violence and threats spoken to. I put before them for consideration the possibility of coming to a conclusion that no plan for extorting money from the Burmans had been arranged prior to their being sent into the room, and that the idea of beating them and getting money from them may have started with the 1st accused when he demanded to know who had abused him.

In dealing with the case of each accused separately I pointed out to the Jury that this 3rd accused's case on the facts that he was not present on the barge when any violence occurred, and I told them that if they believed this they should, of course, acquit him.

In my general explanation of the constituents of the offences of extortion, robbery and dacoity, and of what they should be satisfied before they convicted any of the accused, I told them that if they believed the Burman witness's story about the Rs. 20 having been extorted by violence and threats they should convict those of the accused who in their opinion had taken any part in extorting or in any plan for extorting the money by such violence and threats of either dacoity or robbery according as they found that five or less than five persons took part in committing the offence. Having at the end of the case for the prosecution directed the acquittal of 5th and 6th on the ground that there was no evidence identifying them as having been present at the occurrence the case of four accused had to be decided by the Jury. After retirement to consider their verdict the Jury found the 1st and 2nd accused not guilty of dacoity but guilty of robbery and the third accused not guilty of dacoity but guilty of aiding and abetting robbery. They acquitted the 4th accused.

Nothing has been said during the course of the case by either the prosecuting Counsel or myself about abetment of robbery or about it being open to the Jury to convict the 3rd accused of abetment of dacoity or robbery. My view was that if the Jury accepted the prosecution's case that the circumstances proved by the evidence showed that a plan or scheme had been made by the men on the barge to extort money from the Burman boatmen and that the 3rd accused was a party to that plan or scheme, and had acted conjointly with the other parties to it throughout, the 3rd accused should be found guilty of either dacoity or robbery although the evidence might not show that he had either demanded money or said or done anything to put the Burmans in fear of injury.

The verdict against the 3rd accused appeared to me definite, unambiguous and complete, and consequently not one about which it was open to me as the Judge at the trial to ask any questions under section 303 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I thought at the time that the only course open to me as the Judge was to have the verdict recorded and to pass sentence in accordance with it.

The case is now before this Bench on a certificate by the Government Advocate that it should be further considered on the following grounds:—

1. Whether the learned Chief Judge who presided at the Sessions held at Rangoon at which the case above-named was tried on or about the 7th May erred in accepting the verdict of the Jury that the 3rd accused, S. P. Ghosh, was guilty of the offence of abetment of robbery, the said accused not having been charged with having committed the said offence of abetment, but only charged along with the other accused of the offence of dacoity on which charge, the Jury found him not guilty.

2. Whether the learned Chief Judge erred in not putting to the Jury whether the 3rd accused, S. P. Ghosh, was present at the time of the commission of the robbery.

The 2nd of the above grounds based on a misstatement must be made to the Government Advocate. I certainly put to the Jury the 3rd accused's case that he was not present at the time of the commission of any dacoity, robbery and told them that if they believed that they should acquit him. If the Burman witnesses were believed there could be no question as to his having been present at the dacoity or robbery.

S. P. GHOSH v. EMPEROR.

As to the 1st ground the verdict was unanimous, and the Code makes no provision for the presiding Judge not accepting an unanimous verdict. Under section 305 of the Code, it is only when the Jury are not unanimous that it lies with the Judge to take one of the courses specified in the section. There could be no error in law in my accepting the verdict because no question of acceptance of the unanimous verdict can arise, Vide Hla Gyi v. Emperor (1). The verdict had to be recorded and the accused was by it convicted of the offence of which the Jury found him guilty. The contention of the learned Advocate who argued the case for the accused before this Bench was not that I committed any error in law in accepting the verdict. He was unable to show what course other than the one I took should have been adopted by me under the peculiar circumstances of the case. His contention was that the Jury had given a verdict which for several reasons was illegal.

The first question for consideration is whether it is competent for this Bench to enter into and deal with the points other than those raised in the certificate.

In Muthukumaraswami Pillai v. Emperor (2) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court unanimously held that a certificate of the Advocate-General has not the effect of opening the whole case as if on appeal, but it only gives the Court the power or authority to review the case or so much of it as is necessary in order to determine the point or points of law raised in the certificate and thereupon, that is to say, if it finds there has been error of law in those points, to alter the sentence and pass such judgment and sentence as may seem right.

Section 12 of the lower Burma Courts Act 1900, says, that where in any case tried in the original criminal jurisdiction any question mentioned in section 11 (i.e., any question of law, or custom having the force of law or of the construction of any document or of the admissibility of any evidence) has been decided by the Judge and no reference has been made by the Judge himself, the Chief Court on its being certified by the Government-Advocate that in his opinion the decision should be further considered, review the case or such part of it as may be necessary and finally determine the question, and may thereupon alter the judgment, order or sentence passed by the Judge, and pass such judgment, order or sentence as it thinks right. It is plain that the certificate must be as to something decided by the Judge and there is no power to certify as to anything decided by a Jury, and consequently there is no power, to review anything decided by a Jury. Benson, J.'s judgment at page 425 of the report of the above quoted Madras Full Bench case makes it quite clear that the Court dealing with the case on the certificate cannot deal with any other part of the case until it has determined that there has been error on the part of the Judge on some point contained in the certificate.

It appears to me of supreme importance to bear in mind that a Court dealing with a certificate is not a Court of Appeal and that it is subject to limitations even as a Court of review. Provided that there has been no error of law in something decided by the Judge the law accords absolute finality to unanimous verdicts of Juries in cases tried in the highest Courts in India. For those Courts the system prevailing in greater portion of the British Empire has been adopted and whether it is a good or bad system it is a cherished one and it appears to me that any possible infringement of it should be well considered and that no verdict should be interfered with unless it is quite clear that the Judges are authorised by the provisions of law to interfere.

In my opinion it would be sufficient for the disposal of this review to say that there was error of law on the part of the Judge on any point decided by the Judge which is mentioned in the Government Advocate's certificate. Lest, however, I am taking too narrow a view of the powers of this Bench, I will deal with some of the points raised by the learned Advocate who argued the case.

One was that the accused having been charged with dacoity only, he could not be legally convicted of abetment of robbery whether he was present or not present at it. It was not disputed that if present he could be convicted of robbery although the only charge was of dacoity, but it was argued that if he was to be convicted at all he had to be convicted of either dacoity or of robbery. The argument was founded on the wording of section 114 of the Indian Penal Code and some of the sections in Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code dealing with the law as to the charges, and on some decisions of the High Courts in India.

The first of the cases bearing on this question is Reg. v. Chand Nur and Pirbhai Adamji (3). In that case Chand. at the instigation, it was said, of Pirbhai put some poison into a mill belonging to Rajebhai an enemy of Pirbhai's. Rajebhai was not killed but two of his sons were killed. Chand and Pirbhai were charged with murder. The Sessions Judge found on the evidence that Pirbhai was not present at the commission of the offence but he found him guilty of abetment of murder. The High Court held that this conviction was wrong, and directed that Pirbhai should be re-tried on a charge of abetment of murder. The reasoning, at which the High Court arrived at this conclusion, was that the section of the then Code of Criminal Procedure which corresponds to section 238 of the present Code, did not apply to a collateral offence, which was in that case the instigation by Pirbhai of Chand to commit the offence which instigation must have been taken place before the murder at a different place, so that the set of facts Pirbhai had to meet if he had been charged with abetment of the murder was separate and distinct from the facts the actual murderer had to meet. The learned Judges said that when a man is accused of murder he may not be conscious that he will have to meet an imputation of collateral circumstances constituting abetment of it, which may be quite distinct from the circumstances constituting the murder itself; in other words the Judges considered that the charge in that case of murder against Pirbhai did not give him proper notice of what he had to meet. The decision is no authority for the proposition that an accused charged with an offence cannot, in any case, be convicted of abetment of the offence. On the contrary it was held that when a charge of a graver offence gives notice to the accused of all the circumstances going to constitute a minor offence he may be convicted of the minor offence. In the present case there can be no doubt that the charge against the third accused as well as of the other accused of conjointly committing dacoity gave him and them full notice of all the circumstances going to constitute minor offences involved in those circumstances. The charge must have conveyed to each of the accused that he conjointly with others confined Mounng Lun Mounng and his crew, and beat them and robbed them. It must have conveyed to each and all of them that they were all present at the commission of the dacoity or robbery and that each took part in it and so aided it or joined in a plan or conspiracy for committing it.

The next case cited—Padmanaba Payi Kanniah v. Emperor (4)—purported to follow Reg. v. Chand Nur and Pirbhai Adamji (3), but one sentence in the judgment goes a good deal further than the Bombay case did. The actual facts are not given in the judgment or reported, and it cannot be gathered that whether the Judges intended to lay down the sweeping proposition the sentence may possibly be held to do.

In Singaravelu Pillay v. Emperor (5) all the accused were charged and convicted of theft of crops. On appeal the Appellate Court altered the conviction of the first accused to abetment of theft; because it found that he was not present at the offence, the High Court held this alteration and the conviction of abetment of theft were wrong. The reasoning of the Bombay case obviously applied.

In Yeditha Subbaya v. Emperor (6) Sundara Aiyar, J., said he did not think that the learned Judges who decided the case of Padmanaba Payi Kanniah v. Emperor (4) intended to lay down a universal rule that in no case can a conviction for abetment be possible where the charge was only of the principal offence. He went on to say: "The question is what were the facts charged. If on these facts, two charges could be framed, namely, the commission of the principal offence and the abetment, then by virtue of the provisions of section 237 the accused may be convicted of the offence of the abetment though it was not charged separately against him."

In my opinion a charge of abetment of robbery might have been made against the 3rd accused in this case notwithstanding that the prosecution's case was that he was present at the robbery, and section 114 of the Penal Code would not have been a bar to his conviction for abetment of the robbery. The wording of the section is:—

"Whenever any person who, if absent, would be liable to be punished as an abettor, is present when the act or offence for which he would be punishable in consequence of the abetment, is committed, he shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence."

The exact meaning is somewhat obscure, and as Mr. Mayne says the section introduces a statutory legal fiction whereby an abettor is treated as if he has actually committed the offence himself by reason of his presence at the time and place of the offence. It has been decided, however, that this section does not apply to the case of an abettor whose abetment consists in something done or omitted when the offence was committed in his presence.

In a case reported at page XXXVII of the Appendix to the 4th Volume of the Madras High Court Reports (7) that Court said that the section simply provides for the punishment of what the English Law calls principals in the second degree, who according to paragraph 803 of Dr. Gour's Penal Law of India are persons who abet a crime and countenance it by their presence at it, but who do not actually engage in it.

Dr. Gour remarks on the words "shall be deemed" in the section are that they imply that the change of status from abettor only to principal is only by way of legal fiction, not that the abettor actually commits the offence he is present at. This view is also expressed in Emperor v. Kashia Antoo (8). In Queen v. Musammat Niruni (9) it was held that to bring a prisoner within section 114 of the Penal Code it is necessary first to make out the circumstances which constitute abetment so that if absent he would have been liable to be punished as an abettor and then to show that he was also present when the offence was committed. It follows that the section only applies when an abettor has done or omitted something constituting abetment prior to the commission of the crime itself, and when he has also been present at the commission of the crime, but has not actually committed it. This is the view of Dr. Gour, and in Abdulla Khan v. Queen-Empress (10) it was held that no previous conspiracy, instigation or act or illegal omission is proved; and the abetment consists only of participation in the actual commission of the offence section 109 of the Code is the section applicable. On this part of the case I am of opinion that neither section 114 of the Penal Code nor any of the sections of Chapter XIX of the Criminal Procedure Code is opposed to the legality of the conviction of the third accused of abetment of robbery. If the case had been tried by a Sessions Court without a Jury, a finding by the Judge that this accused had abetted the robbery committed by the 1st and 2nd accused would, in my opinion, have been legal, notwithstanding that the only offence specifically charged was of dacoity. On the charge the third accused had not to meet any facts other than those which occurred at the commission of the offence.

Another ground urged against the legality of the conviction is that it was not in accordance with any direction of the Judge as to what constituted abetment and that the Jury must have acted on their own ideas as to abetment which may not have been in accordance with the law of abetment stated in the Penal Code. It is the fact that the Jury acted on their own initiative in returning a verdict of aiding and abetting the robbery but whether the error is such as to vitiate the conviction, even if this point could be regarded as included in the Government Advocate's certificate is another matter.

We should have to consider whether the error had in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

The error consisted in returning a verdict of aiding and abetting the robbery when according to the direction I gave the Jury they should, if they accepted the case of prosecution, have found this accused guilty of robbery.

The verdict was not guilty of dacoity in respect to all the accused, guilty of robbery against the 1st and 2nd accused: in respect to the third accused it was neither one of guilty nor one of not guilty of robbery but a special verdict of aiding in and abetment of the robbery. From the points of view of the layman this verdict was a perfectly reasonable one, and on the facts before them it expressed a view which any non-lawyer might take. They had to consider and decide whether this third accused had taken any part and if so what part in the crime spoken to by the Burmese witnesses. None of these witnesses had spoken of the third accused having demanded money, and the evidence as to his having used threats or violence was very dubious and weak, but his story as to not having been present when the crime was committed could not be believed, and the circumstances showed that he was present at it and that he was party to a plan for extorting money as suggested by the prosecution. I can quite understand reasonable men coming to decision that although this man be liable to be convicted of the grave offence of actual robbery we will convey our view that he did not take such an active part in robbery as those we convict of it by convicting him of an offence which will indicate more closely that a conviction of robbery would, the actual view we take of what he did. The verdict is not open to the charge of inconsistency even from a lawyer's point of view: it was not one of not guilty of robbery but guilty of aiding and abetting the robbery; it was one finding him guilty of what would appear to the ordinary man to be a minor offence instead of finding him guilty of a grave offence. If the bringing in a verdict of guilty of a minor offence when according to the direction of the Judge there should not have been a verdict of guilty of a minor offence is to be regarded as a ground for the setting aside a verdict altogether and releasing an accused it strikes me that the consequence may be direful.

We have not to deal in this case with any extravagantly erroneous verdict; if such a case should arise and have to be considered by a Bench it will no doubt be considered on its merits. The present case is at most one by a Jury having brought in a verdict which necessitated a conviction being recorded under section 392 and the section 109 instead of section 392 only; as I have shown before a verdict under section 392 coupled with section 109 was admissible in the case. The accused had a fair trial and as a result the Jury convicted him of a less grave offence than the Judge told he should on one view of the facts be convicted of.

I do not think he has any reasonable ground for complaint.

My conclusions are that there being no error of law in the points of law included in the Government Advocate's certificate, the Bench has no power to interfere with the conviction, but if it has such power it should not do so.

The result of the conclusions of the members of the Bench is that it does not interfere with the conviction or sentence.

ORMOND, J.—The Government Advocate has certified two questions for our consideration. We are concerned only with the first, viz.; whether the presiding Judge erred in accepting the verdict against the third accused, of guilty of abetment of robbery; he not having been charged with abetment but only charged along with the other accused with dacoity.

Our powers are derived from section 12 of the Lower Burma Courts Act which refers only to the questions of law, custom, construction of documents, and admissibility of evidence, which have been decided by the Judge. The presiding Judge having accepted the verdict, must be deemed to have decided that it was a legal verdict; for if the verdict was illegal, the acceptance of the verdict by the Judge and the conviction following thereon would also be illegal.

UMAR DIN v. EMPEROR.

The question before us in effect, therefore, is this; was the verdict against the third accused, of guilty of abetment of robbery, a lawful verdict, he having been charged with dacoity only?

Sections 237 and 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code do not authorise the conviction of an accused upon facts which are not stated or indicated in the charge:—Reg. v. Chand Nur and Purbhai Adamji (3) and Subbaya v. Emperor (6).

The third accused was charged with five others with committing dacoity in that they conjointly confined Maung Lun Maung and his crew, beat them and robbed them of Rs. 20 and thereby committed an offence under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code.

Section 391 of the Indian Penal Code which defines dacoity says "where the whole number of persons conjointly committing or attempting to commit a robbery, and persons present and aiding such commission or attempt, amount to five or more, every person so committing, attempting or aiding, is said to commit dacoity."

The case against the third accused as disclosed in the charge was:—that he participated in the common intention of committing the robbery; that he either took part in the actual commission of the robbery or that he was present and aided the commission of robbery. Possibly the charge would not warrant a conviction of abetment of robbery on the ground that the accused had previously instigated the robbery; but it would clearly warrant a conviction of abetment by being present and aiding in the robbery. And even if the acts constituting such abetment were sufficient to make the accused liable for the robbery under section 34, Indian Penal Code; a conviction or a verdict of guilty, of abetment of robbery, would be lawful.

The fact, therefore, that the accused had been charged with dacoity only, does not necessarily invalidate a verdict of guilty of abetment of the robbery. No reference is made by the Government Advocate in his certificate, to the facts of the case or to the learned Chief Judge's charge to the Jury. As the question before us stands, it must be assumed that—but for the fact that there was no specific charge of abetment of robbery but a charge of dacoity only, the verdict of the Jury is not open to question.

There is nothing in the certificate of the Government Advocate which would warrant us in going into the question whether the verdict was bad on any other grounds, e. g., that the law relating to abetment was not explained to the Jury, or that the verdict was not in accordance with the directions of the Judge; those are distinct questions of law and are not involved in the question before us.

I would answer the first question in the negative.

TWOMEY, J.—I agree in thinking that the Bench has no power to deal with questions which are not covered with the Government Advocate's certificate.

The first ground raises the question whether the learned Chief Judge erred in accepting the verdict that S. P. Ghosh was guilty of abetment of robbery, the offence charged being one of dacoity. The verdict was unanimous and if there is an unanimous verdict the Judge is bound to pass judgment accordingly, if it is a lawful verdict the learned Chief Judge has shown clearly that a verdict of abetment of robbery or as the Jury expressed it "aiding and abetting" the robbery was one which might lawfully be returned upon the charge as is framed in the case. I, therefore, concur in answering the reference in the negative.

The second ground is shown to be based on a misapprehension.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 722 of 1914.

April 13, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din and Mr. Justice LeRossignol.

UMAR DIN—CONVICT—PETITIONER
versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 297, 441.—"Trespass" in s. 297, meaning of—Purchaser of land containing graves, if commits trespass by destroying graves—Purchaser, if acquires title in graves—Waqf.

The word "trespass" in section 297 of the Penal Code has not the same meaning as is attached to

UMAR DIN v. EMPEROR.

"criminal trespass" in section 441 of the same Code. It denotes there a wrongful act. [p. 735, col. 1.]

An act of a person who destroys or disturbs a place of sepulchre with the intention of wounding the feelings of any person, or with the knowledge that the feelings of any person are likely to be wounded is wrongful and amounts to a "trespass" within the meaning of section 297, Indian Penal Code, no matter whether the land in which the place of sepulchre is included does or does not belong to the persons who are guilty of the acts of destruction. [p. 735, col. 1.]

The sale of a khassra number containing graves does not and in law cannot pass to a vendee any proprietary rights in the graves which exist on that land at the time of the sale and the graves remain as before wagf property and so far as they are susceptible of possession remain in the possession of the persons whose relatives are buried in them. [p. 735, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a vendee of a land which contains graves enters on the land and destroys the graves he enters not on his own property, but upon property which is wagf and which he cannot lawfully take possession of and his entry on the graves, for the purpose of destroying or levelling them is wrongful and amounts to a "trespass" on a place of sepulchre within the meaning of section 297 of Indian Penal Code. [p. 736, col. 1.]

Per LeRossignol, J.—The word "trespass" in section 297, Indian Penal Code, has not any peculiar meaning. [p. 737, col. 1.]

Petition for revision, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 12th January 1914, modifying that of the Magistrate, first Class, Lahore, dated the 29th November 1913 and convicting the petitioner.

Mr. B. Bevan Petman, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH DIN, J.—In this case the petitioner, Umar Din, was convicted by the Magistrate of an offence under section 297, Indian Penal Code, in that he had destroyed some old graves and thereby wounded the feelings of the complainant, Khair Din, and of other persons whose relations had been buried in those graves and he was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge maintained the conviction but reduced the sentence to one of fine of Rs. 300. The petitioner has filed this petition for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, urging (1) that the facts as held do not constitute an offence under section 297, Indian Penal Code, and (2) that the inference drawn as to "knowledge" on the part of the petitioner is contrary to the facts as held.

The case for the prosecution is briefly this. On or about the 26th October 1912 the petitioner dug up and levelled certain graves that existed on a part of land, Khasra No. 383 which is described in the Revenue Records as qabristan ghair mumkin and is situated close to a shrine known as the shrine of Shah Abul Maali in Lahore. The mujawars of this shrine were known in the Revenue Records as owners of Khasra No. 383 and some of them sold the land comprised in that khassra by 13 deeds of sale to the petitioner in the years 1911 and 1912. In October 1912 the petitioner proceeded to level part of Khasra No. 383 with a view to erect a building on the site and in the process of levelling the land he dug up and destroyed some graves in which the father of Khair Din, complainant, and the relatives of three other persons, Habib Ullah, Mahomed Din and Ilam Din, who have been examined as witnesses for the prosecution, had been buried. In January 1913 Khair Din lodged a complaint under section 297, Indian Penal Code, against the petitioner. After examining the complainant at some length and after taking down the petitioner's statement, Mr. Clark, Magistrate of the first Class, dismissed the complaint on the 31st January 1913 and discharged the accused. The order of discharge was set aside by the District Magistrate on the 9th April 1913, and a petition for revision of that order was dismissed by this Court on the 2nd July 1913. As a result of the further inquiry ordered by the District Magistrate, the petitioner has been convicted of an offence under section 297, Indian Penal Code, as above stated.

The questions of fact discussed by the learned Sessions Judge in his judgment are stated by him, in the following terms:—

(1). Is the land shown in Exhibit D A (i.e., the plot of land comprised in Khasra No. 383, which the petitioner is alleged to have levelled) a place of sepulchre or a place set apart as a depositary for the remains of the dead?

(2). Did appellant (i. e. present petitioner) actually remove or level any graves or disturb the bones of the dead?

UMAR DIN v. EMPEROR.

(3). Had he knowledge that the feeling of any person were likely to be wounded?

Upon these questions the learned Judge had found as follows:

(1) That the whole area A, B, C, shown in Exhibit D A constitutes one old graveyard.

(2) That the appellant (present petitioner) did disturb old graves by levelling the site even towards the south (portion C), and

(3) that the appellant had knowledge that the feelings of the persons whose relatives were buried in the graves were likely to be wounded by his acts

The learned Counsel for the petitioner has contended that, assuming the correctness of the facts found by the learned Sessions Judge (apart from the inference as to the petitioner's "knowledge" that the feelings of any persons were likely to be wounded by his acts), the petitioner has not been guilty of an offence under section 297, Indian Penal Code. The argument is briefly this. Although the plot of land which was purchased by the petitioner from the mujawars of the shrine of Shah Abul Maali is entered in the Revenue papers as a graveyard, it has not been used as a burial ground for a great many years past, because the Municipal Committee declared it to be a closed graveyard at least fifteen years ago. The land having been purchased by the petitioner from certain persons who are entered in the Revenue Records as owners thereof became the private property of the petitioner before October 1912, and assuming that the petitioner levelled, or interfered with, certain graves situated on his land, he could not be said to have committed a "trespass" on any place of sepulchre within the meaning of section 297, Indian Penal Code. The word "trespass" in section 297, has the same meaning as in the expression "criminal trespass" in section 441 of the Code, in other words, it means that the person guilty of committing "trespass" must be shown to have entered into or upon property in the possession of another. In the present case the petitioner entered upon land which belonged to himself and was in his possession, and it is incorrect to say that by entering upon his own land and by levelling it and disturbing any graves that were situated on it, he committed a "trespass" so as to bring himself within the purview of section 297, Indian Penal Code.

In support of this part of his argument the learned Counsel has relied on the meaning of the word "trespass" in the English Law, and also on the opinion of Beaman, J., in the case of Mustafa Rahim v. Motilal Chumilal (1), but, on the other hand, a contrary view has been taken in three decisions of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts which are more or less in point viz. Queen-Empress v. Subhan (2), Ram Prasad v. Emperor (3) and Jhulam Sain v. Emperor (4). With reference to the Bombay case which has been relied on by the petitioner's Counsel, it has to be observed that the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Beaman that the "trespass" contemplated in section 297, Indian Penal Code, is such a trespass as is defined by the Indian Penal Code was mere obiter dictum, for upon the facts found by the District Magistrate whose order was under revision in the High Court, and which facts were accepted by the High Court as correct, no question arose as to the interpretation to be placed upon the word "trespass" used in section 297: Mr. Justice Batchelor, who was the other member of the Division Bench that decided the Bombay case, in the course of his judgment, said at page 827:—

"It was at least incumbent on the prosecution to establish to the Magistrate's satisfaction that the place was in fact a place of sepulchre, but the evidence which they offered in that behalf was found to be wholly inconclusive. Proceeding further, the Magistrate, as I read his judgment, says that even admitting for the sake of argument that there were a few isolated and secret cases of burial in the course of many years upon this piece of property that would not be enough to constitute it a place of sepulchre within the meaning of the section."

This finding of the Magistrate was accepted by the High Court as correct, one noteworthy fact upon which that finding was based being that the land on which graves were said to have existed and been destroyed by the accused in that case was not entered as a qabristan in any public record. Upon that view of the case, it was unnecessary for the learned Judges of the High Court to consider whether the accused had been guilty of a "trespass" within the meaning of section 297, Indian Penal Code, or not; and Batchelor, J., carefully refrained from expressing any opinion on that point. This Bombay authority is not, therefore, of much help in the present case.

On the other hand, in the two Allahabad cases and in the Calcutta case above referred to the question of the true meaning of the word "trespass" as used in section 297, Indian Penal Code, was directly involved, and the view expressed by the learned Judges was that this word in section 297 has not the same meaning as in the expression "criminal trespass" which is defined in section 441, Indian Penal Code. In Queen-Empress v. Subhan (2) it was held by Knox, J. that persons who entered upon a burial place and ploughed up the graves were liable to be convicted of the offence defined by section 297 of the Indian Penal Code notwithstanding that their entry on the land was by the consent of the owner thereof. In the course of his judgment the learned Judge said:—

"The ground ploughed up was used as a burial ground and graves were as a fact disturbed. It is still, however, contended that as Subhan entered on the property with the permission of the owner, therefore, he could not be said to have committed trespass I am not prepared to construe the word 'trespass' in the present section as it is defined in the case of 'criminal trespass' under the Penal Code. The act of the petitioners was an act of injury to the place of sepulture, and it was an act which they must have known would have been likely to wound the feelings of others."

In Ram Prasad v. Emperor (3) it was held by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court that where a person entered upon a grave for the purpose of demarcating his share therein and in doing so dug up certain graves and exposed the bones of the person buried there in spite of the remonstrances of the relations of the buried persons, he was properly convicted of an offence under section 297, Indian Penal Code, and nonetheless because he happened to be part-owner of the grave. The meaning given to the word "trespass" in section 297 by Knox, J. in Queen-Empress v. Subhan (2) was accepted as correct.

In Jhulam Sain v. Emperor (4) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the erection of a shed over a visible grave belonging to the complainant's family in a disused graveyard, claimed to be private property of the trespasser, with the knowledge that the feelings of the complainant would be likely to be thereby wounded, is an offence under section 297 of the Indian Penal Code. The argument that since the land on which the complainant's mother's grave existed was the private property of the accused, the latter could not be guilty of committing a trespass on the grave was rejected by the High Court; and Richardson, J., one of the members of the Division Bench that decided the case, expressly held that the word "trespass" used in section 297, Indian Penal Code, has not the same meaning as that attached to the expression "criminal trespass" by section 441 of the Indian Penal Code. Accordingly to him, the term "trespass" in section 297 appears to mean any violent or injurious act committed in such place and with such knowledge or intention as is defined in that section. This decision of the Calcutta High Court has an important bearing upon the present case, inasmuch as there the piece of land which was claimed by the accused as his own property and on which the complainant's mother's grave existed had, under the orders of the Municipality, not been used as a burial ground for about fourteen years before the commission of the offence, and the accused had been in undisturbed possession of the land and had enjoyed the fruits of the trees growing on it. Sharaf-ud-Din, J., in the course of his judgment said at page 550:—

"The contentions on behalf of the petitioner are that the land in question is his ancestral land, that it belongs to him and is in his possession, that he is in enjoyment of the fruits of the trees standing upon it and that the land is no more a burying ground or depositary for the remains of the dead, inasmuch as it has not been used for burying purposes for a great many years. In my opinion, however, it is not necessary for the purposes of section 297 of the Indian Penal Code, that a burial ground should be in use. If it has been a burial ground and if there are visible graves in it, it becomes a depositary for the remains of the dead. . . . any act of trespass by which the feelings of the relations of the dead are wounded would certainly come under section 297 of the Indian Penal Code." These decisions of the Allahabad and the Calcutta High Courts strongly support the prosecution in this Code, and after giving the matter my most careful consideration, I am of opinion, that the meaning of the word "trespass" in section 297, Indian Penal Code, is not the same as is attached to it in the expression "criminal trespass" in section 441 of the same Code. To my mind the word "trespass" in section 297 denoted a wrongful act, and the act of a person who destroys or disturbs a place of sepulchre with the intention of wounding the feelings of any person, or with the knowledge that the feelings of any person are likely to be wounded is wrongful and amounts to a "trespass" within the meaning of the said section, no matter whether the land in which the "place of sepulchre" is included does or does not belong to the persons who are guilty of the act complained of. My view on this point is thus the same as that expressed by the learned Judges in the two Allahabad cases and in the Calcutta case above referred to and with every respect to Beaman, J., I find myself unable to accept his interpretation of the word "trespass" in section 297. The proposition contended for by the learned Counsel for the petitioner in this case would, if accepted, lead to startling results. Suppose A is entered in the Revenue Records as owner of a bigha of land of which one kanal comprises a graveyard containing a number of well-preserved graves. A sells the land to B; and shortly after the sale, the latter digs up and levels the graves and ploughs up the one kanal of graveyard with the deliberate intention of wounding the feelings of certain persons whose relatives are buried in those graves, or with the knowledge that the feelings of these persons are likely to be wounded by his act. According to the petitioner's Counsel, B having purchased from A the land including the graveyard and having thus become the owner of it, his entry of the graveyard and his act in destroying the graves with the intention or knowledge specified in section 297, Indian Penal Code, does not amount to a "trespass" as contemplated by the section and he is not guilty of an offence under that section. The reasoning would apply to a case where one of two or more joint owners of a piece of land containing a graveyard enters upon it and destroys the graves existing on the land with the intention of wounding the feelings of the other co-owners or with the knowledge that their feelings are likely to be wounded.

UMAR DIN v. EMPEROR.

It seems to me that in the present case a wholly wrong assumption underlies the argument of the petitioner's learned Counsel when he says that since the land comprised in Khasra No. 383 was owned by the petitioner by virtue of the sale-deeds executed in his favour by the mujawars of the shrine of Shah Abul Maali, his act in digging up and levelling the graves on that land did not amount to a "trespass" as contemplated by section 297. There is undoubtedly some force in the contention that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Court of Wards v. Ilahi Bakhsh (5) which relates to an "open graveyard" is not applicable to a "closed graveyard" like the one under consideration in this case, and that the learned Sessions Judge was not justified in holding that sale of Khasra No. 383 in favour of the petitioner was invalid. The question of the validity or otherwise of the sale of the land in favour of the petitioner does not arise in this case and need not be decided, and it may be assumed for the sake of argument that the petitioner became the owner of the land by virtue of the sale in his favour. But what has been overlooked by the petitioner's learned Counsel is that the sale of Khasra number in question in fact did not, and in law could not, pass to him any proprietary rights in the graves which existed on that land at the time of the sale; and the graves remained as before waqf property and so far as they were susceptible of possession, must be deemed to have remained in the possession of the persons whose relatives were buried in them. In Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. I (4th Edition) at page 406 we find the following passages:

UMAR DIN v. EMPEROR.

"A cemetery or graveyard is consecrated ground and cannot be sold or partitioned. Even lands which are not expressly dedicated but are covered by graves are regarded as consecrated and consequently inalienable and non-heritable. But when a place is found not to be a makbara (a burial-ground) but only one or two bodies are buried there, the actual spot where the bodies lie buried is consecrated."

It is clear from this passage that the actual place of sepulchre in which dead bodies are buried, as contra-distinguished from the land round about it, which is not covered by graves, cannot be the subject of a sale by one person to another: and it follows that assuming that the sale of Khasra No. 383, the whole of which apparently was not covered by graves, in favour of the petitioner was valid, he did not by virtue of that sale acquire rights of ownership in the graves which he is found to have dug up and destroyed in the process of levelling the land sold to him. When, therefore, he entered on the land actually occupied by the graves and destroyed them he entered not on his own property, but upon property which was waqf and which he could not lawfully take possession of and his entry on the graves for the purpose of destroying or levelling them was wrongful and amounted clearly to a "trespass" on a place of sepulchre within the meaning of section 297, Indian Penal Code. The matter would have been different if he had entered on the land which he had purchased and levelled a portion of it on which there were no graves at all, in that case there would have been no trespass on a place of sepulchre, properly so called and he could not then have been guilty of an offence under section 297 of the Code. The gist of the offence is the committing of trespass on a place of sepulchre with the intention or with the knowledge specified in section 297, and if these essentials are not established no offence under section 297, Indian Penal Code, is made out.

As regards the question whether the petitioner dug up and destroyed the graves as alleged by the prosecution, the Sessions Judge's finding of fact must be accepted as final as the case is before us on the revision side; but to satisfy myself as to the correctness of that finding I have carefully read the evidence in this case, and in my opinion there is overwhelming testimony of a reliable character on the record, especially the evidence of the two Municipal Commissioners, Sheikh Abdul Karim and Sheikh Karam Bakhsh and of the Municipal Engineer, Mr. Longdin, which thoroughly justifies the Sessions Judge's finding on this part of the case.

There remains the question whether the petitioner had the "knowledge" that the feelings of any person were likely to be wounded by his act in digging up and levelling the graves. This again is a question of fact, and I agree with the Sessions Judge that the requisite knowledge on the part of the petitioner has been amply established. The reports made to the Police by the Municipal Chaukidar Kasim Ali, and by the Municipal Commissioners, Sheikh Abdul Karim and Sheikh Karam Bakhsh, which are on the record (Exhibits PA, PB) read with the oral evidence of the prosecution witnesses, fully established that the destruction of graves be they old or new, in a Muhammadan graveyard is regarded by the Muhammadans as a sacrilege, and the petitioner must be presumed to have the knowledge that by such acts of desecration as he has been found to have been guilty of, the feelings of the complainant and of other persons whose relatives were buried in the graves on the land in question were likely to be wounded. The petitioner's learned Counsel filed a list of passages to be found in certain original authorities in Arabic which, according to him, lay down that if a dead body is rotten and turned into dust the site can be built upon or brought under cultivation. The passage quoted in Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, (4th Edition), page 406, 4th paragraph, contains an expression of opinion to the contrary. In the present case it is unnecessary to go into this question, for the question before us is not whether, according to some authorities on Muhammadan law the site of the grave, can or cannot under certain contingencies, be built upon or brought under cultivation; but whether, in a case like the present in which there is no proof that the dead bodies buried in the graves had turned into dust the destruction of visible graves, some of which were of pakka masonry, did not, having regard to the religious notions generally prevailing among the Muhammadans, amount to an act of desecration by which the feelings of Muhammadans were likely to be wounded. In my opinion there can be but one answer to this question, and that is that the feelings of persons in the position of the complainant and of the witnesses for the prosecution whose relatives were buried in the graves, which were dug up and levelled by the petitioners, were likely to be wounded by the acts complained of, and I have no doubt that the petitioner had knowledge that his acts would have that result.

For the foregoing reasons, I would maintain the conviction and sentence and dismiss this petition for revision.

LEROSSIGNOL, J.—With all respect, I regret I am unable to give the word “trespass” as used in section 297, Indian Penal Code, any peculiar meaning. It is an accepted principle of law that all penal Statutes must be construed strictly, and a well-established principle of interpretation that words must be interpreted in their natural sense in which they are used in other contemporaneous Statutes is a good guide.

Now in the Indian Penal Code we find a definition of criminal trespass; “trespass” is employed also in the Indian Telegraph Act, the Forest Act and the Cattle Trespass Act. In all these Statutes we find the word used to signify unauthorised entry upon the property of another. For these reasons I would hold that no person can trespass upon his own property.

However in this case the point is not of immediate importance, for I concur in my learned colleague’s view that in purchasing this graveyard, the petitioner did not acquire an unencumbered property. All that he purchased was the right of the vendors, and that right was subject to the right of relatives of those who were interred in the land sold.

It follows that I hold that the petitioner did trespass on the graves, which under the sale did not become his property. Seeing that many portions of Lahore are built on old grave-grounds, and that Muhammadan Law permits of the building upon or ploughing up of graves when the interred bodies have been reduced to dust, I think a nominal sentence might have been inflicted, but as the matter of sentence was not greatly pressed before us, and as I argue that, though petitioner had no desire to wound feelings, still he had reason to believe that his act would wound the feelings of the relatives of the buried dead, and as further it is not established that the interred bodies had been reduced to dust, I concur in the conclusion that the petition should be rejected.

Petition rejected.

CRIMINAL APPEALS NOS. 144 TO 147, 150, 151
AND 164 OF 1915.

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 149, 302—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 537—Charge, omission in—Failure of justice—Unlawful assembly—Liability of all for offence committed by some.

The specific common object of a riot need not necessarily be set out in a charge including section 149 of the Penal Code though it may be desirable to do so in a particular case. [p. 741, col. 2.]

A High Court will not interfere unless an omission in the charge has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Of the two parts of section 149 (1) the common object prosecuted and (2) the object which the members of an unlawful assembly must have known to be likely to be committed, for the application of the latter portion there must be an expectation founded upon facts known to all the members, amounting to something more than a mere speculation. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Where the whole of a party setting out from a particular town must have known that the common intention was to commit dacoity, that the party was going heavily armed, that there was every likelihood of something occurring either on their way or at the scene of dacoity to interfere with their highly criminal plans, and that their deliberate intention was to use their arms whenever necessary, either to effect the object in view or to avoid the risk of capture at any stage in the adventure, every one of them would be liable equally with others for the murders committed for which they were prepared beforehand and which they knew to be likely to occur. [p. 741, col. 2; p. 742, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 2nd February 1915, convicting the appellants.

DHIAN SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Messrs. Beechey, Manohar Lal and Vaughan, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These seven appeals may be disposed of together. They cover the cases of the following men:—

1. Appeal No. 145—Kanshi Ram, Brahman, aged 33, of Ambala District;
2. Appeal No. 146—Lal Singh, Jat, aged 32, of Ludhiana District;
3. Appeal No. 144—Dhian Singh, Jat, aged 25, of Amritsar District;
4. Appeal No. 147—Bakhshish Singh, Jat, aged 20, of Ludhiana District;
5. Appeal No. 150—Rahmat Ali, Kureshi, aged 28, of Patiala State;
6. Appeal No. 151—Jagat Singh, Jat, aged 24, of Ludhiana District;
7. Appeal No. 164—Jiwan Singh, Jat, aged 27, of Patiala State.

No two of the men come from the same village. They have all been sentenced to death on convictions under section 302, Indian Penal Code, in the Case of No. 6 (Jagat Singh) and sections 302-149 in the cases of the remaining six. Before us Nos. 1 to 3 have been represented by Counsel, No. 4 by his brother, and the other three have appealed from Jail and are not represented.

The learned Sessions Judge has given a clear and sufficiently full account of the circumstances under which these men have been convicted in respect of two murders committed in the most open manner at about 2 P. M. on the 27th November 1914, and as the main facts are for the most part admitted, there is no necessity for covering the ground again in great detail. The murders were committed on or close to the main road leading from Ferozepore Cantonment to Moga, at a spot some 8 miles from Ferozepore and 80 yards or so from a large village, Misriwala, which is practically on the road. The prosecution story is that the actual murderers were some out of a party of 15 men, who had driven out together from Ferozepore in three tumtums. Five of the appellants have never disputed the fact that they were among the party, though they deny all connection with the murders, representing themselves to be innocent travellers. Of the remaining two, Lal Singh stated in the lower Courts that he was on foot, walking either from or to Ferozepore, his statements varying as to the direction in which he was going, but before us his Counsel has accepted the fact that he was in one of the tumtums, while Jagat Singh has vaguely professed to be following the tumtums in an ekka. We have not the slightest doubt that Jagat Singh was one of the party of 15 who all got into tumtums together at Ferozepore Cantonment as described by two of the drivers, witnesses Nos. 11 and 12.

The victims were Basharat Ali, Sub-Inspector of the Ghal Police Station, distant about three miles beyond Misriwala, and Jawala Singh, zaildar. They were among a small party waiting on the road at Misriwala to meet the District Superintendent of Police who was expected from Ferozepore on his way to Ghal, and Basharat Ali was, therefore, in uniform. He did not like the looks of the men in the tumtums, as they drove by and disregarded his warning to stop. Ghulam Kadir, witness No. 5, was sent after them, and being mounted he succeeded in stopping them and bringing them back. They all got out of the tumtums and after the Sub-Inspector had said that their names would be taken and that they would be searched, several of them opened fire on him suddenly with pistols. He was shot in five places, three in the head, and these bullet wounds would probably have been fatal, but the immediate cause of his death on the spot was a series of further blows with a formidable axe. There is ample evidence that these blows were struck by Jagat Singh, and this is why he in particular is convicted of direct murder.

There was at once a scene of wild confusion, and three further shots killed the zaildar, while others of the Police party ran away or hid as best they could. One of them Fatteh Singh, witness No. 4, was armed with a pistol and fired it, and this resistance, coupled with the fact that the uproar was bringing a swarm of villagers out from Misriwala, caused the appellants' party to make off. They did so by a path leading across the fields to the Sirhind Canal, without being immediately followed. As soon, however, as the Police party recovered from the shock of this sudden attack they took sensible steps. Ghulam Kadir, witness No. 5, and Kalu Singh, witness No. 8, galloped along the road to a bridge across the canal and thence to a canal bungalow half way between the bridge and the place where the path taken by the appellants' party struck the canal, while Ida chankidar, witness No. 10, was sent driving in one of the tumtums to the Ghal Police Station three miles off to report.

From the canal bungalow Mohammad Sadiq, Head Constable, witness No. 14, rode off up the canal for about half a mile, overtook the appellants' party soon after they had crossed the canal, exchanged shots with them and followed them up towards the reeds along a railway line where nine of the party took cover, while the remaining 6 made off across the railway and escaped. Out of the nine Jiwan Singh appellant was almost at once arrested lying under a tree by the reeds, this capture being effected by witnesses Nos. 28 and 29, the latter a constable from the bungalow.

In the meanwhile Amir Din, Sub-Inspector, witness No. 15, had received the report brought by Ida to his Police Station, and promptly drove in the tumtum with the posse of Police armed with rifles towards the railway. The country side was also up and some 300 or 400 men collected round the reed jungle and a siege began, lasting apparently for some considerable time. There was a good deal of rifle and pistol firing on both sides without much apparent result, though as a fact two of the appellants' party were found later to have been shot dead, but it was only when the reeds were set on fire that the remaining six appellants were driven out of cover and caught one by one.

The above is the merest outline of the story, sufficient for our purposes, and we need only add to it by expressing our high appreciation of the courage and resource shown by the Police and the villagers in organizing so successful a pursuit and capture, special praise being due among the latter to the Zaildar Fattah Singh and the Safaidposh Ghulam Kadir, witnesses Nos. 4 and 5, for their prompt measures after the first disastrous attack on their party.

What we have first to consider is the main line of defence of the appellants, urged strongly by Counsel, to the effect that however bad the case may be as regards the two men killed among the reeds and others who succeeded in escaping, there is no attempt at proof that any of the appellants, except Jagat Singh, took an active part in the murders. No one is in a position to say that they used pistols and no weapons or cartridges were found on them when they were captured. The contention is that they should be assumed in consequence to be innocent travellers who happened to be going the same way as the real culprits, and quite by accident came to be in the same tumtums with a well-armed gang of men bent on dacoity with whom they had no connection of any sort. There are several points in the case, enumerated as follows, which make it impossible for us to accept this plausible story.

(1) The admitted fact that all seven men were recently returned emigrants from America and China, taken with the remarkable evidence of the accomplice Jawala Singh, witness No. 31, who unlike them belongs to the Ferozepore District, conclusively establishes association. The appellants Kanshi Ram, Rahmat Ali and Jiwan Singh were fellow-passengers with him to India and all these landed in Calcutta together on or about the 29th November. We need not discuss his long story. It appears to us trustworthy in its main points as indicating a general scheme of rebellion and robbery concocted in foreign parts, in which he himself, one Nidhan Singh (still at large), and one of the men shot in the reeds named Dhian Singh, alias Nidhan Singh, were taking leading parts. All the appellants except Bakhshish Singh were evidently well known to him and working in concert with him. He was probably giving the benefit of his local knowledge in getting all these men collected at Ferozepore with criminal intent, and whether he actually suggested it or not there is no reason for doubting that the immediate object of the whole party was an attack on Moga Tahsil and sub-treasury about 18 miles further on the road beyond Misriwala.

(2) The evidence of the tumtum drivers, witnesses Nos. 11 and 12, is conclusive that they did not pick up the appellants as casual fares going in the same direction. The whole party chartered the vehicles together, one man bargaining for the lot. They insisted on overloading the tumtums and on dashing past the Police when attempts were made to stop them at both Ferozepore and Misriwala.

(3) The various explanations given by the appellants of their reasons for driving towards Ferozeshah (Pheru Shahr) at the same time are thoroughly unsatisfactory. The coincidence that these newly returned emigrants belonging to Ambala, Ludhiana, Patiala and Amritsar should suddenly meet at Ferozepore and that many of them should be seized with a desire to visit the battlefield and monument at Ferozeshah is too remarkable to be taken at its face value.

(4) The appellants, if innocent of knowledge of their fellow travellers, would not have quietly looked on while murders were committed. They would naturally have come to the rescue of the relatively small Police party or at any rate have actively dissociated themselves from the attackers, instead of cheering them on as they are shown by the evidence to have done.

(5) Unless the appellants and the murderers were banded together why should the former have gone off with the latter in a body? Their natural course was to either stay where they were and protest that they had nothing to do with the affair, or if they were too scared for that, to disperse in all directions. Their keeping with the murderers is in itself conclusive of their close association with them, and their intimate knowledge of the schemes on which their leaders were embarking with them may be safely assumed.

The exhibits in the case have been produced before us and we regard them as a very important element in the case, as tending to disprove the defence theory. The one automatic pistol found close to the body of Dhian Singh among the reeds, taken with the fact that he had 49 cartridges on him, is conclusive enough that he was one of the men so armed. Counsel made a strong point of the fact that no other fire-arms have been traced, and though the record suggests at page 147 that Dhian Singh had a revolver as well, we may assume that this is a mistake and that the fact is as stated. We cannot, however, allow the inference that because others of the party armed with pistols made good their escape, no one among the appellants (except Jagat Singh) should be considered to have come prepared for violence. The bundle of five chhavi-heads, Exhibits 4 to 8, found in the tuntum of Phangan, witness No. 11, all quite new and very sharp, proves that at least that number of men were well-armed in addition to those carrying pistols, while Jagat Singh's axe, Exhibit 3 (found in the reeds), is not an ordinary villager's implement. The head is small, but solidly made and firmly screwed on with a nut at the back to a long and very heavy handle, making it almost as dangerous a weapon as a chhavi and undoubtedly intended for use in the same way. Altogether there must have been enough dangerous weapons to go round nearly the whole party of 15, while it is possible that others may have been secreted in the reeds before the appellants were compelled by fire to leave their hiding place.

The two new tools, Exhibits 10 and 11, found in the same tuntum and described by the Sessions Judge as hack saws, are large size ribbon saws, marked as made in Germany, with detachable frames on the principle of the common fretwork saw so as to admit of being unscrewed and inserted between iron bars. We are satisfied that practically any iron bars or padlocks which burglars would be likely to encounter could be sawn through with these powerful tools, while the evidence of witness No. 17, to whose shop in Lahore they were easily traced as having been sold about the time of this affair, proves that the purchaser had in addition negotiated unsuccessfully for another expensive tool for dealing with screws. The saws could not possibly be wanted by ordinary peaceful villagers, who would not even understand how to adjust and use them, and they materially strengthen the prosecution theory that the whole gang of men were bent on attacking the Moga sub-treasury. That was not the sort of enterprise to be undertaken with any hope of success by a small body of six or eight men, so that there is additional ground for discrediting the defence story that the appellants were mere chance passengers in the tuntums, who had the bad luck to be travelling the same way as the murderers though with independent and harmless objects of their own. Our conclusion on this part of the case is that though evidence is wanting to prove that the appellants, other than Jagat Singh, took the primary part in the murders, they and all other members of the whole party of 15 were banded together with a common object, well knowing that any form of desperate violence would be freely used in order to achieve it and to escape capture in case of resistance. The sudden attack on the Police party at Misriwala was an unpremeditated incident in their plans, rendered necessary by the certainty that their threatened search must lead to their detection as a gang of armed dacoits. They were, however, prepared for any incident of the kind, if necessary, in pursuit of their plans.

The question what offence has actually been committed by the appellants other than Jagat Singh, whose conviction under section 302, Indian Penal Code, is clear enough, was not very carefully considered by the Sessions Judge, and their conviction in general terms under section 302, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, leaves something to be desired in point of precision. He has taken these two sections as covering generally the first four charges against the appellants, which deal separately with the murder and abetment of murder of each of the two men killed at Misriwala, and has not discussed the question of abetment at all.

Counsel has made a good deal of this indefiniteness as to the specific offences of which the appellants have been convicted and has also laid stress upon the omission in the charges as drawn to set out the precise common object which the rioters were alleged to have in view, relying in particular on the ruling of Kudrutullah v. Emperor (1) in support of his contention that the omission is a fatal defect.

So far as concerns the form of the charges, we consider that section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code amply covers any technical deficiencies there may have been in this case, and we are satisfied that the appellants could have been under no misapprehension of the nature of the offences charged against them. With all due respect we feel unable to follow the learned Judges of the High Court of Calcutta in their conclusion that the specific common object of a riot must necessarily be set out in a charge including section 149, Indian Penal Code. We can easily understand that it may be desirable to do so in a particular case, but we are not prepared to go further and lay down any general proposition of law on the point, and we do not consider it incumbent on us to do more than ascertain what the law requires, namely, whether an omission in the charge has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In the case before us we are clear upon this essential point that there has been no such failure of justice.

So far as rulings go, there has been a more exhaustive discussion of section 149, Indian Penal Code, in Madat Khan v. Empress (2), dealing with the two parts of the section covering (1) the common object prosecuted and (2) the object which the members of an unlawful assembly must have known to be likely to be committed. It was there pointed out that for the latter portion of the section, which is more directly applicable to the facts now before us, there must be an expectation founded upon facts known to all the members, amounting to something more than a mere speculation. We have no sort of doubt that this condition was amply fulfilled in the present case. The whole of the party which set out together from Ferozepore must have known that the common intention was to commit dacoity, that the party was going heavily armed, that there was every likelihood of something occurring either on their way or at the scene of dacoity to interfere with their highly criminal plans, and that their deliberate intention was to use their arms, whenever necessary, either to effect the object in view or to avoid the risk of capture at any stage in the adventure.

In other words, the party had made up their minds before they started to stick at nothing in the way of violence which would secure their success and safety. Looking at the whole enterprise in this light, each member of the party is equally liable for the fatal consequences of their stoppage on suspicion while still on the road. It would not be a mere speculation that they might be stopped. They would all know that such stoppage was quite likely and would effectually wreck their nefarious schemes unless resisted with desperate violence. We must hold, therefore, that the appellants were liable equally with others who escaped for both the murders which occurred, as being a contingency for which they were prepared beforehand and which they knew to be likely to occur. The omission to set all this out in the charges (1) and (3) cannot have misled the appellants in any way in respect of the defence which they were able to put forward, and we think that it would be directly opposed to law to hold that the omission constitutes a fatal defect.

The learned Government Advocate has also correctly pointed out that apart from that construction put by us on the law bearing on these matters in connection with charges (1) and (3), there is a good deal of evidence to establish abetment by instigation by all members of the party in respect of the second murder, that of the Zai'dar Jawala Singh. The first murder, of the Sub-Inspector, might conceivably be treated as a sudden outbreak by individual members of the party, not directly abetted by the rest except by way of conspiracy and aid, but the second was a very different matter. In our minds there is force in this argument. It is not, in the case of the second murder, necessary that there should be definite evidence of the extent to which each of the appellants individually instigated the attack on Jawala Singh. Such evidence could not possibly be given, considering the general confusion after the sudden shooting at the Sub-Inspector. Any person present who attempted to give more than a general account of what happened would certainly be drawing on his imagination, but it is clear enough that the whole of the appellants' party cheered each other on to further desperate violence as a means of avoiding capture, and only departed in a body when they found the Misriwala villagers coming out in force to help the Police. We cannot allow the contention of Counsel that the cries of "maro, maro" meant only that the Police party should be beaten, not killed. We take it that there was undoubted instigation to kill indiscriminately so far as might be necessary to overawe the Police party, and that the history of the affair justifies a finding that the appellants are further liable as abettors in at least the murder of Jawala Singh.

We accordingly sum up this discussion of the legal-aspects of the case by holding that—

(1) in respect of Basharat Ali's murder all the appellants are guilty equally with the actual murderers under sections 302/149, Indian Penal Code;

(2) in respect of Jawala Singh's murder they are similarly guilty under section 302/149, with the addition that they are also guilty as abettors under section 109 and 111, though possibly under section 114;

(3) the appellant Jagat Singh in particular directly committed murder, and the remaining appellants are equally guilty of murder under the sections quoted.

Turning now to the cases of each appellant separately, it is only necessary to add a few words of explanation about them.

1. Kanshi Ram, Brahmin, aged 33, had recently returned from America. He gives a vague account of his wanderings from 3rd November onwards through many districts, ending up at Ferozepore, and professes to have intended returning home to Ambala from there. He says that he missed a train and so thought he would like to drive out to Ferozeshah to see the place, meaning to go on from there by train in the evening. We do not believe this story, and we have no doubt that he was one of the leading conspirators, actively associated both with Jawala Singh, the accomplice, witness No. 31, and with the man Dhian Singh on whose body the incriminating pamphlet was found.

2. Lal Singh, Jat, aged 32, represented that he had been originally for four years in the army, and that latterly he had been for a year in Shanghai, serving 10 months in the Police there. We have already noticed his plea that he was walking on foot and not one of the party in the tumtums, but as he varied his story about the direction in which he was going, whether towards Ferozeshah or back to Ferozepore, we cannot accept his bare assertions.

3. Dhian Singh, Jat, aged 35, says that he returned from China on the 11th November, and that he was on his way to Ferozepore to see the scene of the battle-fled. Very little can be made of his story.

GIRISH CHANDRA RAY v. SARAT CHANDRA SINGH.

4. Bakhshish Singh, Jat, aged 20, has pleaded extreme youth, putting his age at 16. This is quite impossible, as he admits two years' residence in the Malay States and Hongkong. For the rest his only explanation is that he was on his way to Ferozeshah to enlist in the army.

5. Rahmat Ali, Kureshi, aged 28, the only Musalman, among the appellants says that he returned to India on the 1st November after eight years' absence in Manilla. He professes to have been on his way to Ghal to see a friend, and says that he was caught as a suspicious stranger at Misriwala half an hour after the murders. This is disproved by witness No. 26, and there is no doubt that his capture was really effected as he came out from the reeds where all the fugitives were hiding.

6. Jagat Singh, Jat, aged 24, says that he returned to India from China in September, and thence to Rangoon, returning to Calcutta on the 15th November. He professes to have been following the tuntum party in an ekka on his way to Ferozeshah to join a recruiting party with a view to enlistment. His story is very vague and may be safely disbelieved. We have no doubt that he took a leading part in the killing of Basharat Ali.

7. Jiwan Singh, Jat, aged 27, states that he returned to India on the 29th October after being ten years away in Shanghai and Manilla. He professes to have been returning home from Ferozepore and to have been arrested as an innocent traveller, because he declined to allow his name to be given as a witness after the murders. He does not say where he was arrested, and it is clear from the evidence of witnesses Nos. 28 and 29 that he was really caught outside the reeds, being the first of the appellants to surrender there.

The appellants have only themselves to blame for the brevity with which these explanations are given. With the exception of Rahmat Ali, they took up a defiant attitude in the Committing Magistrate's Court and confined themselves to putting in vaguely worded written statements unsupported by evidence. We can place no reliance on any of their explanations and must treat all the appellants alike as active members of the party, in view of the fact that all held together after the murders. We cannot distinguish the case of any one of them and we hold that they were all rightly sentenced to death. We accordingly confirm all the capital sentences.

The circumstances of the case are such that we decline to interfere with the further sentences of forfeiture of property under section 62, Indian Penal Code. We are informed that Kanshi Ram is a well-to-do man with large sums at his credit in Bank deposits in India. There is no evidence on record to support this and we do not know how far it may be true. His father was present before us and stated that during Kanshi Ram's 12 years' absence from India he contributed nothing to the support of his wife or children, so that if he has any large sum of money at command, the inference would be that he was one of the treasurers of the funds with which these returning emigrants proposed to carry out their schemes, and the money may well be confiscated to Government. There is nothing to indicate what property may be in the possession of the other appellants besides the small sums found on their persons, and in their cases we understand that the forfeiture will be for the most part nominal, so that the orders may stand as a deterrent even if they do not imply much in respect of their ancestral land, if any. [Sadhu Singh v. Secretary of State for India (3).]

The whole of the appeals are dismissed.

Criminal revision against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Comilla, dated the 18th April 1914.

Mr. Jacob (with him Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Jatindra Mohan Ghose), for the Petitioner.

Mr. E. H. Monnier, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners applied to this Court for a Rule to quash the proceedings now pending against them and, on their application, we ordered, on the 18th of May last, that a copy of the petition should be forwarded to the District Magistrate with a request that he should state whether and in what sense Babu Khirode Lal Mukherjee was the successor-in-office of Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose. A long letter was received by this Court from the Magistrate giving us all information tending to show that Babu Khirode Lal Mukherjee was the successor-in-office of Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose. Then we issued the present Rule, on the 10th of June, on the District Magistrate and on the opposite party, to show cause why the proceedings preliminary to the granting of sanction should not be quashed on the ground that Babu Khirode Lal Mukherjee was not the successor-in-office of Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose.

Now, the whole matter has been argued before us. The case stands thus. There was a case under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code in which a certain document, namely, a pottah was used by the petitioners; and the present proceedings are to determine whether sanction should or should not be given for the prosecution of the petitioners for their use of that pottah, which is alleged to be a forged document, as a genuine document in the said case. Now, that case was disposed of by Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose. The application for sanction was put in before Babu Khirode Lal Mukherjee. The question is whether Babu Khirode Lal Mukherjee is the successor-in-office of Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose or not. On behalf of the opposite party a lengthy argument has been placed before us in order to show that Babu Khirode Lal Mukherjee is the successor-in-office of Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose. We are, however, of opinion that in the present case Babu Khirode Lal Mukherjee cannot be said to be the representative-in-office of Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose. In the case of Mohesh Chandra Saha v. Emperor (1), it has been held that where there are many Deputy Magistrates and one of them is transferred, the Deputy Magistrate who comes to fill the gap is not the successor-in-office of the Deputy Magistrate who has been transferred. Under the circumstances we hold that Babu Khirode Lal Mukherjee is not the proper officer to grant sanction for the prosecution of the petitioners in respect of their use of the document in the proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code before Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose.

Now, the present proceedings are under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Under clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) of that section the proper Court to give sanction is either the Court where the offence is said to have been committed or the Court to which such Court is subordinate. Sub-section (7) of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code clearly lays down that "for the purpose of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie." The proceedings in the course of which the offence is said to have been committed were before Babu Harendra Kumar Ghose. It is not for us to do more than point out the law on the subject, and it is for the parties, if they are so advised, to act under the sub-sections and clauses to which we have referred. The Rule is, therefore, made absolute and the proceedings quashed.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437
—Further inquiry—Notice.

In re KANAKASABHAI.

Where a man has been discharged after full inquiry by a competent Court, a Revisional Court will exercise proper discretion in allowing him an opportunity of showing cause before ordering a further inquiry or before directing a re-opening of the case, it being a principle of British Criminal Law that an order to a man's prejudice should not be made without due notice to him.

Where a Court is given a discretion, it is bound to exercise it judicially and fairly.

Application to revise the order of the Sessions Judge, Tenasserim Division, passed under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directing a further inquiry by the District Magistrate, Thaton, in a case in which petitioner was discharged by the Headquarters Magistrate, Thaton.

Mr. Campagnac, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—On 27th February 1914 one Grote, employed by the Burma Rice and Trading Company, lodged information against the applicant of criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 2,500. After investigation the case was thrown out as being of a civil nature. Subsequently on 15th April Mahomed Sayed, a sub-broker of the same Company, to whom the money was advanced by them, filed a complaint against the applicant. After an exhaustive inquiry, the Magistrate on 1st July discharged the applicant. On 20th July complainant's lawyer filed a lengthy application to the Sessions Judge, to order further inquiry. He was heard and on 14th October further inquiry was ordered without applicant having been given any opportunity of showing cause against it. He now seeks to get it reversed.

Subject to section 439 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, no Court is bound to hear any party when exercising revisional powers. Nor does section 437, like sections 436 and 439, compel the issue of a notice to the accused. But in these, as in all cases where a Court is given a discretion, it is bound to exercise it judicially and fairly. It is a principle of British Criminal Law that an order to a man's prejudice should not be made without due notice to him. There is abundant authority that where a man has been discharged after full inquiry by a competent Court, a Revisional Court will exercise a proper discretion in allowing him an opportunity of showing cause, before directing the case against him to be re-opened. More especially in cases like the present, when the evidence is voluminous and by no means wholly consistent and when the nature of the inferences to be drawn is so important, one would expect a Court to welcome the fullest comment and explanation on both sides to assist it in reaching a sound decision. The omission to hear the accused throws upon this Court a large part of what is properly the duty of the Court below, namely, to consider the matter from the accused's point of view as well as from that of the prosecution. The frequency with which instances of such omission come before this Court indicates the need for amending section 437 in clear and unmistakable terms, and it is to be hoped that this will ere long be done. The present case, however, is far different, inasmuch as the prosecution was heard and the defence was not. I feel no doubt whatever that no such ex parte hearing against an order of discharge is contemplated by section 440, Criminal Procedure Code, it being contrary to principles of common fairness.

I have now heard both sides and cannot but feel that if the Sessions Judge had done the same, he would not have passed the order he did.

Messrs. K. Ramachandran and T. Gopala Desikachary, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—In this case, an application was made to me on 14th. September 1915 while I was sitting in the Admission Court to admit a criminal revision petition and to release the accused on bail. I granted both the prayers. Immediately after and before the order was transcribed, it was brought to my notice that Sir William Ayling, J., had the matter before him some days back and that he dismissed the petition. This was not brought to my notice as it ought to have been when I passed orders. I am asked to treat the dismissal by Ayling, J., as one for default of appearance. One of the Vakils was present before the learned Judge and though he says he represented his inability to go on with the case as the papers were with the other Vakil, I see no reason to think that Ayling, J., did not deal with the petition on its merits. The decision in Ranga Row v. Emperor (1) shows that the High Court has no power to restore a petition once dismissed for default. It is argued that that decision does not preclude the filing of a fresh petition for the same relief. Although the principle of res judicata is not applicable to criminal cases, I think that on grounds of justice and equity, Courts should discourage the agitation of the same matter once again before another Judge. If the dismissed petition cannot be restored, there is stronger ground for holding that a new petition will not lie. There has been no considered decision on the question. The fact that notice was issued in Criminal Revision Case No. 126 of 1914 on a similar application is not an indication that the learned Judge came to the conclusion that such a petition can be entertained. Moreover, I think that in this case Ayling, J., must be deemed to have disposed of the case on the merits. I, therefore, refuse to admit the petition and to grant bail.

The petitions are dismissed.

Press Act (I of 1910), s. 4 (1)—Order made by Governor-General in Council in Delhi—Local Government—Jurisdiction of High Court of Calcutta.

The Governor-General in Council in pursuance of section 4 (1) of the Press Act, 1910, declared all copies of the issue of the newspaper called The Comrade bearing the date the 26th of September 1914 and published in Delhi, wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty. This order was served on the person concerned. A recipient of a copy of the newspaper in Calcutta applied to the High Court to have the order of forfeiture set aside:

Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the order made by an authority exercising at Delhi the powers of a Local Government. [p. 747, col. 1.]

Mr. B. Chakravarti, for the Petitioner.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—Without in any way assenting to the proposition that Abul Kalam Azad is a person having an interest in any property in respect of which the order of forfeiture has been made and so entitled to come before any High Court under section 17 of the Indian Press Act of 1910, it appears to me that there is another and absolutely fatal objection to this application. It appears, though the petition is not in order on this point, that on 2nd November 1914 the Governor General in Council in pursuance of section 4 (1) of the Press Act, 1910, declared the security of Rs. 2,000 deposited in respect of "The Comrade and the Hamdard Press, Kucha-i-Chelan, Delhi" and all copies of the issue of the newspaper called the The Comrade, bearing the date the 26th of September 1914, wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty and this order was served on the person concerned, presumably the keeper of the printing press, on the 3rd of November 1914. The Governor-General in Council in so acting was exercising a power conferred under the Delhi Laws Act of 1912, so that for the purposes of this application we must treat the order as though made by a Local Government under the Indian Press Act. The complaint of the petitioner is that 'he as a recipient' of a copy of The Comrade in exchange for his newspaper Al Hilal became the owner of that newspaper. I suppose he means of a copy of the newspaper and that he held possession thereof. He appears to consider that the order of forfeiture affects him in Bengal. But whether it does or does not—a point on which I express no opinion—it was made by the local authority I have described, and not by the Government of Bengal. There has been no order made by the Government of Bengal and no action by it or by any of its officers of which the petitioner can complain. According to the scheme of the Indian Press Act and its several provisions, it is abundantly clear that we have no jurisdiction in this case. Moreover, our rules only provide for a notice being served on the Government of Bengal. We are, however, asked to interfere with an order made by an authority exercising at Delhi the powers of a Local Government, without having that authority before us, and without having any means of compelling its attendance.

It is not as though the petitioner has no remedy. There is a High Court to which he could have gone, and, therefore, it cannot be said that justice is denied him by our holding, as we do, that we have no jurisdiction to interfere in this case.

The application is, therefore, dismissed.

MOHABLI alias MUBBA AND ANOTHER—

CONVICTS—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT—RESPONDENT.

Conviction—First report—Story told in Court—Striking discrepancies, effect of.

Where there are striking discrepancies between the first report and the story told by prosecution witnesses in Court, a conviction cannot be maintained.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Jhang, dated the 20th January 1915, affirming that of the Magistrate, second Class, Chiniot, dated the 22nd December 1914, convicting the petitioners.

ORDER.—(April 10th, 1915.)—There are certainly striking discrepancies between the first report and the story told in Court, e. g., the names in the report of the persons said to have been seen going along with the animals are not the three accused's names, and again the story in the first report of Alwal and another going security for the return of the missing buffaloes has been altered into a tale that two of the accused handed over two of their own buffaloes as security, Alwal and the other surety being dropped. These things throw some doubt on the prosecution.

Notice to District Magistrate and complainant: bail may be taken to satisfaction of District Magistrate.

Mr. Tag-ud-Din, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The reasons given by me in my admitting order of 10th April for issuing notice and allowing bail prove on further examination fully justified. It seems to me impossible to maintain the convictions of the accused in the face of the extraordinary changes the case for the Crown has undergone since the first report was made. In that we find that, when the trackers met Alwal, he said he had seen Miava, Lala and Sardara going alone with the stolen buffaloes, while in Court he names Samandi, Mubba, and Sardara (the three accused). It is surprising that he should not have been questioned as to this and that the lower Courts should have overlooked this striking circumstance. Then in the first report the story of the measures for amicable recovery of the stolen animals differs widely and irreconcilably from the story told in Court. The former story is that Alwal and another stood security for its return, while in Court there is a tale of the surrender of two of accused's own buffaloes which I may note accused say were taken from them by force. No doubt the trackers went up to accused's house, but this is not conclusive, and the rest of the case against the accused must be wholly rejected. For these reasons I allow this petition and set aside convictions and sentences and acquit both petitioners.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional first Class Magistrate of Sankari Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 31 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the Stationary second Class Magistrate of Omalur, in Calendar Case No. 27 of 1914.

Mr. N. S. Rangasawmi Aiyangar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Crown.

ORDER.—It is contended that because the lower Appellate Court observed in the judgment, "with regard to possession the balance of evidence appears to be in favour of the appellants," this was tantamount to a finding that the appellants were in possession at the date of the offence. I think the Deputy Magistrate was possibly referring only to the probability of the crop having been grown by the appellants.

It is unquestionable that when the appellants came in an armed body and attempted to prevent the respondents' party from cutting and carrying away the produce, actual possession must have been with the respondents' party. In this respect the facts differ from those to which the law as to the right of persons in possession to maintain their actual enjoyment undisturbed was applied in the decisions reported as Ram Khelawan Singh v. Emperor (1) and Silajit Mahoto v. Emperor (2). The view taken by the Sub-Magistrate in paragraph No. 10 of his judgment is sound and the convictions so far as they have been upheld in appeal were correct.

The order of the Appellate Court requiring the appellants to give security for keeping the peace appears to be now unnecessary, seeing that by agreement they have been since placed in enjoyment of the land. I direct it to be set aside. In other respects the petition is dismissed.

The persons seriously obstructing, insulting and jostling a process-server in the execution of his duty, are guilty of the offence under section 186, Indian Penal Code. [p. 749, col. 1.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Gujranwala, with his No. 264, dated the 12th March 1915, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

FACTS.—The accused on conviction by Pandit Pars Ram, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the first Class in the Gujranwala District, were sentenced by order dated 22nd September 1914, under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code, to a fine of Rs. 20 each.

of the house against the attaching officer is not voluntary obstruction within the meaning of section 186, Indian Penal Code, and I do not think mere abuse by Kanshi Ram would amount to this offence. Kanshi Ram was probably justified in objecting to the attachment of property which was not known to be the separate property of Musammatt Jatto, see Prabh Dyal v. Emperor (2). Resistance to public authority ought not to be encouraged, but I do not think the Magistrate's finding can be supported on the evidence. He seems to think that the fact that the peon came away unsuccessful is sufficient indication that he was improperly resisted. I forward the proceedings to the Chief Court with a recommendation that the conviction and sentence be set aside.

Lala Hukm Chand, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—I see no reason whatever for interference, as there is ample evidence to support the prosecution to the effect that the process-server was seriously obstructed, insulted and jostled in the execution of his duty and that Kanshi Ram and Musammatt Jatto took an active part in these proceedings.

I decline to take any action.

To justify a conviction under section 339 of the Indian Penal Code a Court should find that the complainant had a right to proceed along the path and that he was obstructed by the accused from walking over it.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The judgment of the Appellate Court is defective. To justify the conviction it must be found (1) that prosecution witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 had a right to proceed along the path, (2) that they were obstructed from doing so, within the meaning of section 339 of the Indian Penal Code.

As regards the former the Magistrate merely calls it a mamul path—a very ambiguous phrase. As regards the obstruction he only refers to the path having been ploughed up. This would not in itself prevent people from walking over it. There is nothing to show whether he accepts the story of the use of physical force given by Prosecution Witness No. 1.

The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is set aside and he is directed to restore the appeal to his file, re-hear it and dispose of it according to law.

acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Sessions Court of Guntur Division, in Sessions Case No. 7 of 1915.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Exhibit F even according to the defence is a forged document, as the defence was that the date "2nd October 1910" was dishonestly altered into 22nd October 1910 through the machinations of the prosecution 9th witness, in whose house the 1st accused alleges that he had left it for safe custody.

That Exhibit F was used by the 1st accused (respondent in this appeal) in the suit brought by him on it is clear. Unless the date "22nd October 1910" could be established for the pro-note, his suit brought on 22nd October 1913 would be barred.

It is impossible to believe his statement that he did not know of the alteration when he gave it to his Vakil (P. W. No. 2) to file a suit on the 21st October 1913. The learned Sessions Judge rightly disbelieved the defence story that prosecution 9th witness altered the date in collusion with prosecution 1st witness without the 1st accused's knowledge.

Though there may be no proof that Exhibit F was not executed by the deceased Pentareddi, part of the document (as it stands) was made with the intention of causing it to be believed that it was made "at a time at which" it was not really made and the 1st accused used it knowing it to be such a forged document. He is, therefore, clearly, guilty under section 471, Indian Penal Code, though there is not sufficient evidence to find him guilty under section 467 (the other count under which he was charged in the Sessions Court).

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and convict the 1st accused under section 471, Indian Penal Code.

As regards the sentence, there is nothing to show that the 1st accused is a confirmed criminal and his having become afraid to appear in Court and prosecute the suit brought on Exhibit F (which suit was dismissed for default) rather indicates the contrary.

I think that a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment might be held to be not inadequate in this case.

I would, therefore, sentence the 1st accused to two years' rigorous imprisonment, setting aside the acquittal.

PHILLIPS, J.—I agree, although I think the sentence is somewhat lenient considering that the serious offence of forgery is extremely frequent and rarely detected Madras District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884), ss. 103, 111, 147, 209, 218, 269—"Toll-gate kist," if tax—Non-payment of toll-gate kist—Prosecution, liability for.

A "toll-gate kist" is not an amount due on account of any tax within the meaning of section 103 of the District Municipalities Act, but it "is money due under a contract" dealt with in section 92, the non-payment of which is not penalized under section 269 of the District Municipalities Act. A prosecution for such non-payment will not, therefore, lie under section 111 of the Act. [p. 751, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Bench Court of Anakapalli, in Summary Trial No. 185 of 1915.

FACTS.—The petitioner was the toll gate contractor of Anakapalli Municipality for 1914-1915. He made default in payment of the contract amount to the extent of Rs. 300. The Municipality issued distress warrant and initiated criminal proceedings under sections 103 and 111 of the District Municipalities Act. The Bench Magistrates of Anakapalli convicted and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50 and directed him also to pay the contract amount. Hence this revision petition against the order of the Bench Magistrates.

In re SITHAYA NAIK.

Mr. B. Narasimha Rao, for the Petitioner, contended that the conviction was unsustainable, as it was not the amount due under any of the provisions of the District Municipalities Act.

The Public Prosecutor, argued contra.

ORDER.—The petitioner was a toll-gate contractor under the Anapalli Municipality. He has been prosecuted under section 103 and convicted under section 111 of the District Municipalities Act in consequence of his failure to pay what is called in the complaint “the toll-gate kist” for the second half of 1914-1915. This “toll-gate kist” is in fact the amount due to the Municipality from the petitioner, to whom the right of collection has been farmed out by the Municipal Council under section 92 of the Act.

The only question is whether it is an “amount due on account of any tax” within the meaning of section 103. On the face of it it is certainly not so, but the learned Public Prosecutor relies on section 269 which authorises the Municipal Council to collect certain sums due to them as if they were taxes. The suit amount does not, however, seem to fall under any of the headings dealt with in section 269. It cannot, in my opinion, be properly described as rent. It is a payment due under a contract. But the section only refers to contracts made under sections 147, 209 and, 218 not to contracts under section 92.

In my opinion the petitioner was not liable to prosecution for failure to pay amounts due by him under the toll-gate contract. I set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

Petition allowed; Conviction set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 471—Forged document mentioned in another document—Handwriting expert, evidence of—Comparison, when to be made in Court.

Where in order to support a false claim, a forged document is so mentioned in another document that it can be easily identified, it constitutes the offence of “using a forged document within the meaning of section 471 of the Indian Penal Code.”

To make the evidence of a handwriting expert admissible, it is not necessary that the handwriting should be actually compared in Court but it is enough if the documents admittedly in accused’s handwriting are shown to him in open Court and he expresses his opinion thereon.

Suresh Chandra Sanyal v. Emperor, 14 Ind. Cas. 753; 16 C. W. N. 812; 13 Cr. L. J. 289; 39 C. 606, referred to.

Mr. L. S. Veeraraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. H. Hakim, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—Exhibit C has been clearly proved to be a forgery by the evidence to which the Sessions Judge has referred. This being so, there is no reason to assume that when the accused in Exhibit B spoke of the settlement of the claim under the decree and of satisfaction being recorded by the Court he was referring to anything else but Exhibit C. This use of Exhibit C to support a false claim did, in our opinion, constitute an offence under section 471, Indian Penal Code. It is urged that the Sessions Judge was not entitled to rely on the evidence of the handwriting expert, because the processes by which the handwritings were compared were not performed in open Court; but we do not consider that any such objection as was raised in Suresh Chandra Sanyal v. Emperor (1) can be supported when, as here, there are examples of the writer’s handwriting either proved or admitted to be genuine which can be used as standards of comparison and when the documents were shown to the expert in open Court and he pronounced his opinion thereon.

Another objection has been taken to the alteration of the charge. The charge as amended was based on evidence which was before the Committing Magistrate and the accused, therefore, could not reasonably plead that he was prejudiced by the correction of the date.

The appeal is dismissed and the conviction and sentence are confirmed.

RESPONDENT.

Public place—"Place of public resort," meaning of—Madras City Police Act (III of 1888), s. 75.

A legal right of access by the public is not necessary to constitute a public place. A public place is one where the public go, no matter whether they have a right to go or not.

Reg. v. Wellard, 14 Q. B. D. 63; 54 L. J. M. C. 14; 51 L. T. 604; 33 W. R. 156; 15 Cox. C. C. 559; 49 J. P. 296; Kitson v. Ashe, (1899) 1 Q. B. 425; 68 L. J. Q. B. 286; 80 L. T. 323; 63 J. P. 325; 19 Cox. C. C. 257; 15 T. L. R. 172, followed.

The harbour premises which respectable people and other people who have business are permitted to enter, are "places of public resort" within the meaning of section 75 of the Madras City Police Act.

Appeal, under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid accused by the Third Presidency Magistrate, Georgetown, Madras, in Calendar Case No. 6575 of 1915 on his file.

FACTS.—The accused was charged by the Police for an offence under section 75 of the Madras City Police Act for disorderly behaviour. The Presidency Magistrate acquitted him, on the ground that the harbour is not "a place of public resort" within the meaning of section 75 of Act III of 1888. The Government appealed against the order of acquittal.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Government:—The harbour is a place of public resort within the meaning of section 75 of the Madras City Police Act.

If the public are allowed to go and in fact go there, it is a place of public resort within the meaning of that section, no matter whether they have a legal right to go there or not.

JUDGMENT.—The accused in this case was prosecuted for disorderly behaviour in a place of public resort (to wit, the grounds of the Madras Harbour), an offence under section 75 of the Madras City Police Act. He has been acquitted on the ground that the harbour premises do not constitute a place of public resort.

In our opinion the Presidency Magistrate has taken too narrow a view of the law. It is true that the by-laws framed under the Port Trust Act provide for prosecution as trespassers of persons who enter on the harbour premises without having business there or with the ships lying in the harbour: and from the Magistrate's judgment it appears that such people (as he says, mainly coolies, or up-country visitors) are actually prosecuted before him. But it is perfectly clear from the statement of objects and reasons for the amended by-laws printed in G. O. No. 341, Marine, dated 22nd October 1912, that By-law 22 which provides for the exclusion of the general public, was not intended to be enforced against respectable people. The trustees say:—

"We cannot pretend to keep respectable people entirely out of our premises during working hours, simply because it would be intolerable for them to be perpetually questioned. But at least we may say that they cannot claim admission, and this represents the position we take up better than the old words, will not be admitted."

We see no reason to doubt that the by-laws have been worked in principle on these lines; and that respectable members of the public have been freely allowed to enter the harbour premises, as well as the very large number of people who have business in the harbour premises or with the shipping.

In these circumstances the harbour premises must be considered a place of public resort. A legal right of access by the public is not necessary to constitute a public place. [Vide Reg. v. Wellard (1)]. In the words of Grove, J.,—"A public place is one where the public go, no matter whether they have a right to go or not." [See also Kitson v. Ashe (2)].

We set aside the order of acquittal, convict the accused of the offence charged and sentence him to simple imprisonment till the rising of the Court. As the accused has been already put to considerable inconvenience by this prosecution, we impose only a nominal sentence.

Appeal allowed; Accused convicted.

Mr. A. N. Sitarama Sastri, for Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—It is to be regretted that the respondent is not represented before me, as the matter argued by the Vakil for the petitioner is one of some importance.

An application was made to the Subordinate Judge to stay proceedings in his Court as an appeal relating to the same subject-matter between the parties to the suit was pending in the Chief Court of Lower Burma at Rangoon. The Subordinate Judge considered that, as there was no evidence before him that an appeal had been filed before the suit in his Court was instituted, section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code had no application. I do not think that this view is correct. It was decided in Pichuvayyangan v. Seshayyangan (1) by a Full Bench of this Court that proceedings in appeal are only a continuation of the suit instituted in the first Court. That view was accepted in Kristnama Chariar v. Mangammal (2). Order XLI, rule 32, of the Code of Civil Procedure leads to the same conclusion: an Appellate Court in hearing the appeal is seized by the suit and has got powers either to confirm, vary or reverse the decree which has been passed; the inference from the language of the rule is that the jurisdiction exercised by the Appellate Court is with reference to the further stage of the suit which was disposed of by the first Court. As undoubtedly the suit in the Myaungmya Court was instituted long before the plaint was filed in the Sivaganga Sub-Court, section 10 is applicable. I must reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct him to re-take the petition on his file and to dispose of it according to law. Costs will abide the event.

MAUNG PO SHIN v. MOHAMED THAMBI.

JUDGMENT.—The facts before the Court were as follows:—

The defendant occupied a room in a house which at one time belonged to A. Mohamed Eusoof. In a previous suit (No. 4324 of 1914) brought by the plaintiff against the first defendant for rent, one Andiappa Chetty produced a mortgage-deed by which this Eusoof purported to mortgage the house to M. V. E. V. E. Curpan Chetty, but as Andiappa Chetty said he was not in Rangoon at the time the mortgage was executed he did not prove that the mortgage had in fact been executed by Eusoof. Andiappa had the house sold by auctioneers under a power of sale contained in the mortgage. One Kadar Bacha bought the house thus sold. Subsequently Kadar Bacha sold the house to the plaintiff on the 24th April 1914. Several people were living in the house as tenants of Eusoof. The defendant was one of them. On the 27th April an Advocate on behalf of Eusoof sent the first defendant a letter requiring him to pay rent to him and to no other person. On the 1st June 1914 the plaintiffs through an Advocate gave notice to the tenants of their having purchased the house and requested them to pay rent for May. The letter also gave them notice to quit the house at the end of June, and warned them that if they did not comply with the demands against them, legal proceedings would be taken against them without further reference. On the 25th June another letter warned the tenants that if they did not quit the house before the 1st July they would be charged enhanced rents, and demand was also made for the rent of June at the rate at which they had been paying to Eusoof. On the 17th June the plaintiffs instituted Suit No. 4324 against the defendant for Rs. 9 as being due for the rent of the room he occupied in the house for the month of May 1914. This suit was dismissed, the learned Judge holding that a suit by the plaintiffs for the rent did not lie, because (1) they could not be regarded as having stepped into the shoes of the original lessor Eusoof, (2) the tenants have not attorned to them and their possession should not be treated as adverse to the new owners, (3) the lease was at an end when the interest of the lessor in the property terminated, (4) the suit open to the plaintiffs was one for damages for use and occupation, and a suit for rent could not be allowed to be amended to one for damages for use and occupation.

On the 13th November 1914 the plaintiffs brought the suit (No. 8065) now being considered. They claimed Rs. 54 from the first defendant and his wife for use and occupation of the room they occupied in the house from the beginning of May to the beginning of November. The first defendant pleaded inter alia that he has been paying the rent of Rs. 9 a month all along to Eusoof, but he did not prove this. The amount claimed was decreed in favour of the plaintiffs. The first defendant seeks revision of the decree on the ground that it was contrary to law.

The two judgments contain much misconception of law applying to the rights of the plaintiffs as against the defendant if they in fact acquired the ownership of the house, and as to the nature of the suit for compensation for use and occupation. I will deal with this latter matter first. The learned Judge was no doubt right in holding that the case of Ramrick Dass v. Mohamed Yacubji Dudah (1) was distinguishable from the case before him. It was so, because the facts and the relations between the parties were entirely different. But the principle enunciated in the case, viz., that a claim for use and occupation only arises where it is shown that the occupation was by permission or sufferance of the plaintiff, applied to the case, because according to the plaintiffs' case the tenancy of the defendant had terminated at the end of June, and from the 1st July he was a trespasser. No suit for use and occupation lies against a trespasser. The suit open to an owner against a trespasser who has occupied his land is one for mesne profits—Vide Wharton's Law Lexicon and the references in the Civil Procedure Code to such suits. The learned Judge appears to have thought that there were two sorts of suits for use and occupation, one founded on express or implied contract between the owner and the person who has used and occupies his property, and the other by the owner for damages for use and occupation against one who has wrongfully occupied his property. This is not so; in the 14th Chapter of Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant the subject-matter of the particular form of suit is dealt with fully, and the form of plaint for such a suit given in Bullen and Leake's Precedents of Pleading; the note upon this form may usefully be referred to in order to ascertain the scope of such a suit.

(1) 2 L. B. R. 122.

CHAKKARA KANNAN v. KUNHI POKKER.

In the present case the plaintiffs' suit for use and occupation did not lie in respect of anything being due for use and occupation between the 1st July and 1st November; because between those dates the defendant was a trespasser. It did not lie for the month of May, because the plaintiffs' proper suit in respect for that month was for rent. Assuming that the learned Judge adhered to his opinion that section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act need not be acted on if the plaintiffs had proved their title in the first suit, the Judge's dismissal of that suit would have been wrong. He was in error in thinking that no one but the original lessor can sue a tenant for rent. Section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act was brought to his notice, and he was right in that the section did not apply to the case before him because it was not a case of a lessor having transferred the property leased. The section, however, does not contain the whole law as to the rights of an original lessor devolving on or being acquired by another. Such rights may be acquired by derivative title by any person who lawfully acquires or becomes entitled to the property leased. Some of the cases in which the rights of the original lessor devolve on others are dealt with in Chapter VII of Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant dealing with substitution of parties to the contract of tenancy. In view of the contention put forward by the defendant in the case, it may be noted that the rule that a tenant may not dispute his landlord's title, applies only to the title of the original landlord who let him into possession, and not to that of an owner who has acquired the property by some title derived from the original lessor, Vide Woodfall, pages 290 and 626.

If a tenant does dispute the title of a derivative owner who sues him for rent in a Small Cause Court in this province due attention should be paid to the provisions of section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

As these subjects were referred to in the first suit which is not being dealt with by me, I may remark that attornment by tenants is necessary in only the few cases referred to in Woodfall.

The learned Judge also misread section 111 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, which did not in any way apply to the case before him.

Further, I may say that there is no bar to a suit for rent being amended to a suit for use and occupation.

For the reasons I have given I hold the decree impeached was wrong in law and I set it aside and dismiss the suit with costs.

The plaintiff must also pay the defendant's costs of this application—2 gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fee.

Suit dismissed.

Marumakkathayam Law—Tavazhi—Gift to wife and children—Nature of property taken—Presumption that donees take with incidents of tarwad property—Rights of persons subsequently born—Rule of perpetuity.

Where properties are given by a person to his wife and children, or children alone, following the Marumakkathayam Law, the presumption is that the donees take the property with the incidents of tarwad property, including those mentioned; persons subsequently born into the tavazhi are entitled to be maintained, but not to claim partition, and an individual cannot alienate his share nor can it be attached and sold in execution of a personal decree against him. [p. 764, col. 2; p. 767, col. 2; p. 764, col. 1.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—Quære:—Whether a gift with the incidents of tarwad property could be made to the mother and some of her issue only, viz., those by a particular husband? [p. 764, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The rule against perpetuities cannot be applied so as to defeat gifts made to all the persons who can naturally form a joint Hindu family, the gifted property to be held as joint family property, or to the whole of a group of persons following the natural law of Marumakkathayam forming a natural tavazhi group. [p. 764, col. 2.]

The result of a woman marrying another husband and begetting other children to the latter is that there will be two separate groups in the same tavazhi, holding separate tavazhi property, the senior male in each tavazhi group being the karnavan of that tavazhi group. [p. 765, col. 1.]

Per Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.—It is not the giving of properties by a person to his wife and children that constitutes them a tarwad or tavazhi, but that if properties are given to a wife and children following the Marumakkathayam Law, they as a tavazhi hold those properties with the incidents of tarwad property, and the right of management of the properties is vested in the senior male member of that tavazhi. [p. 767, col. 1.]

If the tarwad can purchase and hold properties with the incidents of tarwad property there is no reason why they should not take a gift and hold the properties with the incidents of tarwad property. The gift is made to the entity which is called the tarwad or tavazhi and the law governing the parties regulates the mode of succession and enjoyment. [p. 767, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry, North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 241 of 1909, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Payoli, in Original Suit No. 333 of 1908.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on 24th April 1913, the Court (Sankaran Nair and Tyabji, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff-appellant for partition and possession of the interest of the 1st defendant, which he had purchased in execution of a money-decree obtained by him. The 2nd and 3rd defendants are respectively the brother and niece of the first defendant, and they contend that the first defendant had no such interest in the property as could be attached and sold. Their case is that the property is held by them with the incidents of tarwad property. Both the lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

One Pakran made a gift of certain properties to his two sons, the 1st and 2nd defendants, and a daughter, Pathumma whose daughter is the 3rd defendant. The question for decision is whether they took the property as joint tenants or tenants-in-common or whether they took it only as members of the tarwad, none of them having any interest liable to be attached and sold. The material portion of the instrument of gift runs thus: "I have settled by this that the properties..... .. and all dealings in my name and all moveables are to be enjoyed by me till my death according to my pleasure, and after my death they are to belong to my children, Ammadkutti (2nd defendant), Kunhi Pokker (1st defendant) and Pathumma (the mother of the 3rd defendant), and that no one else has any right to my properties. Properties and dealings which I may acquire in future also are for the said children. After my death the above-mentioned persons, who are my children, are to collect all outstandings due to me and arrears of rent and the assessment which was in my name has to be transferred in the names of my children and patta obtained, and they are to hold the same in the same way I was holding them, paying the porappad due to the jenmies and getting renewals in their names." Now there can be scarcely any doubt that, if we look to the terms of the instrument alone, the three donees therein named took an absolute interest and so far as their right of alienation is concerned it makes no difference whether they are tenants-in-common or joint tenants as in either case any of them could alienate his interest in the property. But it is contended, and the contention has a good deal of force in it, that the decisions have laid down the principle that the donees in such cases must hold the property with the incidents of tarwad property and that, therefore, Kunhi Pokker, the 1st defendant and one of the donees and the judgment-debtor, had no saleable interest in it.

The case that is mainly relied upon is that of a Full Bench in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1). There were a series of decisions before that on the question of the liability of the interest of one of the donees to be attached and sold—some of them, following the case Narayanan v. Kannan (2), which was a decision to the contrary and others not apparently following it. Many of them will be found reported in the foot-notes to the Full Bench judgment in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1). Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) was a case in which the properties were given after a person's death by his legal representatives to his widow and her children in accordance with his orally expressed wish, and the question was whether the interest of one of the children could be attached and sold. Mr. Justice Best was of opinion that they held the property as joint tenants under English Law, as there were all the four unities of a joint tenancy, that is (1), of possession, (2) of interest, (3) of title and (4) of the commencement of such title, and, therefore, the interest of the judgment-debtor who had died could not be attached and sold. This view cannot be accepted. See the Privy Council decision in Jageswar Narain. Deo v. Ram Ohandra Dutt (3). Mr. Justice Subramania Aiyar contented himself with saying that there was a conflict of decisions and the question was, therefore, one that should be decided by a Full Bench. The Full Bench delivered the following judgment: "In the case before us the donor expressed no intention as to how the properties should be held by the donees, and in the absence of such expression, the presumption is that he intended that they should take them as properties acquired by their branch or as the exclusive properties of their own branch, with the usual incidents of tarwad property in accordance with Marumakkathayam usage which governed the donees. This view is in accordance with the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (4) and Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewakram (5)" and they expressed the opinion that the decision above referred to, Narayanan v. Kannan (2), is in conflict with the rule of construction indicated by the Privy Council. Now, it will be observed that in the Full Bench case the judgment-debtor had died, and the question whether he left any interest liable to be sold is very different from the question which arises here. Again, there was no instrument of gift and the intention was imputed to the donor only in the absence of any expression of his intention while in the case before us there is an expression of the donor's intention. The Privy Council judgments have application only to gifts to a Hindu woman who generally takes only a life-interest. It is the other way in the case of a Malayala woman, the theory of the Marumakkathayam law being that the property is vested only in the females, the males having only the right of maintenance. For these reasons I should have held without hesitation that the present case is not governed by the Full Bench decision but for the reason that the later decisions of this Court have apparently included within its scope cases of this kind. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider the question more fully.

If it is to be held that the three donees in the case before us held the property with the incidents of tarwad property and that any one of them could not convey his interest, then it would be directly contradicting the terms of the instrument Exhibit I, because Exhibit I distinctly recites that the donees were to hold the property 'in the same way I was holding them,' or, in other words, those three persons could alienate it even if such alienation may not be in the interests of the branch to which they belong, which would include the 3rd defendant, a daughter of Pathumma. The Will states that no one else besides the three donees named has any right to the properties, whereas, if they belonged to the branch, the descendants of Pathumma born before or after the death of the testator would be entitled to them in their own right and not as representatives of any donee, so that, if we were to decide the case on the construction of the instrument of gift alone, I should have little hesitation in holding that I must give effect to the terms of the instrument and should not import any artificial intention into the case. But the decisions that I have referred to have no doubt held that in such cases the properties must be deemed to be held with the incidents of tarwad property.

The rule of decision is that indicated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (3), in which they expressed their dissent from a decision of the Madras High Court reported as Vydinada v. Nagammal (6), to the effect that, where a Hindu testator devised certain properties to his nephew and his wife, they took them as joint tenants and the nephew could not sever the joint tenancy by an alienation by him alone to a creditor. The Judicial Committee pointed out, 'the principle of joint tenancy appears to be unknown to Hindu Law except in the case of coparcenary between members of an undivided family,' and in the second place, even if it is a joint tenancy under English Law, that joint tenancy could be severed by a conveyance or an equivalent of conveyance. According to this, therefore, it is where a co-parcenary might exist according to the rules of the Marumakkathayam Law that the property given to certain members of a Marumakkathayam family may be deemed to be held by them as co-parceners. Under that law it is only tarwad property or the property of a branch who hold certain properties as their branch property in the same way as a tarwad with their own karnavan, etc., that is really held in co-parcenary right. As in my view the right decision of the question mainly depends upon an appreciation of what properties are held as co-parcenary property, I will explain it in some detail.

M1, the senior male member would be the karnavan of the entire tarwad and in management of all its properties. He is the guardian of the infants or children born to any of the female members: he is bound to look after them, maintain them in the tarwad house and give them the education customary among such tarwads. Any female and her children form a tavazhi or branch. Tavazhi literally means tayar, mother, and vazhi, line, that is mother's line. Very often a woman and her descendants live apart from the tarwad house in a house of their own with properties belonging exclusively to their branch, the senior member amongst them having all the rights and obligations of the karnavan of an ordinary tarwad. Such a branch or tavazhi is constituted or created by gifts from the father of the woman or by gifts from a favourite brother or maternal uncle, or, it may be, by the self-acquisition of any member of that branch which he would often reserve for the sole benefit of the members of his branch. The karnavan of the main tarwad does not exercise his rights over the members of this branch or interfere in the management of the exclusive properties of that branch. In all such cases what the interests of that branch are in the main tarwad and its properties has often been discussed. If they wish to preserve their rights, which carry with them their obligations in the main tarwad, then the senior member of that branch when he becomes the senior of the main tarwad also assumes the headship or karnavanship of the main tarwad. Failure to assume the karnavanship of the main tarwad when by seniority in age it comes to a member of this tavazhi or branch, is usually taken as an indication that it has become a distinct branch without any co-parcenary interests in the main tarwad. Whether the branch members retain their interests in the main tarwad or not, so long as they have a karnavan exercising over them the ordinary karnavan's rights, they form a branch tarwad. I take no exception to the Full Bench judgment in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) if it goes only to that extent; it was on that footing that the case was argued by me before the Division Bench; the reference to a Full Bench was rendered necessary by a decision which was supposed to throw doubt even on that doctrine.

But let us take a case where a female and her children remain in the tarwad house under the control of their karnavan and certain properties are given to them by their father. Now they are four possible views. (1) One view is that they constitute a tarwad by themselves with reference to that property. (2) Another view is that those members hold the property in the same way, for instance, as the members of a Mitakshara family do in Bengal, substituting females for males, that is they may be entitled to partition but before partition their interests are not liable to be attached and sold. (3) A third possible view is, that they hold in the same way as the properties held by a Mitakshara family according to the Madras decisions, that is, they are entitled to partition but their interest also is liable to be attached and sold during their life-time but not after that. (4) Another view is that it may be attached and sold even after death.

I have already stated that, if the Indian Law Reports 16 Madras case is to be understood as applying to the members of a tarwad who live apart from the main tarwad house holding their own property and having their own karnavan, I accept that decision. Mr. Justice Moore and I have also followed that decision, nor do I see any reason to question it in so far as it holds that the interest of a member cannot be attached and sold after his death.

But, it is said that, according to that decision, even if the members do not form a separate tavazhi holding separate property, they hold the properties gifted to them (we will say), by the husband of the woman, with all the incidents of a tarwad, etc. Now, what is the position of that group of members? Take it in the table above given, the husband of F7 gives certain property to her and to her children F8 and M6. It cannot be contended for a moment that they are constituted into a separate tarwad or a separate tavazhi, with the tarwad incidents, by themselves, for M1, the karnavan of the entire tarwad, does not lose his rights over the children F8 and M6 if minors, and even F7 if she is a minor, or any children that may be hereafter born to F7 and F8. Nor do they lose their corresponding rights in the tarwad house and its property. For the same reason the senior male in that group cannot displace the old karnavan and succeed to his rights over the other members. This view, which Mr. Justice Moore and myself put forward in Koroth Amman Kutti v. Perungottil Appu Nambiar (7), has been accepted in the subsequent cases which have reference to that doctrine. Now, if they do not constitute by themselves a separate tarwad or tavazhi, is there any reason why to the donor must be imputed an intention that they should hold the property with the incidents of tarwad property? This would lead to startling results. Supposing F7 marries again after the divorce by or of the first husband or after his death. Then the children that might be born to her by the second husband M7 and F9, would also form the members of the tavazhi to which their mother and her children by her first husband belong, because the mother is the root of the tavazhi and the father has no place in the system, and they

CHAKKARA KANNAN v. KUNHI POKKER.

(i. e., the children by the 2nd husband) would acquire an interest in the property given by her first husband. It is obvious that we cannot impute to the first husband an intention that the children born to his wife by another person should benefit in the gift which he made for her and her children's use. Once it is recognised that a woman and her children by one husband are incapable of forming a tavazhi or joint family by themselves only, to the exclusion of the children that may be born or have been born to her by another husband, it seems necessarily to follow that they do not take as a tavazhi or as co-parceners according to the Privy Council decision in Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (3) already referred to. Even in cases of inheritance it has been held by a Full Bench of this Court that the co-parcenary principle does not generally apply: Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (8); a fortiori, therefore, in cases of gifts which stand in this respect on the same footing as Wills. This is in accordance with the Privy Council decision in Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (3), that in the absence of anything to the contrary the donees take as tenants-in-common. Again, the husband may himself be a follower of the Muhammadan Law or of the Hindu Law called in Malabar the Makkathayam Law of inheritance, and in Indian Law Reports 16 Madras itself the donor was probably a follower of Muhammadan Law. The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Wallis in Pattatheruvath Pathumma v. Mannamkunniiyil Abdulla Haji (9) assumed it to be so and applied it to a case where the father followed the Muhammadan Law of inheritance. Now what reason is there to impute to him an intention that his children should be governed by the incidents of the Marumakkathayam Law? If the intention is to be presumed from the general inclination of a person towards a particular system of inheritance, then it is almost impossible to presume such intention in the case of a Muhammadan donor, and the reason that I suggest next would show that such a presumption ought not to be made even in any other case.

How does it stand on principle? Ordinarily a karnavan's rights are commensurate with his obligations. He has the custody of the entire property in which all the members of the tarwad are interested, to hold it for the benefit of them all, to maintain them in the family house and to educate them. Now, if the properties gifted by a father are to be held with the incidents of tarwad property and the senior male member amongst them is to hold it without any right of the other members for partition, what is the result? They are not maintained out of it, because living in the tarwad house they get their maintenance from the karnavan of the entire tarwad and the senior male of their branch has no control in the tarwad house. They are not educated by the senior male of their branch, because the obligation to educate them is on the karnavan of the tarwad. The guardianship of the infants is also in the karnavan of the entire tarwad. I cannot imagine that a person should be in the possession of the property of others in which they are all jointly interested without any obligations towards those others—the only obligation in this case which would be recognised, if this contention is upheld, being that he has to hold it during his life-time as karnavan to be handed over after his death to the next man to be held in the same way, no other member getting any benefit out of it. I can hardly conceive that any donor would intend that his property should be enjoyed only by the senior male amongst his descendants to the exclusion of others. That senior male might be—and it has often turned out to be—the son of one of the daughters; and his own sons, who might be junior in age to his grandson by one of the daughters, get no benefit in any form whatever, or again, if the donor has only daughters, the property will be held by one of their sons to the exclusion of them all. I do not think that such a result as this is ever contemplated by the Marumakkathayam Law which, in theory, vests the property in females only. It follows from what I have said that we should not uphold the impartibility of such property nor the absolute right of the senior male member to manage the property to the practical exclusion of the others, as in an ordinary tarwad property. Such impartibility without any right of the other members to participate in the enjoyment of its income is undoubtedly against the general feeling of the people. If the decision in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) leads to this conclusion, then I am of opinion that it should be reconsidered. I think myself that it does not.

Let us see how far the Privy Council case that is relied upon is against this view. That was the case of a gift by Will to a daughter-in-law. Their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following observations: "In construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family; and it may be assumed that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule, at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate" [Mohamed Shamsool Hoda v. Shervukram (5)]. As their Lordships point out, a Hindu desires that the estate should be retained in his family. In the case before us there is no such presumption if the donor follows the Marumakkathayam Law of inheritance, as he is giving the property to strangers to his Marumakkathayam family. If he is a follower of the Muhammadan or Hindu Law, the presumption would be exactly the other way, i.e., that the donees should not enjoy it as a Marumakkathayam family. Then, their Lordships say that the donor must be taken to have known that the donee, in that case, a woman, cannot, as a general rule, take an absolute inheritance. That presumption does not apply, as I have already pointed out, to Malabar. On the other hand, no presumption ought to be drawn that his sons other than the senior male are to get scarcely any benefit out of it. I do not think, therefore, the Privy Council decision compels us to impute any artificial intention to the donor, and in particular, when there is an instrument of gift, I am satisfied that we ought to go upon the words of the instrument. It does not, of course, follow from this that one of these donees may either sell his share or a creditor may attach and sell his interest in execution of a decree. If we follow the Madras decisions in reference to the Mitakshara family, he would be so entitled to do, but if we follow the Bengal decisions, which proceed perhaps upon the true theory of Hindu co-parcenary law, he will not be entitled to do so. Where certain members of a Hindu family earn property, there is no presumption that they hold it as co-parcenary property.

Similarly it has been held that in the case of followers of Marumakkathayam Law also there is no such presumption. See Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (10).

It is desirable on account of the apparent conflict of opinion that the matter should be settled by a Full Bench. I would, therefore, refer the following questions to a Full Bench:—

(1) When properties are given by a person to his wife and children or children alone following the Marumakkathayam Law, do the donees constitute by themselves a tarwad or tavazhi, and if they do so, is the right of management of the properties forming the subject of the gift vested in the senior male member thereof?

(2) If the first question is answered in the affirmative, whether in such cases the other members of the tavazhi, including those who become members of it by birth, are entitled to maintenance, etc., out of such properties, in the same manner as they were entitled before the gift to receive maintenance out of the properties belonging to the main tarwad; and whether they are entitled to partition of the said properties?

(3) Can any one member of the tarwad or tavazhi so constituted alienate his share, or can his interest be attached and sold by a decree-holder in execution of a decree against any one of them?

I have not dealt separately with the following decisions: Katankundi Kona v. Thamburan Kandi Sivasankaran (11); Chakkantuvila Chakkan Abdulla v. Thazhath Chekkocetti (12); Mooriyat Putikayil Kuntimina v. Mooriyat Patikayil Kuntambi (13); Parvathi Kattilammuk v. Ramachandra Ejaman (14), as they all may be supported on the ground that the donees in those cases formed a tavazhi living separately from the tarwad under their own karnavan as practically a distinct tarwad. There is at any rate nothing in the judgments that they were not living as a tarwad by themselves under their own karnavan.

TYARJI, J.—I agree that the questions mentioned by my learned brother should be referred to a Full Bench.

The case of Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1), as I understand it, decided, so far as is at present material, that where the donees are governed by a law under which property must be, or usually is, held with the incidents of tarwad property, there a gift will be presumed, at least in the absence of circumstances showing a contrary intention, to be held by the donees, impressed with such incidents.

I had occasion recently to take part in a decision in which a point similar to that with which we have now to deal arose. (See Second Appeal No. 1415 of 1910.) In that appeal what I intended to take part in laying down was that, when the donor and the joint donees are all governed by the same system of law, viz., the Marumakkathayam, a gift will presumably be governed, and the subject of the gift will, in the hands of the donees, continue to be affected, by the incidents of that law, provided, of course, that if that law permits of property being held in two or more different ways, then it will be a question to be determined under which of the various recognised modes of holding property the donees are to hold the subject of gift; the answer to such question necessarily depending on the construction that has to be placed on the terms of the gift. In Second Appeal No. 1415 of 1910 I understood that the learned Pleader who appeared for the appellant before us conceded, first, that the donor and the donees were alike governed by the Marumakkathayam Law, secondly, that under that law property had necessarily to be held with the incidents of tarwad property, thirdly, that, assuming that the law in question recognises the holding of property without the incidents of tarwad property, that mode of holding property was rather unusual, and there was nothing to indicate that the subject of gift in that particular case was intended to be held with incidents other than those of tarwad property.

However, my learned brother, to whose experience and knowledge of the subject I need not allude, in his judgment mentions considerations which would throw great doubt on the permissibility of postulating those propositions which form the basis of the judgment in Second Appeal No. 1415 of 1910. For I gather from the judgment of my learned brother that under Marumakkathayam Law itself not only is there no necessity for holding property with the incidents of tarwad property, but that property cannot be so held unless it is given to or acquired by a tarwad as such, or, in other words, unless, prior to the gift or acquisition, the donees or persons acquiring constitute a tarwad or a tavazhi. I see also the difficulty in holding that a new tarwad or tavazhi should come into being by the mere fact of a gift being made to several persons as joint donees; or that a gift can by itself constitute the donees into a tarwad or a tavazhi. Again, it is not very probable that there should be any intention on the part of the donor—especially when he is a Musalman—of so constituting the donees into a tarwad or tavazhi, even where the donees are related to each other by being the wife and the children of the donor: where the donees are members of different tarwads and bear no relationship to each other, the improbability of there being any such intention would be still greater; further, the question whether, even assuming that the donor intends so to constitute the donees into a new tarwad or tavazhi, the law empowers him to do so, requires careful consideration. The question may also arise, when the rights of the parties have to be determined with reference to a set of circumstances which do not seem to have been contemplated at the time when the well-recognised rules of custom arose, nor to have been specifically provided for by rules of custom which are known to prevail, whether in such matters effect ought to be given to "logical conclusions which may seem to an acute modern dialectician to follow" from the rules imposed by ancient customs [cf. Baqar Ali Khan v. Anjuman Ara Begam (15)]. It may be that in such (15) 25 A. 236; 7 C. W. N. 465; 5 Bom. L. R. 410; 30 I. A. 94 (P. C.).

matters effect ought to be given rather to the ordinary notions and wishes of the parties, even though such notions and wishes may not in strict logic be in conformity with the prevailing customs nor have taken a shape sufficiently definite to be considered as embodying an independent rule of customary law, but may only furnish indications of what justice, equity and good conscience would require.

On many of the matters involved in this reference (to some of which I have alluded above) I feel that there are not sufficient materials at present available which would enable me to express an opinion.

I, therefore, agree that the questions mentioned in my learned brother's judgment be referred to a Full Bench.

This second appeal coming on for hearing as per above order of reference, upon perusing the said order of reference, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. J. L. Rosario, for the 2nd and 3rd Respondents, and the 1st and 5th Respondents not appearing either in person or by Pleader, and the 4th Respondent having died and no legal representatives having been brought on record within the time allowed by law, and the questions having stood over for consideration the Court expressed on the 12th August 1915 the following OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—It seems desirable at the outset to point out that the decision of the Full Bench in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) which is questioned in the reference merely decides that among the followers of the Marumakkathayam Law, when a gift is made by the father to the mother and her children, there is a presumption that they are intended to take such properties as the exclusive properties of the branch or tavazhi consisting of the mother and her children, that is to say, with the usual incidents of tarwad property. In the absence of express provision, the presumption is that the property is to be enjoyed by the mother and her issue in the way in which property is customarily held and enjoyed among followers of the Marumakkatha am Law. The decision proceeded on the authority of two decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, which laid down that the law governing the parties is one of the circumstances to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the intention of the donor. As pointed out in the judgment of one of the Judges who made the reference to the Full Bench, the presumption was arrived at in consideration of what were known to be the notions and wishes of persons in the position of the donor and also of the ordinary incidents of property in the district. This view was accepted by the Full Bench of four Judges two of whom, Muthusawmy Aiyar and Wilkinson, J.J., were well acquainted with Malabar, and that it was well founded is suggested by the fact that the decision has not only been accepted, but has been given a considerable extension in the neighbouring State of Travancore, as pointed out during the argument by my learned brother speaking from his experience as Chief Justice of that State. It has also been followed, as I shall show, in numerous cases in this Court, and was not questioned before Ummanga v. Appadorai Patter (16), a decision of Sir Arnold White, C. J., and Sankaran Nair, J., in 1910 and it may be taken that many transactions have proceeded on the footing that it was correct. In these circumstances, notwithstanding the respect which I feel for the opinion of Sankaran Nair, J., especially in a matter affecting his own community, I think we should be very slow to differ from the decision of the Full Bench unless we are absolutely obliged to do so, more especially as that decision merely relates to a presumption which it is always in the power of a donor to negative, if so minded, by express provision. If any change is to be made it should, it seems to me, be made by the Legislature.

As regards the authorities, the decision in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) was not only not questioned but, as pointed out in subsequent cases, was accepted in Koroth Anuman Kutti v. Perungottil Appu Nambiar (7), to which Sankaran Nair, J., was a party. It was followed in Pattatheruvath Pathamma v. Mannamkunnayil A. I. H. Haji (9), Maoriyat Puttikayil Kuntimina v. Mooriyat Patikayil Kuntambi (13), Katankandi Kona v. Thamburan Kandi Sivasankaran (14), Chakkantavida Chakkan Abdulla v. Thazath Chekkootti (12) and Parvathi Kattilammah v. Ramachandra Ejaman (14). Lastly in Kalliani Amma v. Govinda Menon (17), which was subsequent to Ummanga v. Appadorai Patter (16), it was again accepted and acted on by Abdur Rahim and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., in a careful judgment in which all the authorities were examined. In this state of things it seems to me that it is not now open to us to question the decision of the Full Bench, even if we saw reasons to doubt that it had been correctly decided. With reference to the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ramachandra Dutt (3), which are referred to by Sankaran Nair, J., that the principle of joint tenancy appears to be unknown to the Hindu Law except in the case of a co-parcenary between members of an undivided family, it may be observed that these observations of their Lordships were made with reference to ordinary Hindu Law and not to the peculiar Marumakkathayam system, which was not under their Lordships' consideration. But even taking them to be applicable, I cannot see how a gift to a female and all her descendants in the female line can be held to infringe the principle, for that is the kind of joint family known to the Marumakkathayam system. On the other hand, the propriety of such a gift would appear to be recognised by their Lordships in Rai Bishen Chand v. Musammal Asmaida Koer (18) in the passage cited by Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., in Meda Vengamma v. Mitta Chellumiah (19). The question whether a gift with the incidents of tarwad property could be made to the mother and some of her issue only, viz., those by a particular husband, does not arise in this particular case, as the gift is to the children of the donor by a deceased wife and it is not suggested that she left any other children. It is, therefore, unnecessary to express any opinion on this point, or to refer to the authorities which are collected in the judgment of Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., just mentioned.

Following the decision of the Full Bench in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) and the course of subsequent decisions I would answer the question in the reference as follows: (1) The presumption is that the donees take the property, with the incidents of tarwad property including those mentioned. (2) Persons subsequently born into the tavazhi are entitled to be maintained, but not to claim partition. (3) An individual cannot alienate his share, nor can it be attached and sold in execution of a personal decree against any of the members.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I am prepared to follow the decision in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1), which is in conformity (so far as I find) with the views universally held by the communities following the ordinary Marumakkathayam Law, and with the intentions of a father (who might even belong to a Marumakkathayam community) who consorts with a lady belonging to a Marumakkathayam community and who makes or arranges a gift to his children born of his said Marumakkathayam wife.

The objection, based on the rule of perpetuity, to the validity of such gifts has been considered elaborately by Sundara Aiyar, J., in Meda Vengamma v. Mitta Chellumiah (19), and I respectfully agree with his opinion that that rule cannot be applied so as to defeat gifts made to all the persons who can naturally form a joint Hindu family, the gifted property to be held as joint family property, or to the whole of a group of persons following the natural law of Marumakkathayam forming a natural tavazhi group.

The objection based on the woman (whose husband makes a gift to his children by her) marrying another husband and begetting other children to the latter and on these children also belonging to her tavazhi along with her children by the 1st husband is not, in my opinion, insuperable. The result of that state of facts will only be that there will be two separate groups in the same tavazhi holding separate tavazhi property, the senior male in each tavazhi group being the karnavan of that tavazhi group. For instance, take the case of a woman and her children who form a tavazhi within a tarwad. Two of her daughters might form two different groups in the same tavazhi and their respective husbands might give properties to their respective children. Then, all these children would belong to the tarwad of their great-grandmother, would again belong to their grandmother's tavazhi and would also belong to the groups or sub-tavazhis of their respective mothers and hold those respective group properties separately. Just as there can be tavazhis within a tarwad, there can be group-tavazhis and sub-tavazhis in the same tavazhi. If two groups or sub-tavazhis springing from two daughters who from a tavazhi can have separate sub-tavazhi properties, there is nothing startling in two branch tavazhis springing from the same lady (through her marrying two successive husbands) and holding separately their respective branch tavazhi properties. A tavazhi consists, no doubt, of the descendants of a single woman (I do not think that it includes the woman herself etymologically) but there is nothing to prevent the existence in that same tavazhi of two groups each of which might form a separate unit for the purpose of holding particular properties as if it was a separate tarwad and with the incidents of tarwad property. It cannot be said to be an unnatural separation between the two groups, unnatural in the sense of repugnance to the habits, practices and sentiments of the community. I agree to the answers proposed by my Lord.

SRINIVSA AIYANGAR, J.—In India it is not uncommon for groups of persons, though not incorporated, to hold properties as if they were corporate entities. Castes and sub-castes hold property as such, so also village communities. But the more common and familiar instances of such groups in South-east India are the joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, the Nambudri Illom governed by the Makkathayam Law, the Nayar tarwad governed by the Marumakkathayam Law, and the Aliyasantan family of South Canara. The Moplas of North Malabar generally follow the Marumakkathayam system and the parties to this suit are governed by that law. The incidents of such group holding are now well settled. In the case of Malabar tarwads such incidents include the impartibility of the property, the right by birth of persons born in the tarwad, and the management of the properties by the senior male member of the tarwad, who is styled the karnavan.

The constitution of a Marumakkathayam tarwad is well known and is concisely stated in the extract from the report of the Malabar Marriage Commission printed at page 16 in I. L. R. 24 Madras [Thiruthipalli Raman Menon v. Variangattil Palisseri Raman Menon (20)]. The constitution of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law furnishes a very close parallel [see the description of such a family by Bashyam Iyengar, J., in Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasinhulu Maistri (21)]. These groups cannot, of course, be created by agreement of parties. The tavazhis or the subordinate groups constituting the tarwad are, I think, capable of holding properties as corporate units with the incidents of tarwad property, at the same time retaining their joint interest in the properties of the main tarwad, just as branches and sub-branches in a Mitakshara joint Hindu family are capable of holding properties with the incidents of joint Hindu family property. I am also of opinion that some only of the members of a tavazhi cannot form a corporate unit capable of holding property as such. The husbands of the female members and the children of the male members of a tarwad are not members of the tarwad. It is not uncommon for them to make gifts of properties to their wives, daughters or sisters and their children, and such properties are called Puthravakasam properties. The question is whether, in the absence of express words in the grant, the tavazhi holds them as a corporate unit with the incidents of impartibility and right by birth, or whether the members of the tavazhi hold the property as co-owners i. e., as tenants-in-common. I think these are the only two alternative views possible, and the second and third views mentioned in the referring order of Sankaran Nair, J., may be left out of consideration [Jogeshwar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (3)]. This question was answered by a Full Bench of this Court in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1), and the answer was that such properties were held with the incidents of tarwad property. The basis of the decision was that was the usual mode of holding property by persons governed by Marumakkathayam Law; and that the donors presumably intended to benefit not merely the existing members of the family, but also those who may thereafter be born in the family. This decision was followed in a large number of cases in this Court, viz., Koroth Anuman Kutti v. Perungottil Appu Nambiar (7), Pattatheruvath Pathumma v. Mannamkunniyil Abdulla Haji (9), Mooriyat Patikayil Kuntimina v. Mooriyat Patikayil Kuntambi (13), Katankandi Kona v. Thamburan Kandi Sirasankaran (11), Chakkantardia Chakkan Abdulla v. Thazhath Chekooti (12), Parvathi Kattilanmah v. Ramachandra Ejaman (14), Kunhi Raman v. Kunhi Parvathi (22) and Kalliani Amma v. Govinda Menon (17).

For the first time, in Ummanga v. Appadorai Patter (16), a suggestion was made that if a tavazhi had not become a distinct tarwad by division or relinquishment of its joint interest in the properties of the main tarwad, the property held by that tavazhi will not have the incidents of tarwad property; and the Full Bench decision in Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) was explained as deciding only that the interest of a member of such a tavazhi lapsed to the other members of the tavazhi if that interest has not been alienated during his life-time. With the greatest respect to the learned Judges I am unable to accept this explanation. It ignores the fact that in properties held with the incidents of tarwad property no individual member has an alienable interest. It is to be observed that Sankaran Nair, J., who was one of the Judges who decided that case, at that time seems to have been of opinion that it is only in cases where a tavazhi becomes a distinct tarwad by ceasing to have any interest in the properties of the main tarwad, that it can hold properties with the incidents of tarwad property; but in the order of reference the learned Judge concedes that the rule would apply even in cases where the tavazhi retains its interest in the properties of the main tarwad, provided that the members of the tavazhi live separately from the other members of the tarwad. He thinks that the case of Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) was a case of that sort. In any case, he thinks that decision should not be extended to tavazhis whose members do not live separately with a separate karnavan of their own. In the Full Bench case of Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1), so far as one can gather from the report, the tavazhi do not seem to have been living separately with a separate karnavan of their own. In many of the cases which followed the Full Bench decision, the members of the tavazhi do not appear to have lived separately with a separate karnavan. I am unable to see how the fact of separate living by the members of a tavazhi without a separation in interest can possibly affect the capacity of the tavazhi to hold property or the incidents of the property held by them as such tavazhi. In Krishnan Nair v. Damodaran Nair (23), a Full Bench of this Court decided that where a female member of a tavazhi dies, her separate property is inherited by her tavazhi as such, i. e., as a corporate unit. Though in Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (10), it was held by two Judges of this Court, a third Judge dissenting, that the separate property of a male member of a tavazhi on his death lapses to the tarwad and not to the tavazhi, the opinions collected in the referring order in that case show clearly the consciousness of the people that the tavazhi was a separate entity which ought to inherit the property of both the male and female members of that tavazhi. In a case where the tavazhi succeeds to the property of a deceased member, that property will be managed, I assume, by the senior male member of that tavazhi and the members of that tavazhi will have the additional advantage of participating in the income of that property. I see no difficulty in the tavazhi holding the properties to which it succeeded with the incidents of tarwad property.

Two points are taken by Sankaran Nair, J, in the order of reference. One, that a tavazhi which has not separated itself in the sense mentioned above cannot cease to be under the control of the karnavan of the tarwad and cannot have a karnavan of its own; and the other, that a tavazhi may consist of children of different fathers. In Koroth Kutti Amman Kutti v. Perungottil Appu Nambiar (7) Moore and Sankaran Nair, JJ., had no difficulty in holding that Puthravakasam property held by a tavazhi was held with the incidents of tarwad property, though the mere gift of property to a tavazhi did not constitute them a distinct tarwad. In Kalliani Amma v. Govinda Menon (17), all the previous cases were considered by Abdur Rahim and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., and the relation of the senior male member of a tavazhi managing the properties of the tavazhi to the other members of the tavazhi was indicated. They say: "there can be no doubt that he cannot have all the rights of a karnavan over the junior members of his tarwad. He is not their guardian and has no right of supervision or control over them. He is not responsible for their protection, education or maintenance. His right is confined to the management of the special property owned by him and the other members of his branch." I do not think that a tavazhi is not a separate tarwad with a separate karnavan of its own is an impediment to their holding property with the incidents of tarwad property. As regards the second point there is, of course, the possibility of a woman to whom properties are given by one husband marrying another and having children by him. All the children of that woman would form members of her tavazhi. It is certainly difficult to presume an intention in the first husband to grant the property to his wife's children by another husband. Such cases are likely to occur very rarely. After all the rule is one of construction and even if the decision in Kunhacha Umma v. Futti Mammi Hajee (1) is open to question (I think it is not), we ought not to depart from it after it has been followed for such a long time.

It is now necessary to notice another contention of Mr. Ramachandra Iyer which does not seem to have been put forward before the referring Judges. He contends that no gift or grant of property can be made to a tarwad so as to enable it to hold that property with the incidents of tarwad property; such a grant, he contends, amounts to a grant in favour of unborn persons and, therefore, contrary to the decision of the Privy Council in Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (24). I understand him to concede that a tarwad could purchase properties and hold them with the incidents of tarwad property. If they can do that, I do not see why they should not take a gift and hold the properties with the incidents of tarwad property. The fallacy underlying the argument is that the grant is a grant made in favour of unborn persons. The gift is made to the entity which is called the tarwad or tavazhi and the law governing the parties regulates the mode of succession and enjoyment. Mr. Ramachandra Iyer relied on a dicta of the Bombay High Court in Bai Dewali v. Patel Bachardas (25) and on a case, Kishori Dubain v. Mundra Dubain (26). There is nothing in the Allahabad case to support his contention, and the passage in Bai Dewali v. Patel Bachardas (25) is only an expression of doubt. On the other hand, the decision in Meda Vergamma v. Mitta Chellamiah (19) supports the contrary conclusion.

My answer to the first question is that it is not the giving of properties by a person to his wife and children that constitutes them a tarwad or tavazhi, but that if properties are given to a wife and children following the Marumakkathayam Law, they as a tavazhi hold those properties with the incidents of tarwad property, and the right of management of the properties is vested in the senior male member of that tavazhi.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of decree. The facts may be briefly stated as follows. The appellants are the assignees of a decree which was obtained on the 6th of January 1904 against Raja Krishna Dat Singh of Oel. At the time this decree was obtained, Raja Krishna Dat Singh was a person disqualified from managing his estate and his property was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. According to the law in force at this time, namely, United Provinces Act III of 1899, this decree was improperly obtained. The suit was brought against the Raja personally, whereas under the law it was necessary that the Raja should be sued in the name of the Collector of the district representing the Court of Wards and representing his estate. Several attempts were made to execute the decree and it seems that from time to time certain sums were realized. The present case has arisen out of an attempt to execute the decree for the balance which is still said to be owing. First of all the appellants here took out execution against the Raja personally. This application for execution was finally refused by an order of this Court, in which it is pointed out that under the law no legal proceedings could be taken against the Raja except in the name of the Collector. After this decision had been given a fresh application was made, the name of the Collector of Kheri being substituted in the application for that of the Raja. The Courts below have rejected the application on the ground that the decree cannot be executed. The point taken is that, as the Collector was no party to the decree, it cannot be executed against him. It is contended here in appeal that the Collector really represents the Raja and that the validity of the decree could not be impeached in the Court below. In short, the case is that the Court was bound to execute the decree as it stands and to allow the realization of the decretal amount from the estate of the Raja, although such a course is absolutely forbidden by the law relating to the Court of Wards. The contention put forward here on behalf of the appellants cannot be maintained. It was clearly open to the Collector in these proceedings to plead that, as he had not been made a party to the original suit, he was in no way bound by the decree. It is argued here that the Collector really represents the ward and that the mere substitution in the proceedings of the name of the Collector in place of the ward, does not alter the situation so as to give the Collector any status to plead that the decree is not binding upon him. This is a curious argument to come out of the mouth of a decree-holder who sued the Raja and not the Collector. If, as is now pleaded, the Collector is the representative of the Raja, then the answer is that the decree-holder, before he got his decree, ought to have brought the suit against the Collector. The fact is that for the purposes of legal proceedings the Collector himself is the ward. There is no question of representation of interest in the ordinary sense. The law requires that the suit is to be brought in the name of the Collector. In other words, as the Judge of the lower Appellate Court puts it, the ward has no legal personality which the Court can recognise in the matter of suits or proceedings in execution of decree. The ward personally is in the eye of the law nobody for the purposes of suits brought by or against him, and in the present case the correct view must necessarily be that the decree which the appellants here possess is a nullity, as it was not obtained against any legal personality representing the Raja of Oel. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A deposit under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and the subsequent dismissal of the application before service of notice on the mortgagee, is in effect no tender even if the money remains in Court. The dismissal of the application is tantamount to a withdrawal of the money and interest does not cease to run under section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 770, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. B. Narasimha Rao, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—The question is whether the defendants are entitled to the benefit of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act in respect of the sum deposited in Court by their father on 11th April 1908 with the petition, Exhibit I. This petition was dismissed at the depositor's own request on 23rd November 1908 before notice was served on B. Subba Rao, one of the mortgagee's heirs. Respondents' Vakil argues that as the money was still left in Court, it was at the disposal of the mortgagee's heirs, but it seems clear to me that after the dismissal of the petition on 23rd November 1908 none of the mortgagee's heirs could have obtained payment of the money and no Court would have ordered payment under such circumstances. The dismissal of the petition was, therefore, tantamount to the withdrawal of the money and following the ruling of Krishnaswami Chettyar v. Thippa Ramasawmi Chettyar (1), I must hold that the defendants are not entitled to claim cessation of interest.

I may add that even apart from this ruling, regarding the correctness of which my learned brother and I are not entirely at one, I fully agree with the reasons assigned by him for coming to the same view as myself in the present case.

TYABJI, J.—In this case it seems to me that interest did not cease to run under section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act, for this reason that the mortgagors did not do all that had to be done by them to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of Court. The original mortgagee had died before the deposit was made, leaving four sons as his heirs. The mortgagors brought the money into Court and after notice, had been sent to three of the sons but before the fourth had received notice, they requested the Court to dismiss their petition in which they had prayed that the mortgagees should be asked to take the money in payment of the mortgage amount. The withdrawal of this petition was withdrawal of proceedings under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. The mortgagors thus did not complete what they had to do under section 83. In short the purport of sections 83 and 84 seems to me to be that when the mortgagor tenders through the Court the money due on the mortgage, he is relieved from payment of further interest because the mortgagee was in a position to receive the mortgage money and has refused to take it. Here there was no refusal because there never was any proper tender. For the tender (through Court) consists at least of deposit with notice to the persons entitled to withdraw the money and though the money was here deposited, there was no notice.

The result will be that interest on Rs. 593-2-0 at 10½ per cent. per annum from 12th May 1908 to 14th January 1912 will be added to the amount decreed with costs here and in the lower Courts with further interest at 6 per cent. per annum up to date of payment. Time for payment is extended by three months.

KRISHNIENGAR v. VIRARAGHAVATHATHACHARIAR.

Where the sub-letting is from year to year extending over a period exceeding five years, each sub-letting is in contravention of section 25 of the Tenancy Act.

A failure to consider whether section 66 should apply is a ground for revision but if the point was considered and the benefit of that section refused, there is no ground for revision.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 30th October 1911, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Allahabad, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—This case, a comparatively simple one, has been unduly prolonged by the extraordinary prolixity of the judgment of the lower Court. Whilst I entirely disagree with the view taken by the lower Court in regard to the way in which section 66 should be regarded, I am unable to say that ground for revision has been disclosed before me.

It has been argued, first, that inasmuch as this sub-letting had commenced before the Tenancy Act came in force it cannot be held to be contrary to the provisions of the Tenancy Act. It has been well recognised of late that when the sub-letting is from year to year and extends over a period exceeding five years' each sub-letting is in contravention of section 25. The case of applicant in this, therefore, fails.

The second ground urged before me was that the order refusing to apply the provisions of section 66 should be revised. Were the case before me in appeal I should not hesitate to amend the decree as I think the action of the lower Courts was harsh, but I am unable to say that there has been in their proceedings anything that could be called irregularity. In a previous decision it was held that the failure to consider whether section 66 should apply was ground for revision. In the present case it was considered whether section 66 should apply and for reasons given and given at extraordinary length, it was considered that they should not be applied. Whilst I disagree in principle, I do not think that the decision of the lower Court can be considered irregular.

A third objection in revision relates to an alteration made by way of review in the decree originally given. The lower Court states that owing to its failure to observe an entry in the patwari's list showing that certain numbers had been sub-let after the suit had been filed, he omitted to include these numbers amongst those for which a decree for ejectment was given. I think that in the circumstances he was entitled to review his previous order. The inclusion of the numbers in question amongst those from which ejectment was decreed was in accordance with the principles laid down in the original judgment.

The case for the applicant fails. The cross-application also fails. I have no hesitation in dismissing them. The lower Court in fact, in my opinion, went far too much against the respondent. I think it unnecessary to allow costs.

Application dismissed.

Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act (II of 1876), ss. 19, 56—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Disputes between private persons and claims against Government distinguished.

In a suit between private individuals for possession of land in respect of which there is no grantee, lessee or person having a status of landholder, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is not ousted by section 56 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act when the plaintiff bases his claim upon a title to possession by virtue of his having paid land revenue to Government under the rules made under section 19 of the Act and also upon the fact that he was in possession and was dispossessed by the defendant within 12 years before the institution of the suit. [p. 774, col. 2; p. 775, col. 1.]

The following Order of Reference was made by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Ormond to a Full Bench under section 11, Lower Burma Courts Act:—

The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that a strip of land belonged to them, for possession of the same and for Rs. 400 damages against the defendant for cutting dhane trees belonging to the plaintiffs on that strip of land.

Both the Lower Courts have found that the plaintiffs were in possession of this strip of land, that they had planted the dhane trees which the defendant destroyed and that the defendant had encroached on the plaintiffs' land. After the evidence had been taken as to whether the plaintiffs had been dispossessed by the defendant in respect of this strip of land, by consent a surveyor was appointed to investigate and report; and after his report has been received the defendant's Advocate asked the Court to frame an additional issue as follows:—Have the plaintiffs acquired the status of a land-holder or the title of a grantee to the disputed portion of land, and is not the jurisdiction of this Court barred by section 56 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act?

The Township Court refused to go into the question of jurisdiction. The defendant appealed to the District Court on the question of jurisdiction only and the present appeal by the defendant is only on the question of jurisdiction. It is contended that section 56 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act ousts the jurisdiction of a Civil Court in a suit of this nature. In their plaint the plaintiffs state that they are absolute owners in possession of this strip of land and the evidence shows the 1st plaintiff has paid revenue in respect of this strip of land for four years preceding the institution of this suit. Reliance is placed on the case of Mg. San Paing v. Shwe Hlaing (1), where it was held by a Bench of this Court (White and Irwin, JJ.) that if the plaintiff has neither a grant nor the status of a land-holder, his claim must come under section 19 of the Act, and the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to determine it. Mr. Justice Twomey in the case of Arunachallam Chetty v. Veerappa Chetty (2) and in the case of Maung Po Chit v. Periacurpen Chetty (3) was of the same opinion. On the other hand, there is a Bench ruling of Maung Yat v. Maung Tarok (4) by Copleston, C. J., and Fox, J., where it was held that section 56 of the Act bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Court only if the plaintiff claims to occupy merely under section 19 of the Act; and in the case of Saya Hlaing v. Mg. Lu Gyi (5) Mr. Hosking, the Judicial Commissioner, held that the words "Claims to occupy or resort to lands under sections 19, 20 and 21" in section 55 (b) of the Act refer to claims against the Government, and not to claims between private individuals. Section 56 (a) of the Act bars the jurisdiction of Civil Courts as to inter alia:—"Claims to occupy or resort to lands under section 19 and disputes as to the use or enjoyment of such lands between persons permitted to occupy or resort to the same."

(1) 1 L. B. R. 277.

MAUNG NAW v. MA SHWE HMAT.

The last part of the clause (a) of section 56 could only apply to the present case if both parties had in fact the permission of Government to occupy the land in dispute.

As to the first part of clause (a) of section 56:—Section 19 merely empowers the Local Government to frame rules. A "claim to occupy lands under section 19" must, therefore, mean a claim to occupy land under such rules. The rules prescribe the manner in which a license or title to occupy certain lands can be obtained from the Government and the conditions under which such license will be granted; and they empower any Revenue Officer to eject (on behalf of the Government) any person occupying any such lands in contravention of such rules. "A claim to occupy or resort to lands under section 19" means a claim against Government, to be granted under its rules a license to occupy certain lands; or a claim to be recognised by Government as its licensed occupier of such lands. If these words are intended to include a claim by a licensee of Government for possession against a private individual, the last part of clause (a) is necessary. If A obtains a license from Government to occupy certain lands in accordance with the rules (whether by payment of revenue or otherwise), he thereby obtains a title to such lands for the time being. If, relying upon his title, he sues B for possession, he cannot be said to be preferring a claim under the rules which authorised his title to be made.

Still less can it be said that A is preferring a claim under section 19, if, when suing B for possession, he does not allege any title derived from the owner, that is, any right to occupy the land under Government; but relies solely upon the fact that within 12 years before suit he was in possession and he was dispossessed by B. A and B may have been both trespassers, yet A in such a case is entitled to a decree unless B has a title.

If neither A nor B have any title to occupy the land under Government the Revenue Officer has, no doubt, power to eject either of them; but neither of them has the right to have the other ejected by the Revenue Officer. And if A is the licensed occupier of land under Government and B trespasses or encroaches on his land: there is nothing in the Act or in the rules under section 19 which empowers the Revenue Officer to eject B, either of his own motion or at the instance of A. In my opinion, not only does section 56 (a) of the Act not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court in this case, but the Revenue Officer would have no power to eject the defendant.

In view of the above divergent rulings, I refer for the decision of a Bench or Full Bench, as the Chief Judge may think fit, the following question:—

In a suit between private individuals for possession of land in respect of which there is no grantee, lessee or a person having a status of land-holder, is the jurisdiction of the Courts ousted by section 56 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act.

when the plaintiff bases his claim upon a title to possession by virtue of his having paid land revenue to Government under the rules made under section 19 of the Act and also upon the fact that he was in possession and was dispossessed by the defendant within 12 years before the institution of the suit?"

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

Fox, C. J.—Under section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Civil Courts have (subject to provisions in the Code itself) jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred.

To answer the question referred, it must be determined whether section 56 (a) of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act, 1876, read with section 55 (a) of the same Act, expressly or impliedly bars the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain and try a suit of the description stated in the question.

The effect of the sections is to bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts when a suit is a claim to occupy or resort to land under sections 19, 20 or 21 of the Act, or when it involves a dispute as to use or enjoyment of land which Government has not made a grant or a lease of or over which a right has not been acquired in one of the modes specified in the Act between persons permitted to occupy or resort to the same. In a suit of the description mentioned in the reference the plaintiff cannot be said to be making a claim to occupy or resort to land under section 19 of the Act. The basis of his claim has nothing to do with the Act. Sections 20 and 21 are not applicable. "Claim" in clause (b) of section 55 must mean claims advanced to Government or to some Government Officer.

Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant in the suit could be rightly classed as a person permitted to occupy or resort to land sued for, unless it were proved that they had been expressly permitted by a Revenue Officer to occupy the land. Rule 51 (a) of the rules under the Act does not contemplate any permission being required to enter on or remain in occupation of waste or uncleared land for purposes of cultivation. In a suit based upon plaintiff having been once in possession and having been dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law, it may be assumed that the plaintiff does not sue as one permitted to occupy or resort to the land. The latter part of clause (b) of section 55 would apply to such a case and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court would not be barred by section 56 (a).

Irwin, J.'s ruling in Mg. San Paing v. Shwe Hlaing (1), in so far as it held that if it appears at the hearing that the plaintiff has neither a grant nor the status of a landholder his claim falls under section 19 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted by section 56 read with section 55 (b) of that Act, appears to me to be erroneous. Although neither party may have a right or title to the land as against Government, in a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act previous possession merely is sufficient to support a claim for possession against one who has dispossessed the plaintiff, and it is also sufficient in an ordinary suit for possession when the defendant who has dispossessed the plaintiff is a wrong-doer and has no title himself—vide Krishnarav Yashvant v. Vasudev Apaji (6) and Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous (7).

In Gobind Prasad v. Mohan Lal (8) it was held that a person in possession of land without title has an interest in the property which is heritable and good against all the world except the true owner, an interest which, unless and until the true owner interferes, is capable of being disposed of by deed or Will or by execution sale, just in the same way as it could be dealt with if the title were unimpeachable.

In view of this principle of law the opening words of the section 6 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act must be taken to mean that no right of any description as against the Government shall be deemed to have been or shall be acquired over land to which the part applies, except in the modes specified in the section. Read in this way, this section affords no bar to a Court giving a plaintiff a decree in a suit of the description mentioned in the reference. I would answer the question referred in the negative.

stated therein and for the reasons stated in my reference, I would answer the question referred in the negative.

TWOMEY, J.—As regards the first part of section 55 (b), I agree in thinking that the claims here contemplated are claims addressed to Government and not claims as against private persons, though it is apparently assumed in the directions issued under the Act (vide page 88 of the Land Revenue Manual) that “claims between private individuals” are included. The word “claims” in the first part of the section appears to have been used advisedly in contradistinction to the word “disputes” in the latter part. “Disputes” is the more appropriate term when there is a conflict of private interests. “Claims” is the word used in section 56 (b), (c) and (d) where it is quite clear that only claims against Government are contemplated.

The latter part of section 55 (b) can only refer to disputes between two or more persons jointly permitted

(i) to resort to the same grazing ground or the same taungya area, or

(ii) to occupy the same piece of waste land temporarily under rules issued in pursuance of section 19.

But as the existing rules under section 19, viz., rules 51 and 52 do not require a cultivator to obtain permission before occupying such land, it follows that there can be no disputes of class (ii) in regard to land occupied for purposes of cultivation. The case under reference clearly does not fall under class (i). I concur in answering the question referred in the negative.

JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Res judicata—Execution proceedings—Two inconsistent orders—Later to prevail against earlier.

A decree for possession of property and costs was passed against several persons. On an application for execution of this decree a compromise was entered into between the decree-holder and some of the judgment-debtors, who had been pro forma defendants by which the decree-holder admitted that he had no claim against these judgment-debtors. The decree-holder sold the decree and the transferee applied for execution against these judgment-debtors as well. They objected and it was decided that they were no longer liable. The transferee in an another application for execution again joined these judgment-debtors and attached their property. They made an objection but they allowed it to go by default. In another application for execution against them they again made the same objection:

Held, that the later of the two inconsistent decisions in the proceedings must prevail against the earlier and that the objection was barred by the rule of res judicata. [p. 776, col. 1.]

Execution first appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut.

The Hon'ble Mr. Abdul Raoof, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, J.—One Sri Kishan Das obtained a decree for possession of property and costs against several persons including the respondents. When execution was taken out in 1905, the respondents protested that they had never been anything but pro forma defendants and that the decree should not be interpreted as making them jointly liable for costs alone with other defendants who had contested the suit. A petition of compromise was filed on April 20th, 1906, in which the decree-holder admitted in express terms that he had no claim against the respondents under the decree, and this compromise was made the basis of an order of the Court releasing the property of the respondents from attachment. Shortly after that the decree-holder sold the decree to the appellant, who in 1907 took out execution against the respondents. They put in an objection and the Court decided that the respondents were no longer liable under the decree. The appellant brought the case before this Court on appeal, and this Court held expressly that there had been a complete adjustment of the decree as between the original decree-holder and the respondents and that the appellant was bound thereby. Notwithstanding the decision of this Court the appellant in April 1910 again took out execution against the respondents and attached a sum of Rs. 28-8-0, which happened to be in Court to their credit, and at the same time he asked for the attachment of a much larger sum as against the other judgment-debtors. The respondents put in a petition of objection pleading that they had been discharged from liability under the decree, that property attached previously had consequently been released, and that the application for execution was contrary to previous orders passed by the Court. But the respondents allowed their objections to go by default, with the result that the application for execution was allowed and the money attached was paid out of Court to the appellant. The present application for execution was presented in June 1913. The respondents objected on the ground that it has been held more than once during the course of the execution proceedings that they are no longer liable under the decree. The appellant's contention was and is that the Court's order dismissing the respondents' objection in 1910, coupled with its order allowing the decree to be executed against the money belonging to the respondents, has the effect of wiping out the previous decisions passed in favour of the respondents, and on the principle of res judicata debars the respondents from pleading that the decree has been adjusted so far as they are concerned. It is conceded that the later of two inconsistent decisions in the course of execution proceedings must prevail against the earlier. Mallu Mal v. Jhamman Lal (1) and Rai Sham Kishore v. Ugrah Narain Singh (2). The question is whether the order passed against the respondents in 1910 should be regarded as a decision that the decree had not been adjusted so far as the respondents are concerned and that they were still liable for the balance of the costs decreed. The respondents' contention is that the order of the Court decided no more than that the respondents were in 1910 liable for a sum of Rs. 28-8-0. I am unable to accept this contention. The respondents' petition of objection distinctly raised the question whether they were liable under the decree or had been discharged from liability by the orders previously passed. No question of the extent of the respondents' liability was before the Court. The dismissal of their objections resulted no doubt in the sum of Rs. 28-8-0 only being paid out of Court to them, but the Court did not apply its mind to the question of the extent of the respondents' liability. It must, in my opinion, be taken to have decided that the decree had not been adjusted as alleged by the respondents, consequently execution might proceed as against them. It was also suggested that the appellant's application for execution, directed as it was against other persons than the respondents, was calculated to put them off their guard and to lead them to suppose that as only a small sum of money belonging to them had been attached and a much larger sum had been attached as against other persons, they had only to allow the small sum of Rs. 28-8-0 to be paid to the respondents in order to be rid of the whole business. The answer to this is that respondents were in no way misled by the appellant's application. They came in at once with a petition of objections and their failure to press it is not explained.

I am reluctantly driven to the conclusion that the decision of 1910 neutralised the previous decisions and left the respondents liable for the balance of the decree for costs. I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below dismissing the application for execution, and direct that the application be restored to the pending file and disposed of according to law. Costs of this appeal should be costs in the cause.

PIGGOTT, J.—I concur.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed, the order of the Court below is set aside with this direction that the application for execution be restored to the pending file and disposed of according to law.

Appeal allowed.

A transaction between the parties whereby the interest up to a certain date is calculated and added to the principal, thus wiping out the debt on account of interest, is a "payment" which saves limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 141 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 360 of 1911.

Messrs. M. A. Thirunarayanachariar and V. S. Kalatiram Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the authority of Kriyappa v. Rachapa (1), Mylan v. Annari Madan (2) and Original Side Appeal No. 20 of 1905 (unreported), we think that the transaction in this case evidenced by the accounts both of plaintiff and defendants, whereby the interest due up to October 25th was calculated and added to the principal, thus wiping out the debt on account of interest, was a payment which saved limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act. An objection has been taken that the defendants were prejudiced by the frame of the plaint, which did not give the defendants notice that the plaintiff intended to rely on this payment to save limitation.

An issue was framed on the question of limitation, and the parties having gone to trial on the subject, we cannot allow the appellants to raise this plea in the arguments in second appeal, especially when it has not been stated as a ground of second appeal. As regards the arguments (1) that the 5th defendant had no authority to make payments on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and make them liable by his acts and (2) that interest at Nadappu rates should not have been allowed, the Subordinate Judge has recorded findings in plaintiff's favour on these two points and as those findings are findings of fact and there is some evidence to support them, we cannot interfere. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Usufructuary mortgage—Subsequent simple mortgage—Covenant to pay money due under second mortgage first—Second mortgage barred by limitation, effect of.

A simple mortgage was executed in favour of the mortgagee of the same property under a previous usufructuary mortgage with a covenant that the mortgagor would pay the money due under the second bond first and then that due under the usufructuary mortgage. The mortgagor brought a suit to redeem the first mortgage at a time when a suit to recover the money due under the second bond was barred by limitation:

Held, that the mortgagor was entitled to recover possession of the property without paying the money due under the second mortgage. [p. 778, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Chaudhri, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit, brought to redeem certain property which was made the subject of a usufructuary mortgage, dated the 13th of February 1880. The principal sum secured was Rs. 900, and the mortgage-deed expressly provided that the usufruct was to go against the interest and that the mortgagor should not be entitled to an account from the mortgagee of the profits. The defence to the suit was that there had been a subsequent mortgage dated the 7th of July 1882, and that under the terms of this mortgage plaintiff could not succeed in the present suit without first paying off the amount due for principal and interest under the last-mentioned mortgage. The first Court gave effect to the defence and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court allowed the appeal.

The second mortgage was for a sum of Rs. 95, re-payable with interest at the rate of thirty per cent. per annum. The deed after reciting the facts that the property had been previously mortgaged contains the following provisions: "It is further stipulated that I should first pay the money due under this bond, and after that I should pay the mortgage-money." It is clear from the terms of this mortgage, taken in conjunction with the fact that the whole usufruct was to be applied to the keeping down of interest upon the first mortgage, that the second mortgage was in fact a simple mortgage. So long as it remained unpaid the interest would accumulate at the rate of thirty per cent. per annum, and according to the covenant the money due thereunder for principal and interest must be paid before the mortgagor redeemed the first mortgage. No principal or interest had ever been paid upon foot of this second mortgage. At the date of institution of the present suit a suit to enforce payment of the second mortgage would be barred by limitation, unless it can be said that on the true construction of the deed it was not open either to the mortgagor to pay off the amount due, or to the mortgagee to bring a suit, until such time as the mortgagor was ready to redeem the earlier mortgage. It seems to us absolutely clear that if the mortgagor, a year after the execution of the second mortgage, had tendered the sum of Rs. 95, plus a year's interest thereon, the mortgagee would have been legally bound to accept the same. He certainly could not have refused the tender by reason of the stipulation in the second bond that the mortgagor should pay the money due thereunder before he paid the mortgage on the earlier bond. Just in the same way we consider that if the mortgagee had brought a suit to enforce the second bond, the mortgagor could not have successfully pleaded that such suit was premature. The result is that we must take it that had a suit been brought on the 8th of August 1912 (that is, the day on which the written statement was filed) on the second mortgage, the same would have been barred by limitation. We will assume that had the plaintiff brought the present suit before the second mortgage was barred by limitation and had the defendant pleaded that the first mortgage could not be redeemed until after the second had been paid off, the plea would have been a good one. The question remains whether such a plea is still good notwithstanding that the defendant is barred from maintaining any suit to enforce the second mortgage. In effect the defendant is asking the Court to enforce against this property a claim which is barred by time. We think that this cannot be done and that the plaintiff is now entitled to recover possession of the property upon payment of the amount secured by the original mortgage. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Trustee of temple—Money borrowed on promissory note—Co-trustee not consulted—Personal liability.

Where the trustee of a temple borrows on a promissory note money for the benefit of the temple without consulting his co-trustees, he makes himself personally liable. [p. 779, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, in Small Cause Suit No. 2383 of 1913.

Mr. A. Srirangachari, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case is content with a personal decree against the 1st defendant and has not chosen to come to this Court in revision. The finding of the lower Court is that there was no necessity for borrowing the money although the amount of the note was spent for the benefit of the temple. It has not been shown before me that the necessity was so urgent as to compel the 1st defendant to borrow even without the consent of his co-trustee from a third party. I express no opinion as to whether the 1st defendant will not be entitled to recover this money from the trust funds as admittedly the money has been spent for the benefit of the temple. I think the conclusion come to by the Subordinate Judge is right. The 1st defendant who executed the promissory note without consulting his colleague has rendered himself personally liable. On that simple ground I think that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be upheld.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 31, 34—Property sold in execution of decree before adjudication—Secured creditor, right of.

P obtained a decree against E. In execution of the decree he attached certain property of E and put it to sale. After the realization of the sale-proceeds, the judgment-debtor was declared insolvent.

Held, that P was entitled to recover his debt out of the sale-proceeds. [p. 781, col. 1.]

B brought a suit against E and attached certain property of E before judgment. He obtained an ex parte decree against the defendant. The property so attached was sold in execution of another decree and certain sale-proceeds were realized. In the meantime the Subordinate Judge had set aside the ex parte decree on the condition that a certain portion of the sale-proceeds would stand security for any decree that might be passed in the suit in favour of B. Subsequently the judgment-debtor was declared insolvent. Ultimately a decree was passed in favour of B:

Held, that B was a secured creditor and he was entitled to draw out the money which stood security for his claim against E. [p. 781, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Cawnpore.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals Nos. 70 and 71 of 1915 arise out of the same insolvency proceedings. The facts are simple. One George Edwards has been adjudicated an insolvent on the 5th of January 1915 by the District Judge of Cawnpore on an application made by him himself on the 16th of November 1914. Parsotam Das, one of the appellants before us, claims to be a person whose circumstances fall within the terms of section 34 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and demands a right to certain money realised in execution of his decree against the insolvent by sale before the date of the order of adjudication. Beharilal, the other appellant, is a person who claims to be a secured creditor within the meaning of section 31 of the Act in respect of the sum of Rs. 1,100. It appears that some two or three decrees had been obtained in the Court of the Munsif of Cawnpore against the insolvent early in the year 1914. Among these was that of Parsotam Das, the appellant, who obtained his decree on the 14th of January of that year.

He applied for attachment and sale of certain property in execution of his decree in the Court of the Munsif. There were other decrees obtained against the insolvent in the Court of Small Causes but we are not concerned with them. In June 1914, Beharilal brought a suit in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge against the insolvent and he applied for attachment before judgment of part of the property which Parsotam Das had already attached in execution of his decree. The Court ordered attachment as prayed and then on the 15th of July 1914, it gave a decree ex parte against the insolvent in favour of Beharilal. Beharilal then applied in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for execution of his decree. This was on the 24th of July 1914. He also applied to the Subordinate Judge pointing out that the property of the judgment-debtor had been attached in execution of the decrees in the Munsif's Court, and he asked the Subordinate Judge to take action under, section 63 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that all the decree-holders and certainly Beharilal, in order to save time and trouble, agreed that the Munsif should carry on the execution of the decrees of his Court, more especially the decree of Parsotam Das, that he should sell the property and remit the assets so obtained to the Subordinate Judge so as to enable the latter Court to distribute the sale-proceeds rateably among the decree-holders. Accordingly the property was actually sold in execution of the decree of Parsotam Das by the Munsif, and the sum of Rs. 3,961 was transferred on the 19th of August 1914 to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, to which all the other decrees were also transferred for satisfaction. On the 4th of August 1914, the judgment-debtor applied, in the suit brought by Beharilal, to have the ex parte decree set aside. Notice was issued, and on the 24th of October 1914, an order was passed in favour of the judgment debtor, setting aside the ex parte decree and granting a re-hearing of the suit. Up to that time the sale proceeds, Rs. 3,961, had not been rateably distributed among the various decree-holders. It was stated in the Court of the Subordinate Judge that the amount which would approximately fall to the share of Beharilal's decree out of the sum of Rs. 3,961, which was in Court, would be Rs. 1,100. Thereupon the Court passed an order on the 24th October 1914, as mentioned above, setting aside the ex parte decree. The grounds given in the order were, that the application was supported by an affidavit; that the sum of Rs. 1,100 was stated to be the approximate amount out of the Rs. 3,961 which on rateable distribution would fall to the lot of Beharilal, and as that sum was in Court as security and it was only deficient to the extent of Rs. 300 as compared with the claim of Beharilal, therefore, the application for re-hearing was granted. On the 11th of November 1914 the Court passed another order on an application of Beharilal, which clearly shows the meaning of its order passed on the 24th of October 1914. In this order it distinctly states that the sum of Rs. 1,100 was security, and should remain as such security until the decision of the suit. We again note here that on the 27th of October 1914, Parsotam Das applied to the Munsif to have the sum which had been recovered by sale distributed among the other judgment-creditors other than Beharilal. The Munsif sent on the application to the Subordinate Judge, who stated that he would distribute the money himself and keep all the execution cases pending in his Court. On the 17th of November, the day after the application for insolvency had been made, the District Judge sent an order to the Subordinate Judge directing him to stay his hands and not to distribute the Rs. 3,961 among the creditors whose decrees were in process of execution. On the 17th of December 1914, Beharilal's suit was again decreed on a compromise, and on that very same date he applied for payment of the Rs. 1,100 which was deposited in Court. The Subordinate Judge sent on this application to the District Judge, who directed the Subordinate Judge not to pay the money.

These are the circumstances of the case, and the two points for decision are, first of all, whether the amount which Parsotam Das claims as payable to him himself is liable to distribution among the creditors or is money which falls within the meaning of section 34 of the Insolvency Act. The second point is, whether Beharilal is or is not a secured creditor within the meaning of section 31 in respect of the Rs. 1,100 mentioned above. The learned District Judge appears to have held that the sale of the property by the Munsif was not a sale legally held in execution of Parsotam Das's decree. He points out that under section 63 of the Code of Civil Procedure it was only the Subordinate Judge who ought to have put these decrees into execution, and that, therefore, in his opinion the sale by the Munsif was either an invalid sale or was a sale carried out by the Additional Subordinate Judge himself through the Munsif. The actual fact is as we have already pointed out. The Munsif with the consent of all the decree-holders sold the property which had been attached in execution of Parsotam Das's decree, and the assets were realized in the execution of that decree. They were in deposit in Court. That sale clearly was neither illegal nor invalid. All the parties agreed to it, and moreover clause 2 to section 63 clearly shows that there was nothing invalid in that sale. The simple fact, therefore, remains that after the execution of Parsotam Das's decree against the property of the judgment-debtor, assets had been realized by sale of the property before the date of the order of adjudication. The learned District Judge's order, therefore, in respect of Parsotam Das is clearly wrong and must be set aside, and we hold that Parsotam Das, when he proves his debt, is entitled to recover that debt out of the Rs. 3,961 which had been realized by sale in execution of his decree.

The case in regard to Beharilal is a little different. The contention on his behalf is that the sum of Rs. 1,100 was directed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge to be held as security for any sum which might be finally decreed to him, and when the case was decided and a decree was finally passed, that money, which was in deposit and stood as security, became the money of Beharilal himself and he was entitled to recover it at once by application, such as he made on the 17th of December 1914. On behalf of the Receiver it is maintained that this sum was never ordered to be a security as pleaded by Beharilal. The decision of the question depends on the meaning of the order passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 24th October 1914; that is, the order which was passed on the application of the judgment-debtor to have the ex parte decree set aside. We have already noted that order. In view of its language and in view of the language of the order of the 11th of November 1914, we have not the slightest doubt that the learned Subordinate Judge intended that the sum of Rs. 1,100 was to remain as security, in part at least, for whatsoever might be decreed to Beharilal on the re-hearing of the case. Such an order was a valid order, which the Court was clearly entitled to pass at the time of granting the re-hearing of the case under Order IX, rule 13. Money which is deposited as security in obedience to an order passed by a Court under Order IX, rule 13, is similar to money which is deposited under the Rules of the Supreme Court in England under Order XIV on an application for leave to defend. In the case of In re Ford, Ex parte the Trustee (1), it was held that money of this description must be treated as money paid in to abide the event, and is a security to the plaintiff for the sum for which he may obtain judgment at the trial. In the judgment in that case it is laid down as follows—

“The order must be treated as an order that the right to the money when paid into Court shall abide the event: see Bird v. Barstow (2), where the order appears to us to have been in the same form as in this case; and it is settled that where money is ordered to be paid into Court to abide the event it must be treated as a security that the plaintiff shall not lose the benefit of the decision of the Court in his favour.” It seems to us quite clear that when a decree was passed in favour of Beharilal, the sum of Rs. 1,100 which stood as security was his, and he was entitled to draw it out from Court and appropriate it to his own use. The application of the 17th of December 1914 ought to have been granted. It is suggested that the District Judge's order might be treated as an order passed by him under section 13, clause 3, of the Insolvency Act. In the first place, it was clearly not an order for attachment at all and in the second place, the money was not under the control of the debtor. We think there is no doubt that Beharilal was a secured creditor in respect of the sum of Rs. 1,100 mentioned above.

We, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge. We declare Beharilal a secured creditor to the extent of Rs. 1,100 and that he is entitled to recover that sum as against the Receiver. Each of the appellants will recover their costs as against the Receiver out of the estate of the insolvent.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tuticorin, in Appeal Suit No. 58 of 1914, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Tuticorin, in Original Suit No. 116 of 1912.

FACTS.—The 3rd defendant in the case, who was the manager of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his nephew, made a gift of a portion of the landed property belonging to the joint family in favour of his daughters on the occasion of their marriage. The nephew sued for a declaration that the gift was not binding on him and that it was in any case unreasonably large in proportion to the joint family property. The District Munsif, Tinnevely, found that, though the properties gifted constituted nearly a fourth of the immoveable properties of the joint family, it was not unreasonable and upheld the gift relying on the cases reported as Ramasami Ayyar v. Vengidusami Ayyar (1); Kudutamma v. Narasimha Charyulu (2); Anivilla Sundararamayya v. Cherla Sitamma (3); and Pugalia Vettorammal v. Vettor Goundan (4). On appeal the Subordinate Judge found, however, that the properties gifted were only about a tenth of the joint family property, but otherwise agreed with the District Munsif and held that the cases above-mentioned were conclusive on the point.

Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, for the Appellant.—The finding of the lower Appellate Court that the properties gifted were only about 1/10th of the joint family property is based on a misconception. Even assuming that it is correct, the gift cannot bind the plaintiff, who is a co-parcener, and not the son and grandson of the donor. The test of the binding character of an alienation by a father as against his son is not always the same as it is in the case of an alienation by a co-parcener, who is not the father of the person whom it is sought to bind. In all the cases relied on by the lower Courts the gift was by the father of the person making the gift and the texts cited were those which were only applicable to cases of "father and son." This important distinction between the two cases is clearly pointed out by Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in Anivilla Sundararamayya v. Cherla Sitamma (3). See also Bachoo Harkisondas v. Mankorebai (5).

JUDGMENT.—It is argued that though the gift may be binding on the son of the donor, or on a reversioner when made by a widow, it is not binding on the other co-parceners. We are of opinion that this contention cannot be sustained. According to the authorities cited in the decisions referred to by the lower Appellate Court, the gift is binding on the joint family.

There is no other question of law. The second appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

custom or contract to the contrary, the site reverts to the zemindar and the tenant who built the house at his risk has to remove his materials and vacate the site. [p. 785, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur.

Mr. Ramakant Malaviya, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in the Court of first instance is, admittedly, the zemindar of Mauza Kataila. According to him the defendants were non-occupancy tenants who have been recently ejected from their cultivatory holdings in Mauza Kataila. He says that the defendants in the time of his predecessor and with the permission of his predecessor built a dwelling house and a cattle-shed for the purpose of agriculture. As the defendants have been ejected from all the cultivatory holdings, he contends that they have no longer any right of residence on the land in dispute. He asked them on several occasions to quit but they have failed to do so. His prayer to the Court was that he might be given a decree for possession of 5 biswas of pukhta land as set out in the plaint and the defendants be directed to remove their materials from the land.

The defendants in their written reply took up the position that the house built by them was built for all purposes for which a house could be used. It had been in existence for more than 12 years, indeed for many generations, hence the plaintiff is not entitled to recover possession. The Court of first instance had no hesitation in awarding the plaintiff a decree. It held that the house was appurtenant to the agricultural holding and that when a tenant ceases to have any holding, his right of occupation in the abadi ceases,—this, of course, in the absence of a special contract to the contrary and in this case no special contract was pleaded. It accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for ejectment.

The defendants went in appeal and their contention in appeal was practically the same as in the Court of first instance, with this addition that there can be no presumption in law regarding the house of a tenant that that house was built merely for agricultural purposes. They laid stress upon the house being a very big one, consisting of three sections, defendants had always considered it their place of residence, made additions to it from time to time, and the suit was time-barred. It will be noted in these pleadings that no suggestion has been made at any stage of the case that the defendants are possessed of more than one house in the abadi. The lower Appellate Court held that there were two points before it for determination; the first point that it laid down was whether the house in dispute was or was not appurtenant to the agricultural holding. Secondly, it said that there was absolutely no evidence on the record to show that the house-site was an appurtenance to the agricultural holding. There was no presumption in law that the house occupied by a tenant was of necessity an appurtenance to the cultivatory holding. The learned Subordinate Judge said that he could find no precedent to this effect. On the contrary, he referred to the case of Moti Ram v. Munna Lal (1) and to the case of Net Ram v. Tej Ram (2). As he understood these judgments he held that there was no presumption that a site occupied by a dwelling house of every agricultural tenant was necessarily an appurtenance to the agricultural holding. The question was a question of fact and not of law and it rested with the plaintiff zemindar to prove that the house was the appurtenance of the tenancy. In the present case there was no evidence that the defendants held the site as an appurtenance, they must be held to have occupied the site adversely to the plaintiff and his predecessor and they are now owners.

This a startling proposition. It amounts to this that when the zemindar wishes to eject a tenant, who has been ejected from his tenancy, from the house occupied by him he must come into Court prepared with the proof that at the beginning of their relations the zemindar granted the respondent tenants their position in the abadi as appurtenant to their holding. If the zemindar cannot prove this, the tenants must be held to have occupied the site adversely to the zemindar and if they had been in possession long enough, to be the owners of the house in dispute. The zemindar has come to this Court in appeal and has taken five pleas. First, that the Court below has erred in holding that the sites are not appurtenances to the holdings from which the tenants have been ejected. Secondly, that the Court is in error when it says that as there is no evidence that the tenants held the sites as appurtenances they must be held to have occupied the sites adversely to the plaintiff and his predecessors and have now become owners; thirdly, that it was for the defendants to prove that they occupied the land adversely to the zemindar. The remaining two pleas do not call for any notice. It must be remembered that throughout the present case there is no suggestion that the defendants have been occupying more than one house. The judgment speaks of sites, but on looking at the plaint I find that the plots are a house and a cattle-shed. There is no suggestion, moreover, from first to last that there was any special contract made between the original tenants and the original zemindar at the time of their entering into possession. It is the ordinary case of a site in the village abadi. The cases on which the learned Subordinate Judge has relied are not precedents that can be followed in the present case. The circumstances in each case were different from the circumstances here. In Moti Ram v. Munna Lal (1), the house in dispute was admittedly a house built and tenanted for agricultural purposes and the contention was that by a special custom prevailing in the village such a house could be sold. It is true that the learned Judge of this Court before whom the case came used these words: "There is no legal presumption that every dwelling house belonging to an agriculturist is appurtenant to his holding. A house may or may not appertain to the holding, and the fact whether it does appertain to the holding must be established in each case upon the evidence." But the learned Judge never went on, as the learned Subordinate Judge in this case, to lay down that if a plaintiff failed to prove that the defendant held the house as appurtenance, the defendant must be held to have occupied the house adversely and to be the owner thereof. In Moti Ram v. Munna Lal (1), the zemindar was not a party to the suit; the contending parties were the mortgagees of a grove and of the house in the abadi and the defendants were the mortgagors. In Net Ram v. Tej Ram (2), the contention was that the land in dispute was a piece of waste land in the abadi which the co-sharers of the village had permitted the defendants to use for stacking manure and keeping cattle and the house occupied by the tenant was not in dispute at all. The learned Judge in his judgment says: "In the abadi of a village, the house of a tenant is the only thing that can be said to be an appurtenance to his holding." What is an appurtenance to the holding of an agricultural tenant, he held, must be decided according to the circumstances of each case. In the case before him the defendants had got a large area of land to cultivate, for which they required a number of bullocks and other accessories they must have a piece of land for their cattle and manure. And if the plot in suit had been allowed to remain in their possession for more than 20 years by the zemindars of the village for the use of cattle and manure, the plots had become an appurtenance to the agricultural holding of the defendants. In this case, too, the extraordinary decision was not arrived at that if the plaintiff did not prove that the land in dispute was an appurtenance, the defendants, if they held possession for more than 12 years, had acquired a title by adverse possession and had become owners of the property in dispute. It seems to me that a decision of this kind shows a complete ignorance of the ordinary position in these Provinces of zemindars and tenants with reference to a site in the abadi. Ordinarily the zemindars are under Government owners of every inch of ground within a mahal, whether that ground be cultivated or waste. If any one other than the zemindar seeks to establish a title to any portion of this land, the burden is on him to prove the special circumstances or special contract under which he claims title. There are, undoubtedly, cases in which it can be established and is established that adverse possession has been held and maintained for a sufficient number of years and that proprietorship has passed away from the zemindar, but the presumption is the other way. The zemindar admits a tenant into the village and in order to keep him contented and happy grants him a portion of the land within the so-called abadi and in some cases no doubt gives him permission to use other portions of the abadi for other purposes, but the tenant comes in as a tenant of the zemindar both as regards the cultivatory land and the site or sites in the abadi. It is contrary to common sense that the zemindar would let a person occupy any portion of the land in a nahal except for purposes connected with the village. If the person in possession sets up a title adverse to the zemindar, it is for him to prove how he acquired the title. The learned Munsif was quite right in holding that the presumption was in favour of the site occupied being an appurtenance to the tenancy. Circumstances are quite different if it be the case that more than one site is held by the contesting quondam tenants, but I need not discuss that question in this judgment for that is not the case before me. The contention that the house was built for every purpose for which a house can be built is not entitled to much weight. The zemindar knows that the site in the abadi is his by right and that the tenant must know the same. If the tenant chooses to build on the site allotted to him by the zemindar a three storeyed house or some house out of the common, the zemindar is not bound to go and expostulate with him for having built such a house. As long as the tenant cultivates the land in the village he will remain. If he abandons, or is ejected from the tenancy, then unless there be some special custom or contract to the contrary, the site reverts to the zemindar and the tenant who built the three storeyed house at his risk has to remove his materials and vacate the site. This is the general law of the land in my opinion.

The result, then, is that I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Appeal decreed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Suit, dismissal of, on ground that proper remedy was by execution, if legal—Court trying suit incompetent to determine matter in execution, whether sufficient reason for not treating suit as application—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 23—Specific performance, stranger to contract, whether entitled to—Practice—Costs—Negligent conduct of case in lower Court—Case not properly set out and proper evidence not produced—Success in appeal—Right to costs.

In the face of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, which permits suits to be treated as proceedings, the dismissal of a suit on the ground that the plaintiff must have applied for executing a decree and not have sued to enforce specific performance of a contract is bad in law. The mere fact that the Court which decided the suit would have had no jurisdiction to determine the matter in execution is not a sound reason for not treating the suit as an application in execution. [p. 786, cols. 1 & 2.]

A stranger to a contract is not entitled to enforce specific performance of the same. [p. 786, col. 2.]

An appellant, who, in second appeal, gains an advantage which he had lost by his negligence in the Courts below in not setting out his case properly and by not supporting it, in the first Court, by proper evidence, is not only not entitled to his costs of appeal but must pay the costs of the respondent. Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Ramnad at Madura in Appeal Suit No. 276 of 1912, preferred against that of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura in Original Suit No. 128 of 1911.

FACTS of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant:—The dismissal of the suit is illegal. Section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code expressly empowers the Court to treat a suit as an application. The ground on which the learned District Judge based his decision is not sound. The suit was originally instituted in the Permanent Sub-Court and the Temporary Sub-Court is only a relieving Court which tries suits transferred to it from the Permanent Court. Justice would have been advanced by the District Judge directing the suit to be treated as an execution proceeding and transferring the same to the file of the Permanent Sub-Court for disposal.

LAKSHUMANAN CHETTY v. MUTHIAH CHETTY.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents:—The decision of the District Judge is correct, though the ground on which he put it cannot be supported. The contract of which specific performance was sought was between one Annamalai Chettiar and the respondents. The plaintiff was not a party thereto and he could not, therefore, sue for specific performance of that contract. Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (1) and Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (2).

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, in reply:—As regards the new ground suggested by the other side, the Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was the agent of Annamalai Chettiar and the District Judge has not dissented from that finding. So the suit was maintainable by the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge in appeal has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the plaintiff, instead of suing for specific performance of the contract, should have made his application in execution.

We think that the District Judge should not have dismissed the suit when section 47, Civil Procedure Code, permits suits to be treated as proceedings under this section.

The only reason given by the District Judge for this course is that the Court which decided the suit would have had no jurisdiction to determine the matter in execution. This is not in our view a sound reason. This suit itself, though tried by the Temporary Subordinate Court of Ramnad, was instituted in the Permanent Subordinate Court of Ramnad, before which proceedings in execution of Original Suit No. 166 of 1907 of the Chief Court of Rangoon were actually pending at the time of this suit, the decree having been transferred to that Court for execution. The Temporary Subordinate Court is a relieving Court, trying such suits as are transferred to it from the Permanent Subordinate Court. It was quite within the power of the District Judge to do justice to the parties by directing the suit to be treated as a proceeding in execution and at the same time transferring it to the file of the Permanent Subordinate Court for disposal.

The respondents' Pleader now seeks to support the lower Appellate Court's order by arguing that the District Judge was wrong in thinking that the plaintiff could sue upon the contract entered into by the respondents with Annamalai Chettiar. On the face of it this contention is a good one, as the contract, Exhibit A, purports to be one only between Annamalai Chettiar and the respondent and a stranger would not be entitled to enforce it specifically. [See Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (1) and Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (2).] But the appellant's Pleader now maintains that Annamalai Chettiar was plaintiff's agent and that the Subordinate Judge found him in fact to be so. The District Judge pronounced no opinion on the question of fact whether Annamalai Chettiar was the plaintiff's agent or not. The plaintiff let in no oral evidence on the point and contented himself with relying on the documentary evidence of the vartamanam and hundi, the genuineness of which was not disputed.

We must set aside the District Judge's decree and direct him to take the appeal again on his file and to dispose of it in the manner we have indicated above. When the matter comes before the Court executing the decree, the question whether Annamalai Chettiar was the plaintiff's agent or not will be res integra so far as that Court is concerned and either party will thus be in a position to adduce evidence on the point, if so advised.

Though we have allowed the appeal, we recognise the fact that the appellant has secured an advantage which he lost by his negligence in not setting out his case properly and by not supporting it in the first Court by proper evidence. We do so by directing that in this Court he should bear his own and respondents' costs. The Execution, application for, dismissed for default—Attachment, if continues—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 276—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57.

A decree was passed against a certain person and his property was attached. While an appeal against this decree was pending in the High Court the application for execution (under the old Code of Civil Procedure) was struck off on account of the decree-holder's default in not paying the process fees. After this the judgment-debtor made a gift of the property:

Held, that under the old Code the attachment was not withdrawn by reason of the dismissal of the application for execution and the transfer made by the judgment-debtor was void. [p. 787, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 18th March 1913.

Mr. A. E. Ryves (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal and the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' predecessor-in-title obtained a decree for mesne profits against Hayat Ali Shah and others on the 28th of August 1905. On the 11th of June 1906, he applied for execution of the decree and on the 23rd of July 1906, certain property of the judgment-debtors was attached. The execution case was struck off on the 18th of April 1907 by reason of the decree-holder's default in paying certain requisite fees. Meanwhile an appeal from the decree was pending in the High Court. After the disposal of the appeal the decree-holders applied for the revival of the execution proceedings on the 16th of July 1909 and they prayed for the sale of the property which had already been attached. On the 18th of August 1908, Hayat Ali Shah made a gift of the attached property in favour of his mother who, on the 16th of February 1909, sold the said property to the principal respondents. Upon the objection of those respondents the Court released the attachment and thereupon the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, was brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that they were entitled to proceed against the attached property on the ground that the gift and the sale were void as against them as the property had been attached on the 23rd of July 1906 and the transfers were made pending the attachment. The question to be considered is whether the property should be deemed to have been under attachment on the date on which the gift by Hayat Ali Shah in favour of his mother was made. On behalf of the defendants it is contended that the striking off of the execution proceedings should raise a presumption that the attachment had been withdrawn. Under the present Code of Civil Procedure if an application for execution is dismissed for default, it must be deemed that the attachment was withdrawn, but there was no such provision in Act XIV of 1882, which was the Code of Civil Procedure applicable at the time when the execution case was struck off on the 18th of July 1907. It has been held by this Court in a number of cases that unless there is a clear order withdrawing the attachment, the presumption will be that the attachment continues. No doubt in some cases the opinion has been expressed that the question is one of the intention of the Court and the parties. If we were to consider the case from that point of view, it is clear that the intention of the Court was to maintain the attachment, for we find that when an application was made to revive the execution proceedings, the Court held, on the 2nd of August 1909, that no further attachment was necessary and that the property was already under attachment. The delay which had taken place in following up the attachment is explained by the fact that an appeal was pending from the original decree in the High Court. We think the Court below was wrong in holding that the property was not under attachment when the gift in favour of the judgment-debtor's mother was made. That gift having been made during the pendency of an attachment was void against the attaching creditor and the sale made by the donee falls with it.

BAKHTAWAR KHAN V. NIAZ-UL-NISSA.

It was urged on behalf of Hayat Ali Shah that he was not a party to the original suit and that it was through an error that his name appears in the array of judgment-debtors. It is admitted that the decree for mesne profits was passed against him. We allowed him an opportunity of getting the decree amended if his statement was true but we are informed that the application made by him has been rejected. We must hold that Hayat Ali Shah was a person against whom the decree sought to be executed was passed. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and decree the plaintiffs' claim with costs in both Courts, including fees in this Court on the higher scale

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 60, 185—Notice under s. 60—Time, from when runs—Omission to state date from which time is to run—Material irregularity.

In a notice issued under section 60 of the Agra Tenancy Act the time should run from the date of the issue of the notice and the notice should plainly state this. An omission to do so is a material irregularity. [p. 788, col. 2.]

Application for revision of the orders of the Collector of Moradabad, dated the 4th March 1913, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Moradabad District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

TWEEDY, J. M.—(November 22nd, 1913).—A good deal of irrelevant matter has been introduced into this case by the Assistant Collector in his unnecessarily long judgment and the aspersions made in it and in the petitions of the applicant on the character of the respondent are unwarranted by the evidence. The Collector has said all that can justifiably be said in the matter and there is no warrant whatever for supposing that the Tahsil authorities did anything but their duty in respect of the case. The applicants, accustomed to the procedure of our slow moving Courts, were taken by surprise and when they expected to get almost unlimited grace to pay in the decree money they found out too late that they were mistaken. The husband of the respondent was a member of the District Board and it is not surprising that the Tahsil authorities were more energetic about his case than is usual. The applicants are Mewatis and, from their attitude in this case, no doubt troublesome tenants whom the zamindar was glad to get rid of. But as the Collector has said, all this is obviously not a reason for interference unless there is some definite irregularity in the procedure which can be dealt with under section 185. The holding is a large one (122 bighas in extent) and the ejectment of occupancy tenants from such an extent of cultivation is (particularly in Amroha where there is so much friction between landlord and tenant) a serious matter.

I have been through the record with the utmost care and it seems to me that there was a material irregularity in the procedure which prejudiced the applicants. The notice issued under section 60 which directed the tenants to pay up within two months did not state from what date the two months should run. The time should run from the date of the issue of the notice, but the notice should plainly state this and it is quite likely that the applicants were misled by the omission. When the two months were up, the case was put up before the Tahsildar who (perhaps because he noticed this omission) ordered the issue of another parwana giving them an additional week. This was issued on 18th October and on 19th October the chaprasi returned to the Tahsil, saying the judgment-debtors (of whom there are four) fled away on seeing him so that he could not serve the notice on them. The case was put up on 26th October and the Tahsildar ordered ejectment to take place. This was carried out on the 28th October. On 31st October the applicants appeared in the Tahsil and gave a petition to the effect that they had attended on the 28th October to pay the money, but it had not been taken in the DWARKA PRASAD v. DIRGUJ SINGH.

Tahsil. Whether this is true or not does not appear, for 28th and 29th October were holidays but the original notice was served on them on 25th August and if the two months' grace be counted from that date, they could pay up till 25th October so that were too late in any case. But the Tahsildar granted them an additional week from the 18th October, the date of the order, or else from the date of service—which, it does not clearly appear—and that notice was never served upon them. I do not believe the story of the chaprasi couched in rather vague language that the judgment-debtors "seeing him ran away". It is not likely that they were all four together and if they ran away, it was the chaprasi's duty to affix the notice on their house. But the story is most improbable. We find that the order was issued on 18th and that the chaprasi returned with his story on the 19th, although the village is several miles distant. I think this story is probably a flight of the imagination and that the applicants' story is true that they had no notice whatever after 25th August. This irregularity then seems to justify interference with the Assistant Collector's order. I think that, subject to due consideration of the landlord's rights, a further opportunity should be given to the applicant to pay in the amount due with all costs. I, therefore, would quash the order of ejectment and direct the issue of a fresh notice.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 150—Land held free of rent with or without landlord's consent, distinction between—Ejectment—Remedy.

JANKI KUAR v. LACHMI NARAIN.

Where land is held free of rent, distinction must be drawn between cases where the land is so held (1) with consent and (2) without consent of the landholder. In the latter case Selected Decision No. 3 of 1910 will apply but not in the former case as he is not a tenant and the remedy of the landlord is to proceed by a suit under section 150, Act II of 1901.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 5th April 1910, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Fatehpur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—Even if it be assumed that the entry in the records regarding the field in question as free of rent is correct, I do not think that this case can be considered to be similar to that decided in Selected Decision No. 3 of 1910. In that case it was not doubted that the land was occupied without the consent of the landholder. In the present case the land has been for a very long period, including one Settlement recorded as part of the holding of the appellant. I cannot see that there is the slightest reason to believe that it is occupied without the landholder's consent. The applicant for revision is, therefore, in a dilemma. If the land is part of the holding and included in the rent of the holding, defendant has occupancy rights in it. If the land is held rent free, not being land occupied without the landlord's consent, the respondent is not a tenant and cannot be ejected by suit under section 58. The landlord can only proceed by suit under section 150 and as respondent's period of occupation is over 12 years, he would, even if rent were assessed, be declared to have acquired occupancy rights.

The application is dismissed with costs on applicant.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Cawnpore.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for possession of two shops and the rooms on the upper storey of these shops and for a declaration that a decree, dated the 4th of June 1907, of the Court of the Additional Judge of Cawnpore is null and void and ineffectual. The property in question along with other property originally belonged to one Balak Ram. He made an endowment of portions of his property and left the remainder to his two widows. The survivor of them made a gift in favour of one Bindeshri Prasad in 1903. The plaintiff is the successor-in-title of Bindeshri Prasad. In the year 1907 the defendants, the trustees of the endowment, brought a suit against Bindeshri Prasad to set aside the gift, on the ground that the property comprised in it was part of the endowed property and that the donor had no power to make the gift. That suit related to a residential house and apparently to two shops situated in front of the house together with the loft or bala khana on the shops. There was a dispute also in that suit in regard to the passage leading to the residential house. On the 4th of June 1907 the Additional Judge of Cawnpore made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs to that suit in respect of the two shops and the loft on the top of them, and dismissed the remainder of the claim. Subsequently to this the present plaintiff obtained an assignment from the son of Bindeshri Prasad and thus acquired title. He brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, on two grounds. First, that the Court acted ultra vires in the former suit in deciding the question relating to the two shops, as there was no dispute in that suit in respect to them, and secondly, that the decree in the former suit was procured by fraud. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit and its decree was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal and the contentions raised in the plaint have been reiterated in the appeal before us. The case has been argued ably on both sides and a large number of rulings, English and Indian, have been cited.

As regards the first ground stated above, we are of opinion that the plaintiff who stands in the shoes of Bindeshri Prasad, who was a defendant to the former suit, cannot set up a higher right than Bindeshri himself could have done. There can be no doubt that Bindeshri could not have maintained a separate suit to set aside the decree on the ground that the decree passed was in contravention of the pleadings and was, therefore, erroneous. His remedy was an appeal, and no appeal having been preferred, the decree, whether right or wrong, has become final between the parties and a fresh suit to set it aside on the ground that it was erroneously passed, offends against the well-known rules of res judicata. As regards the second ground, section 44 of the Evidence Act provides that a decree obtained by fraud is not binding. It may also be taken as settled by authority that a separate suit may be brought to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud. The question is, what is the nature of the fraud which the plaintiff must allege and establish in order to obtain relief? It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, that a plaintiff can maintain his suit on the ground that the decree in the former suit was obtained by producing fabricated evidence, and in support of this contention the ruling in the case of Venkatappa Naik v. Subba Naik (1) was mainly relied upon. Other rulings also were cited. In the case mentioned above the head-note runs thus:—"A suit will lie to set aside a judgment on the ground that it was obtained by fraud committed by the defendant upon the Court by committing deliberate perjury and by suppressing evidence. The law on this point is the same in India as in England." The facts of that case are not fully stated in the judgment, but reliance is placed by the learned Judges on two English cases, namely, Aboulouff v. Oppenheimer (2) and Vadala v. Lawes (3). We may mention that those were cases in which a suit was brought either to enforce or to set aside a foreign judgment, and in both instances the ground upon which the judgment was sought to be set aside was the ground of fraud. As pointed out by Jenkins, C. J., in Nanda Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (4), Sir John Rolt in Patch v. Ward (5) discussing what is meant by fraud when it is said that a decree may be impeached for fraud, said, "the fraud must be actual, positive fraud, a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case and obtaining that decree by that contrivance." Following these observations the learned Chief Justice remarked as follows:—"There is, however, no suggestion that the decree in the previous suit was fictitious or that the plaintiffs in this suit were prevented by any contrivance from placing before the Court in the former suit any materials relevant to the issue, nor has there been any subsequent discovery of evidence that goes to show fraud, or that the Court was misled in the former suit." He held that an error of fact or an error of law committed in the previous suit would not entitle a party to have the decree in that suit set aside on that ground. The same view was held by the same Court in Moriful Hug v. Surendra Nath Roy (6). In that case the learned Judges differed from the decision of the Madras Court to which we have referred above, and held that a decree in a suit cannot be set aside in a subsequent action brought for that purpose on mere proof that the previous decree was obtained by perjured evidence. The learned Judges followed the case of Baker v. Wardsworth (7). We think that the weight of authority is in support of the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in the two cases mentioned above, and we are of the same opinion. The reasoning of the learned Judges in both these cases commends itself to us. In the present suit the only fraud alleged is that stated in paragraph 3 of the plaint, namely, that the defendants made alterations in the eleven shops and the stable appertaining to the thakurdwar in such a way that they converted two shops into one shop, and one shop into a staircase room, and that owing to this circumstance and to the false evidence which was adduced to prove it, the Court was misled into holding that the two shops now in dispute were part of the endowed property. The present suit, therefore, is a suit based on the ground that a decree in the previous suit had been obtained by perjured and false evidence. That, in our opinion, is not a sufficient ground which would justify a party, who or whose predecessor-in-title was a party to the previous suit, to bring a subsequent suit with the object of setting aside the decree in the former suit. It was open to the defendants to prove by evidence that the allegations made and the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs were untrue. Agreeing, as we do, with the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in the cases mentioned above, we do not feel ourselves justified in following the decision of the Madras High Court referred to above and we deem it unnecessary to refer to the various other rulings cited at the hearing. The learned Vakil for the appellant has very properly drawn our attention to the recent decision of the same Court in Logadapatti Chinnayya v. Ketta Ramanna (8), in which the view taken in that case does not appear to have been approved. It is true that in the present case the plaintiff was not allowed to adduce evidence in regard to what was alleged by him to be fraud, but this is immaterial as, in our opinion, the allegations in the plaint as to the nature of the alleged fraud would not justify a Court in setting aside a decree passed between the parties in a previous suit, even if the allegations were established. We agree with the conclusion of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

(1) 29 M. 179; 16 M. L. J. 59.

JANKI KUAR, v. LACHMI NARAIN.

Ex-proprietary right, relinquishment of, not accompanied by surrender of possession—Relinquishment, effect of.

A relinquishment of ex-proprietary rights, not accompanied by the surrender of possession, is ineffective.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad, dated the 26th June 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Farrukhabad, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—On the facts as found by the Commissioner, his decision must be upheld. The relinquishment given by the respondents was ineffective not only as against the pre-emptor as found by the Commissioner, but as against the original vendee if, as has been found, the vendors maintained their possession of their sir after the sale. The Commissioner finds that they did maintain their possession of the land which has been recorded as their ex-proprietary tenancy, and that they gave it to the appellant for cultivation. In these circumstances they are still ex-proprietary tenants and the appellant, in regard to this land, their sub-tenant. The fact that there are at the present moment no boudraie dividing the plots in question from the neighbouring plots is not ground for refusing to eject. The areas in which the respondents have ex-proprietary rights are definite parts of the fields and as the Commissioner remarks, the boundary can be restored in the ejectment proceedings.

Fraud—Suit to set aside decree on ground of fraud—Order for personal decree under s. 90 of Transfer of Property Act passed after notice to judgment-debtor, finality of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 90.

A person who after due notice allows an order for personal decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act to be made against him without opposition is in the same position as a person who had such order made against him after contest. He cannot maintain a suit to set aside such decree without proving positive fraud. [p. 793, col. 2.]

A neglect to inform the Court of the fact that there had been a previous attempt at another stage of the litigation to get a personal decree, even assuming that the neglect was wilful, cannot amount to "fraud" which would entitle the plaintiffs to set aside the decree which was obtained by the defendants under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. Second appeal from a decree of Additional Judge of Farrukhabad.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.
Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs sought to set aside a decree, which the defendants had obtained under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, on the allegation that the same was obtained by fraud. The material facts are practically undisputed. The defendants or their representatives brought a suit upon foot of a mortgage dated the 25th of October 1893 and obtained a decree. They had asked in that suit not only for a decree for sale of the mortgaged property but also for a personal decree. This latter part of their claim was disallowed. Some years afterwards the decree-holders applied to the Court for a decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. Notice of the application was duly served on all the judgment-debtors.

They did not appear and the Court granted the decree, but limited it to the assets of the deceased mortgagor. This is the decree which it is sought in the present suit to set aside. Later on in execution of this decree a house of the judgment-debtors was attached. The male judgment-debtors objected that the house could not be sold on the ground that they were agriculturists. This objection was overruled. There was an appeal by the judgment-debtors which was dismissed. Both the Courts below have granted the plaintiffs a decree, setting aside the decree obtained by the defendants under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. The judgment of the Court of first instance is a little misleading unless one reads it as a whole, when carefully considered it is clear that the defendants practised no fraud on the plaintiffs to the present suit in respect of the service of notice of the application for the decree under section 90.

The plaintiffs are pardanashin ladies, and it is quite impossible for any litigant to serve process of the Court in any way which would violate the pardah of such ladies. When the Court of first instance says that these ladies knew nothing about the decree under section 90, it does not mean that the defendants in the present suit were in any way responsible for their want of knowledge. The ladies were duly served with the notice, so also were the male members of the family. No objection was taken to the granting of the decree under section 90 and no application was ever made to set it aside. The male members who were equally interested with the ladies in opposing the decree, evidently thought that there would be no chance of success. We find, however, when the house was attached in execution of that decree, they opposed the sale on the ground that they were agriculturists.

We now come to the only fraud which is suggested in the present case. The fraud is that the defendants (who then occupied the position of decree-holders) did not inform the Court that when the preliminary decree was being granted on foot of the mortgage, they had asked for a personal decree and that this had been refused upon the ground that having regard to the date of the mortgage and the position of the judgment-debtors, a personal decree ought not to be granted. Two questions arise. First, whether it is open to a party to challenge an order which has been made between the decree-holder on the one side and the judgment-debtor on the other, even where no fraud is alleged or proved. It seems to me impossible to contend that, where (in the absence of fraud) a matter has been decided in execution proceedings relating to the satisfaction of the decree, it is open to the parties to re-open matters which have been so decided by an independent suit. This has been settled by numerous decisions of the various Courts in India and also by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Some attempt has been made to distinguish between what is called an "ex parte" decree or order and a decree or order after contest. I do not think there is any just ground for such a distinction. Assuming a party to have been duly served with notice, if he neglects to come forward and avail himself of the opportunity of preventing a wrong order being made against him, I cannot conceive upon what possible ground he should be placed in a better position than the party who comes forward and informs the Court (in the manner provided by law) of his rights and prevents (so far as he can) a wrong order being made. In my judgment the party who after due notice allows the decree or order to be made without opposition is in the same position as a person who had a decree or order made against him after contest.

The next question is as to the nature of the fraud which must be alleged and proved in order to entitle the plaintiffs to have the decree set aside. On this part of the case Dr. Sulaiman admitted, as I think he was bound to admit, that he could not claim to have a decree under section 90 set aside on any ground of fraud which would not have been sufficient to have a decree in a suit set aside.

RAMRATAN LAL v. BHURI BEGAM.

A large number of cases have been cited on each side. On the part of the appellant the following cases were relied upon: Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (1), Nilmadhub Rai v. Naba Das (2), Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (3), Marochin v. Parsuram (4), Janki Kuar v. Lachmi Narain (5) and Nanda Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (6).

In the case of Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (1) Petheram, C. J., quotes at page 618 from the case of Flower v. Lloyd (7):—

"Assuming all the alleged falsehood and fraud to have been substantiated, is such a suit as the present sustainable? That question would require very grave consideration indeed before it is answered in the affirmative. Where is litigation to end if a judgment obtained in an action fought out adversely between two litigants sui juris, and at arm's length, could be set aside by a fresh action on the ground that perjury had been committed in the first action, or that false answers had been given to interrogatories, or a misleading production of documents, or of a machine, or of a process had been given? There are hundreds of actions tried every year in which the evidence is irreconcilably conflicting, and must be on one side or other wilfully and corruptly perjured. In this case, if the plaintiffs had sustained on this appeal the judgment in their favour, the present defendants, in their turn, might bring a fresh action to set that judgment aside on the ground of perjury of the principal witness and subornation of perjury; and so the parties might go on alternately ad infinitum."

In the case of Nanda Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (6) Jenkins, C. J., quotes with approval Sir John Rolt, L. J., in the case of Patch v. Ward (8):—

"The fraud must be actual, positive fraud, a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case and obtaining that decree by that contrivance."

In an earlier part of the judgment the learned Chief Justice says:—

"But it is a jurisdiction to be exercised with care and reserve, for it would be highly detrimental to encourage the idea in litigants that the final judgment in a suit is to be merely a prelude to further litigation. The fraud used in obtaining the decree being the principal point in issue, it is necessary to establish it by proof before the propriety of the prior decree can be investigated."

On the other side also a number of cases have been cited including a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Rajmohun Gossain v. Gourmohun Gossain (9). That was a case in which a party having expressly agreed not to appeal, in contravention of his agreement presented an appeal and obtained a decree, which he afterwards sought to set up against the other side. It is quite clear that this case was decided entirely upon its own facts and circumstances. The general law as to what constitutes sufficient allegation and proof of fraud to justify the setting aside of a decree in a previous suit was not discussed.

Special reliance was placed on a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (10). This decision was cited with approval by another Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Kedar Nath Das v. Hemanta Kumari (11). In this case a decree had been obtained against the plaintiff ex parte. The plaintiff succeeded in having the ex parte decree set aside but another ex parte decree was passed against him. The plaintiff then brought a suit to set aside that decree on the ground that the same had been obtained by means of false evidence. It would appear that the Court held that on the mere allegation that the decree was obtained by false evidence the plaintiff was entitled to re-open the litigation. If we assume that, no just distinction can be drawn between a person against whom a decree has been obtained without contest after due notice and a person who has appeared after notice and has been defeated after making the best fight he can. It seems to me that the decision of the learned Judges in the case cited omits to consider the great danger pointed out by Thesiger, L. J., in the case of Flower v. Lloyd (7). As the result of the decree of the learned Judges if the plaintiff had succeeded in setting aside the decree on the ground that the evidence advanced by the plaintiff in that suit was false, what was there to prevent the defeated defendant instituting another suit to set aside that decree on exactly similar grounds? This decision does not appear to have met with the universal approval of the Calcutta High Court [see Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (3)].

I would here like to point out that it is open to question whether a decree or order which has been obtained after due notice is very accurately described as "ex parte." It is hardly necessary to remark that an order obtained after notice is very different from an order obtained without notice.

In the present case it seems to me that the neglect to inform the Court of the fact that there had been a previous attempt at another stage of the litigation to get a personal decree, even assuming that the neglect was wilful, could not amount to "fraud" which would entitle the plaintiffs to set aside the decree which was obtained by the defendants under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The present suit is in reality an "appeal" against the decree of the Court long after limitation. I would allow the appeal.

RAFIQUE, J.—I find that the questions argued at the Bar do not arise in this case. The arguments have proceeded on the assumption that a personal decree under section 90 of Act IV of 1882 was obtained by the defendant-appellant not against the plaintiffs-respondents. On reference to the record I find that no personal decree was passed against them, but a decree against them was passed in their representative capacity against the estate of Imtiaz Ali, deceased, one of the mortgagors. The contention for them challenging the decree as having been fraudulently obtained is based on the assumption of a personal decree and as no such decree was passed, their contention fails. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed, the decrees of both the Courts below are set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.

BALLIE, S. M.—(April 17th, 1913.)—In the present case the suit was originally brought for the ejectment of Fakhrunnissa and others, who pleaded that they had received the land from one Zainul-abdin. Zainul-abdin was added as a party by order dated 7th October 1911. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that it was against persons who were not the sub-tenants of the plaintiff, but the sub-tenants of the plaintiff's sub-tenant. The Commissioner pointed out that Zainul-abdin, the alleged sub-tenant, had been made a party and held that the suit should have been decided on the merits. He proceeded to consider the questions raised and decreed the ejectment. The Commissioner, however, overlooked the fact that Zainul-abdin was added as a defendant after the expiry of the period during which suits for ejectment can be brought. Under Order 1, rule 10, clause 5, the proceedings as against Zainul-

The case was one in which the claim against the original defendants could not proceed without Zainul-abdin being joined as defendant. The entire claim, therefore, failed. The suit should have been dismissed.

Marriage—Restitution of conjugal rights—Lalungs—Custom regarding the residence of son-in-law in father-in-law's house, validity of.

Even if it be assumed that Lalungs are Hindus, their marriage relation must be governed by custom which prevails amongst the tribe, provided that the custom is neither immoral nor opposed to public policy. [p. 797, col. 1.]

There is nothing opposed to 'public policy' or 'the policy of the law' or injurious to the public interests, that is, to the interests of the tribe of the parties, or immoral in a tribal custom which requires a son-in-law to reside in the family of his father-in-law, if he can have there free access to his wife. [p. 797, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Nowgong, dated the 15th January 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, Nowgong, dated the 20th September 1913.

Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.

Babu Akhilbandhu Guha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit which has been described as a suit for possession of a wife or for restitution of conjugal rights. The first defendant is the wife of the plaintiff and the second defendant is his father-in-law. The parties are Lalungs, a semi-aboriginal tribe who are governed by many customs peculiar to themselves. One of their marriage customs is that the parents of the girl find a husband for her and take him to their house as a member of their family: the offsprings of the marriage enter the clan of the mother. The defendants place reliance upon this custom and contend that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for possession of his wife and for her removal from the residence of her father, as it is incumbent upon him to reside in the family of his father-in-law. They allege that the plaintiff is always welcome in the household of his father-in-law where he may have free access to the society of his wife. The Subordinate Judge has held that this custom cannot be disregarded in a Court of law and that the plaintiff is consequently not entitled to succeed in this litigation. On the present appeal it has been argued that the Lalungs are Hindus governed by the Hindu Law, and that the plaintiff is, under that law, entitled to possession of his wife, regardless of the custom, which, it is said, is, if not immoral, at least clearly opposed to public policy, as it serves to restrict the personal liberty of the husband.

It is not disputed that as was ruled in the case of Tekait Mon Mohini Jemadai v. Basanta Kumar Singh (1), the duty imposed upon a Hindu wife to reside with her husband wherever he may choose to reside is a rule of Hindu Law and not merely a moral duty, and that, consequently, an ante-nuptial agreement on the part of the husband that he will never be at liberty to remove his wife from her paternal abode would defeat that rule of Hindu Law and is invalid on that ground as well as on the ground that it is opposed to public policy. It is also not disputed that under the Muhammadan Law a condition that the wife shall, though adult, be at liberty to live in the house of her parents is void, though this question is by no means settled by authority, as is clear from the decision in Hamid-unnessa Bibi v. Zohir-ud-din Sheik (2). But there is nothing to show that the Lalungs are governed by the Hindu Law, in all respects. Even if it be assumed, however, that the Lalungs are Hindus, their marriage relation must be governed by custom which prevails amongst the tribe, provided that the customs are neither immoral nor opposed to public policy. The case before us is clearly not of an immoral custom such as came before the Courts in Reg. v. Karsan Goja; Reg. v. Bai Rupa (3); Reg. v. Manohar Raiji (4); Uji v. Hathi Lal (5); Khemkor v. Umiasankar Ranchhor (6); Narayan v. Laving (7); Koraga v. Queen (8). We are also unable to accept the contention of the appellant that the custom alleged in this case is opposed to public policy. As Mr. Justice Burrough observed in Richardson v. Mellish (9) public policy is a very unruly horse and when once you get astride of it you never know where it will carry you. These weighty words were adopted and approved by Lord Esher, M. R. in Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association (10). To the same effect are the observations of Cave, J., in Official Receiver, Ex parte, Mirams, In re (11). "Judges are more to be trusted as interpreters of the law than as expounders of what is called public policy." We do not see that there is anything opposed to "public policy" or "the policy of the law", as Kekewich, J., puts it in Hope Johnstone v. Hope Johnstone (12), in a tribal custom which requires a son-in-law to reside in the family of his father-in-law; the plaintiff is also entitled to free access to his wife, if he chooses to go to the house of his father-in-law. It is worthy of note that the Courts have recognised the validity of a custom or contract whereby the wife is to remain in her parents' house till puberty is established; Ka'eeram v. Gendhenee (13); Suntosh Ram Dass v. Gera Pattuck (14); In the matter of the petition of Dhuro'idhur Ghose (15); Surjyamani Dasi v. Kali Kanla Das (16); Arumuga Mudali v. Viraraghava Mudali (17), though a different view is possibly indicated in Dadaji Bhikaji v. Rukmabai (18). We are clearly of opinion that the Court should not assist the plaintiff to violate the tribal custom and to remove his wife from the home of her father. We are not prepared to say that it is injurious to the public interests, that is, to the interests of the tribe to which the parties belong, nor is it in conflict with any express law of the Ruling Power: Hirbae v. Sonabae (19); Howard v. Pestonji (20); Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram (21); Bhanu Nanaji Utpat v. Sundrabai (22); Mathura v. Esu (23); and we are not bound by any rule of public policy to disregard this custom, subject to and with full knowledge of which the plaintiff married the first defendant.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE,

REVENUE PETITION NO. 6 OF 1912-13

RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 11—Tenant's possession for over 12 years—Tenant, meaning of—Non-payment of rent for a number of years, effect of.

Occupancy rights are acquired by twelve years' possession as a tenant but the years in which there was no contract in regard to rent, will not count towards the acquisition of occupancy rights, whether he held with or without the consent of the land-holder.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 26th June 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector Cawnpore District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The objection taken to the Commissioner's decision is that he has himself constructed for the plaintiff an entirely new case. The plaintiff did not rely on the subletting as curtailing a part of the period for which appellant has been in cultivating possession. It is, in my opinion, unnecessary to decide whether the Commissioner was entitled to take this matter into consideration or not, as the appellant's case completely fails on the grounds put forward by the plaintiff himself. Occupancy rights are acquired by twelve years' possession as a tenant and a tenant is a person who is liable to pay rent unless some contract, express or implied, is proved by which he is freed from payment. It is certain that in this case appellant held for a number of years in which there was no contract in regard to rent. Whether he held with or without the consent of the land-holder, he was not during that time a tenant.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Hindu Law—Will—Rules of construction—Bequest in favour of daughter—Absolute estate, subject to the sheba—Charge on property—Testamentary power—Gift by Hindu widow having absolute power of alienation—Gift in favour of daughter's daughter.

In construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with regard to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family, and it may be assumed that as a general rule women do not take an absolute estate of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate. [p. 801, col. 1.]

But where the property in the Will was the separate property of the testator, and the major portion of it was not ancestral, and his object was to make provision for his daughter who, though married, was too young at the time to have children:

Held, that the testator, a Judge's sheristadar, by conferring an absolute power of alienation on the daughter subject to the keeping up and maintaining the sheba, must be presumed to have intended contrary to the general presumption and practice of Hindus to confer an absolute right of inheritance on the daughter; [p. 801, col. 2.]

that the provision for keeping up the sheba was merely a collateral charge on the property in whose hands it may be and did not affect the absolute character of the gift; [p. 802, col. 2.]

that a reversioner of the testator in face of the testator's daughter holding an absolute estate could not sue either herself or her heirs for administration of the property as trust property. [p. 802, col. 2.]

When their Lordships of the Judicial Committee speak of a general rule in connection with Hindus' knowledge that women do not take an absolute estate of inheritance which they are able to alienate, it cannot be held that they meant a rule of Hindu Law, since the rule of Hindu Law with regard to gifts to mothers and daughters is the reverse. [p. 801, col. 2.]

A daughter being a person to whom the testator can, under the Hindu Law, give an estate of inheritance, if the Will shows that it was intended that she should have the estate of inheritance, a benignant construction is to be used even if the language is ungram-matal or mistaken as to name or description, or in any other manner incorrect, provided it sufficiently indicates what was meant, that meaning shall be enforced to the extent and in the form which the law allows. [p. 801, col. 2; p. 802, col. 1.]

There is no universal presumption with regard to mother or daughter that in every case the estate she takes is less than would be taken by a male. [p. 802, col. 1.]

Decided cases, too numerous to be now questioned, have determined that the testamentary power exists and may be exercised at least within the limits which the law prescribes for alienation by gift inter vivos. [p. 802, col. 1.]

There is no application of the English Law of powers to Hindu Wills. [p. 803, col. 1.]

In ordinary life-estates of Hindu widows, the gift of a widow would be taken not from her but from the testator, but where the widow, under a Will by her husband, has absolute power of alienation in derogation of the rights of the sole reversioner—her daughter who is only entitled to the residue—a gift by the widow in favour of the daughter's daughters is valid and a reversioner of the testator in possession of the property cannot plead his right as reversioner against a suit by the donees, who are also heirs of the testator's daughter, to eject him as a trespasser, even though the gift by which they originally obtained title should fail. [p. 803, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The question that arises in these three second appeals is principally one of interpretation of the Will of one Ananda Lal Sarkar, which has already been partially construed by a Bench of this Court in the case of Hara Kumari Dasi v. Mohim Chandra Sarkar (1). The position of the parties can be seen from the following genealogical table—

SITARAM SARKAR.

(1) 12 C. W. N. 412; 7 C. L. J. 540.

Ananda Lal Sarkar died on the 11th March 1866. His widow Ichhamoye died on the 30th September 1898. Mahim Chandra Sarkar filed a suit against Hara Kumari on the 19th July 1904 for the construction of the Will of Ananda Lal, after withdrawing his suit for revocation of Probate but still setting up very prominently that the Will was a forgery. Maclean, C. J., in the opening of his judgment said: "If the suit had come before me, I should have dismissed it summarily. But we are told that the appeal to this Court which was existing when the decision now appealed against was given, has since been withdrawn. So we will deal with the question of the construction upon the merits." He appears to have held that but for the gift over to Hara Kumari, the Will would have given the widow an absolute estate. Though there is no clear and absolute gift to the widow in the first portion of the operative clause of the Will, the words "you will have the right and power to alienate by gift or sale all the aforesaid moveable and immovable properties," would make it difficult to say that the widow did not take the property absolutely. The gift over to the daughter, however, follows in the following terms:—"my daughter Hara Kumari shall become entitled to and possessor of whatever property will remain after your death"—the words are satyaban dakhalkar, or literally, possessor with title—"and she shall enjoy the same keeping up and maintaining the aforesaid sheba, etc." Later on he says, "the said daughter shall have the same rights as you have (it should be equal rights), and he to whom my daughter may willingly give away those properties shall, while possessing the same and keeping up and maintaining the sheba, enjoy them." We have put this last clause rather more literally than in the translation in the report of the case in the books, because on this turns one of the main contentions that the whole Will was a devolution in trust for the sole purpose of keeping up the sheba and provided merely maintenance for the daughter.

The question before the Court in that case was, what interest did the widow Ichhamoye take. The question before us now, is what interest did the daughter Hara Kumari take, and that question does not appear to have been gone into in the previous case. The Court, however, held that the widow took for life with power of alienation; but to the extent to which such power was not exercised the daughter took the property with equal rights to those conferred on the widow.

On the 8th March 1908, Hara Kumari executed a deed of gift in favour of her daughter, Hemangini, and on the 8th April 1908 a similar deed in favour of Nagendrabala. On the same date she also conveyed a patni to Hemangini.

On the 1st July 1903 Mahim Chandra Sarkar instituted the administration suit against Hara Kumari on the ground of waste, and it is out of this suit that Appeal No. 2597 of 1910 arises. On the death of Hara Kumari in August 1910, her daughters remained on the record as respondents having been brought on previously as assignees of the property during her life-time. On the 29th September 1910 Hemangini and Nagendrabala filed a suit to recover possession of the property on the basis of a gift to Hemangini by her grandmother, Ichhamoye. This is the subject of Appeal No. 1318 by Hemangini, against whom the lower Courts decided that Ichhamoye only having a life interest could not make a gift to a person not in existence at the time of her husband's death and that the property, therefore, on her death went to the reversioner. On the 19th December 1910, Mahim Chandra Sarkar filed a rent suit against the darpatni-dars of Hemangini making Hemangini and Nagendrabala parties. Out of this the appeal No. 889 arises.

We will deal with the main question first, which is, what interest did Hara Kumari take under her father's Will. To decide this it is necessary to go more fully into the Will than was done by this Court on the previous occasion. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has somewhat light-heartedly held in the appeal in the administration suit that under the construction put by this Court in 1908 upon the Will the present defendant takes the estate absolutely, holding, as we have seen erroneously, that the judgment in that case was exhaustive. But it is obvious that no question of the nature of Hara Kumari's estate was either raised or decided in that case. The sole question before the Court was the nature of the widow's estate.

Turning, therefore, to the Will itself we find that the testator clearly recites that the family had ancestral zemindari in Pabna District, that there were seven brothers of whom the testator and Mohan Lal Sarkar, the father of the present appellant, alone survived, that one brother died childless and the names of the widows of the other four are given together with the minor son of one of them. He then recites that on the 11th Ashar of the current year they determined their shares in equal parts and after putting them into writing they are in enjoyment separately and that the testator with money acquired in his service as sheristadar had purchased certain taraf (estate) and gave 2-annas share of the said estate to his brother Mohan Lal, six-annas share to the brother's widow who had a son and reserved the remaining eight-annas share of his own self-acquired property to himself. He then recites that he has also acquired by his own exertions money by service, with which he had acquired two pucca houses at Bhowanipur, Calcutta, the Murshidabad property where he was the sheristadar, and Government paper, etc., etc., in which his brother, his nephew or his brothers' widows have no concern. He then proceeds to recite that he has no male issue but only a daughter named Hara Kumari, and although he has given her in marriage he felt it his duty to support her. For this reason he executes this Will in favour of his wife Ichhamoye; and then follow the terms which have already been discussed and which appear to us to amount to an absolute gift as far as the daughter is concerned, whether it be regarded from the point of view of the clear provisions of Manu and the Dayabhaga that a gift to a daughter makes the property her stridhan and the principle that the bequests of a Hindu Will follow the Hindu Law of gift, or whether it be regarded as a life-estate to the widow with remainder to a single living daughter with no limitation to her ownership except the charge on the estate to keep a certain sheba or religious endowment.

Against this view three main contentions are taken: first, that the Privy Council has modified the rule of the Dayabhaga by laying down in more than one case that a Hindu must be presumed not to intend to allow his estate to descend in the female line unless there are express words to indicate such intention; secondly, that there is a power of appointment given to the daughter enjoining her to transmit the estate to some unknown person, and if that person was not living at the time of the testator's death the estate goes to the reversioners; and, thirdly, that the whole object of the Will was to create a trust in favour of the sheba and that the respondent had no beneficial interest in the estate, apart from the sheba, which reverts on her death to the reversioner.

Reliance is placed for the plaintiff-appellant upon the case of Brij Lal v. Suraj Bikram Singh (2) which, it is contended, is on all fours with this case. A more clearly distinguishable case can hardly be imagined, for there the lady was given no estate in terms and she was vested with the power of appointing an heir to the testator either in her life-time or by Will. There, as the Judicial Commissioners pointed out, the words of the disposition to the two ladies are identical. Here they are markedly and, in our opinion, intentionally different, and as the learned Judicial Commissioners pointed out, in order to ascertain the intention of the testator former Wills cannot be looked at. All we can derive from the consideration of cases concerning other Wills are principles of construction applicable to all Wills. One of these principles which is cited by the Judicial Commissioners in the rule of the Privy Council in Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (3), is that in construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with regard to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family, and it may be assumed that as a general rule at all events women do not take an absolute estate of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate.

But what are the facts we have here? The recitals as to the nature of the property in the Will are not disputed, although it is faintly suggested that there was no actual partition. The major portion of the property is not ancestral. It is the separate property of the testator. He says that his object was to make provision for his daughter. She was then married, but too young to have children; subsequent to his death she had two daughters. He had, therefore, every reason to hope she might have sons, and he must be presumed to have known as a Judge's sheristadar that a bequest by a father to a daughter is under the Hindu Law an absolute estate, and by his conferring an absolute power of alienation on the daughter subject to the sheba, he must have intended, contrary to the general presumption and practice of Hindus, to confer an absolute right of inheritance on the daughter. We cannot hold that, when their Lordships of the Judicial Committee speak of a general rule in connection with Hindus' knowledge that women do not take an absolute estate of inheritance which they are able to alienate, they meant a rule of Hindu Law; since we know that the rule of Hindu Law with regard to gifts to mothers and daughters is the reverse. The judgment delivered in the Judicial Committee by Sir Andrew Scoble in the case of Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (4) does not carry the contention any further, since he merely cites with approval the previous dictum of the Privy Council in Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (3) and found that in the case then before their Lordships the testator had clearly succeeded in showing that his daughters were not to have more than what is generally known to be a woman's estate in his property. On the principles laid down by Wills, J., in the case of Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendru Mohan Tagore (5), a daughter being a person to whom the testator can under the Hindu Law give an estate of inheritance, if the Will shows that it was intended that she should have the estate of inheritance, a benignant construction is to be used even if the language is ungrammatical or mistaken as to name or description, or in any other manner, incorrect provided it sufficiently indicates what was meant, that meaning shall be enforced to the extent and in the form which the law allows. It is idle to contend that the use of the words "a man" in the judgment excludes females whom the Hindu Law allows to take such bequests. There is no universal presumption with regard to mother or daughter that in every case the estate she takes is less than would be taken by a male: see Kollany Kooer v. Luchmee Pershad (6), Thakur Singh v. Nokhe Singh (7), Ramasami v. Papayya (8). In the case of Bai Motivahu v. Bai Mamubai (9), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that decided cases too numerous to be now questioned have determined that the testamentary power exists, and may be exercised at least within the limits which the law prescribes for alienation by gift inter vivos. The case was in many respects similar to the present case, and their Lordships say, it appears to them to follow from the first taker (who is the widow) being allowed to have only a life-interest that her possession is sufficient to complete the executory bequest which follows the gift for life.

It is sought to distinguish this case, because there was a power of demise by Will given to the daughter. But the only distinction is that in consequence of such power being given, the daughter did not take an absolute estate; but there was no principle of Hindu Law which stood in the way to prevent the testator from substituting his daughter for himself as the person empowered to designate a person who was alive at the time of the testator's death. In the Will before us we can find no such power to designate an heir to the testator. The daughter has absolute power, subject to the trust, to alienate the whole property to whomsoever she please. This is an absolute estate which takes effect on the death of the life-tenant. We find, therefore, that there is nothing in the decision of the Privy Council to derogate from the rule of Hindu Law that the father can make an absolute gift to his daughter, and that there was no power of appointment to the daughter enjoining her to nominate an heir or successor to her father's estate, and thirdly, that the provision for keeping up the sheba was merely a collateral charge on the property in whosever's hands it may be and did not affect the absolute character of the gift. That being so, the plaintiff calling himself the reversioner has no cause of action and cannot maintain the suit for administration against the respondent.

But it is argued that the shebaitship passes by law to the reversioner on the death of the last shebait. This point cannot arise in this appeal, since the suit for administration was brought in the lifetime of Hara Kumari; nor do we think that any specific estate was devised for the purpose of the alleged sheba. It is evident from the Will itself and from the translation cited by Maclean, C. J., in his judgment that there were several pious intentions which the testator classed together as shebas. No specific sum is assigned to any of them and the injunction appears to go no further than the expenditure of a reasonable amount on them. These objects were no doubt a charge on the property; but the property was not left in trust for those objects alone, nor can the reversioner in face of the lady holding an absolute estate sue either herself or her heirs for administration of the property as trust property. The Appeal No. 2597 of 1910, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 889, which arises out of the rent suit against the darpatnidars of Hara Kumari's daughters brought on the record after her death, must be dismissed on the same considerations, first because the patni is vested in the defendants by alienation during Hara Kumari's life, secondly, because they are Hara Kumari's heirs, the property being stridhan and the plaintiff had no title whatever to any of the properties left by Hara Kumari. Appeal No. 889 of 1912 must, therefore, also be dismissed with costs.

As regards Appeal No. 1318 of 1913, the case is somewhat different. There the respondent, Mahim Chandra Sarkar, has got possession of the property which was given to Hemangini by her grandmother, Ichhamoye, who had only a life-interest. But upon the death of Ichhamoye the property did not revert to Mahim Chandra Sarkar as the reversioner of her husband, because he had already made a valid bequest of it to his daughter Hara Kumari. She was, therefore, the sole reversioner and the property being vested in her and having descended to her heirs, their title cannot be extinct if they sue within 12 years of her death or within 12 years of Mahim Chandra Sarkar's assumption of adverse possession. It is, therefore, necessary to see when the plaintiffs were dispossessed. This was in Kartik 1306 corresponding to October 1899. They brought their suit on the 23rd September 1910 well within 12 years of their dispossession.

The error committed by the lower Courts in deciding this suit appears to us to be that they erroneously held that the defendants, Mahim Chandra Sarkar, was the reversionary heir of Ichhamoye's husband, Ananda Lal Sarkar. Admittedly, this appeal depends like the others on the question of the construction of Ananda Lal's Will, and if Hara Kumari was Ananda Lal's reversionary heir in absolute estate as has been held in the other cases, it is clear that the defendant-respondent can have no title whatever as reversioner to Ananda Lal's estate. The estate vested in Hara Kumari and has descended to the plaintiffs and the defendant is a pure trespasser.

The only difficulty is that they claimed possession on the basis of the gift from Ichhamoye which, it is said, failed on her death, if the estate Ichhamoye took was the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow. But we agree with Maclean, C. J., that the estate she took was something more than this and that there is no reason why she should not take the life-interest plus the power of alienation which, though perhaps analogous to what is known as a power of appointment in English Law, cannot be governed by the rules of English Law relating to such appointments. The Privy Council in Bai Motivahu v. Bai Mamubai (9) expressly says that there is no application of the English Law of powers to Hindu Wills. In ordinary life-estates of Hindu widow, the gift of the widow would be taken not from her but from the testator; but here she had absolute power of alienation in derogation of the rights of the sole reversioner, her daughter, who was only entitled to the residue. It would be idle to say that all alienations which Ichhamoye may have made to strangers of her own free will are recoverable by the defendant-respondent as reversioner. They are recoverable, if at all, only by Hara Kumari and her heirs.

We think, on the construction we have put on the Will, the gift to Hemangini and her sister was valid and that the defendant-respondent cannot plead his right as reversioner against a suit by the heirs of Hara Kumari to eject him as a trespasser, even though the gift by which they originally obtained title should fail. Before they brought the suit, they had added to it a better title which concludes the defendant who has no title whatever. To hold otherwise would be to interpret the Will in one sense in two of these appeals and in a different sense in the third.

For all these reasons, Appeal No. 1318 of 1913 is decreed and the plaintiffs are declared to be entitled to recover whatever portion of the property claimed appertains to the estate of Ananda Lal Sarkar as set out in the Will, unless it had already passed out of the estate before the date of the gift. To decide these questions it is necessary to remand the case to the lower Court for a decision on issues Nos. 9 and 15, which were not decided by the judgment in appeal. The lower Appellate Court will decide these issues if there is evidence on the record in regard to them, otherwise it will itself take such evidence or cause it to be taken by the Court of first instance and make a decree according to the directions contained in this judgment, that the plaintiffs do recover the lands to which they may be entitled under our judgment with costs in proportion to their success.

*Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22—Succession—
Last male occupancy tenant dying before Tenancy Act—lateral—Co-sharing, if necessary.*

One R who was the last male occupancy tenant of the holding in dispute died before the present Tenancy Act came into force and upon his death, his widow succeeded. She died after the Tenancy Act had come into force. R's daughter's sons who were not born at R's death claimed occupancy rights upon the death of the widow. The claim was resisted by the zemindar on the ground that they did not share in cultivation with R.

Held, that the daughter's sons were not collaterals and that under the old Act, which applied in this case, they could succeed without co-sharing in the cultivation.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 7th June 1910, reversing that of the Collector of Banda District, in a case of correction of jamabandi.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(August 13th, 1912.)—The dispute was as to the entry to be made in regard to the present occupant of the holding of one Musammât Daryai, who was found by the Commissioner to have succeeded as a widow to the holding of her husband, Raman, who is said to have died nearly 40 years ago. The appellants are the daughters' sons of Daryai and Raman. The Assistant Collector rejected their claim to be recorded as occupancy tenants on the ground that they were not born at the time of Raman's death and could not have shared in cultivation with him. The Collector held that Daryai having inherited occupancy rights under the former Act had full rights and was able to transmit them to her daughters' sons who shared with her in cultivation. The Commissioner held that Musammât Daryai had only a life-interest under Hindu Law and could not, therefore, transmit her right of occupancy. None of these decisions appear to me to state the law on the subject directly. When Raman died rights in an occupancy holding devolved as if it were land, subject to the single condition that a collateral succeeding must have shared in cultivation with him. It is the analogy of the collateral which has probably misled the Commissioner. The present claimants are not collaterals and could have succeeded to Raman without sharing in cultivation. They were not alive at the time, but the daughters of Raman who are still alive were then in existence. Raman's widow succeeded for life, but the right to inherit after her death accrued to the daughters without any condition as to their co-sharing in cultivation.

I hold that the daughters are now the occupancy tenants and that as they have allowed the names of their sons to be entered on their behalf, the names of the sons may now be entered as enjoying the rights their mothers inherited, that is to say, as having occupancy rights. I would allow the appeal with cost on respondent.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17 (n)—Receipt releasing liability to pay compound interest as written in mortgage-deed, if required registration.

A receipt by a mortgagee releasing the mortgagor from the liability to pay compound interest as written in the mortgage-bond, does not require registration, and operates as a full acquittance for the money already paid. [p. 805, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Tippera, dated April 11th, 1912, affirming that of the Munsif of Brahmanbaria, dated May 8th, 1911.

Babu Sasulhar Roy, for the Respondent,

ALA BUX v. RADHAY LAL.

JUDGMENT.—[In this second appeal two questions have been raised, first, that the receipt (Exhibit A) not being registered could not be admitted in evidence, being a document which purported to affect the terms of the mortgage; and, secondly, assuming that it could be looked at, the release really means that there is a release of four years for which payment has been made, and not a waiver in future.

As regards the first point, we think, the matter is concluded by the decision of the Full Bench in Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (1), which has now been enacted into law by clause (n) of section 17 of the Registration Act. We, therefore, think that registration was not necessary and that the receipt operates as a full acquittance for the money already paid.

As regards the question of waiver, the words contained in the document are a clear waiver. They say "be it known that I release you from the liability to pay compound interest as written in the said mortgage-bond;" and we can find nothing in the law or in any authority which would require such waiver to be registered; although under the terms of section 92 of the Evidence Act it undoubtedly must be in writing. In the present case this question is rather an academical one, as the difference in the decree would be a matter of about 8 annas. We, therefore, do not think it necessary to disturb in any way the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and the appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Custom—Resumption, right of—Wajib-ul-arz, statement in, of one interested party, if sufficient proof of custom.

A wajib-ul-arz which merely contains a statement of a mukhtar of a zemindar that he has the power to take away all muafis is not sufficient evidence of custom of resumption as it contains merely the statement of one interested party and is not prepared after such inquiry as is contemplated by the law. [p. 805, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 21st August 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Farrukhabad District, in a case of resumption of muafi.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(March 19th, 1914.)—The land in question consists of three plots, No. 7, entirely under cultivation, Nos. 9 & 10, partly cultivated and partly graveyard. The Commissioner has found that No. 7 was held at the pleasure of the zemindar and was resumable and that the other two numbers being partly graveyard were according to custom not resumable. In regard to these two latter numbers, he, therefore, ordered that rents should be fixed. I cannot consider that in this order the Commissioner has been consistent. The holding was a single one. All the three numbers, at least so far as the cultivated part of them is concerned, go together. The evidence on which the Commissioner relies showing that No. 7 is resumable, is that of the so-called wajib-ul-arz. I do not think that this document can be considered to have been prepared in accordance with the law on the subject. The law provided that the Settlement Officer shall ascertain and record existing village customs. What he did was to take the statement of one interested party. The Mukhtar of the zemindar said that his client has power to take away all muafis at his pleasure. This cannot be considered to be such an enquiry as was contemplated by the law, and I attach no more importance to the statement of the zemindar in 1872 than I do to the statement of the zemindar now made before me. I do not think that it can be held in this case that the zemindar has proved that the muafi is resumable.

Remains the question as to whether rent or revenue is to be assessed. The Commissioner has found that it has not been proved that this land was rent free before 1872 and in this his finding must be upheld. The consequence is that rent should be assessed on the cultivated area of the entire holding under section 156. To this extent the appeal should be allowed. Costs on respondent.

TWEEDY, J. M.—I concur. The same view was taken by the Board in Dukh Haran v. Raja Pirthipal Singh (1). It was held there that the statement of the Talukdar's mukhtar is simply the statement of an interested party in his own favour.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This case raises a question of considerable difficulty and importance as to the existence of a special custom among Labbais or Tamil-speaking converts to Muhammadanism in the District of Coimbatore, or alternatively in the family of the parties to the present suit who belong to that district, to depart from the Muhammadan rule of succession and, as alleged by the defendants, to follow the Hindu Law as regards the law of property succession and partition. This, however, is too broadly produced as the only question arising in the suit is whether they follow the particular rule of Hindu Law which excludes females from the right of succession. The suit is brought by the plaintiffs, who are respectively the husband and minor daughter of the deceased Ponnuthayee, as her heirs to recover her share under the Muhammadan Law in the estate of her father, the late Mahomed Hussain Rowther who predeceased her. In 1877, in a suit tried by Innes, J., in the original side of the High Court, the custom relied by the defendants in the present case was proved to exist, but the case was compromised whilst under appeal; and in Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (1), which came before the High Court in second appeal, this Court reversed the decrees of the lower Courts finding a similar custom proved in the Palghat country which adjoins the Coimbatore District. The decision, of course, proceeded on the evidence in the case, but the question was approached from the standpoint that it was for the parties setting up the custom to show that though following their religion generally Labbais had adopted from the Hindu Law the principle of the exclusion of the females. The onus, no doubt, was rightly placed, but, having regard to the fact that we are dealing with Tamil-speaking people whose adoption of Muhammadanism in many cases cannot be referred to an earlier date than the second half of the eighteenth century, I should prefer to state the question as being whether after their conversion they had adhered in these respects to the usages to which they had been accustomed as

(1) 8 M. 464.

IBRAHIM ROWTHER v. MUHAMAD IBRAHIM ROWTHER.

Hindus; and with great respect, I am unable in the face of the evidence in this case to attach much weight to the suggestion that the state of things which we find existing may be due to unwillingness on the part of Muhammadan females to assert their rights against the male members of the family. Of the later cases, this is the first to come before this Court on first appeal so as to enable the Court to appreciate the evidence for itself, but there have been several cases in the lower Courts in which the custom was upheld when set up, and the plaintiff has had to rely largely on the fact that in certain other cases it was not set up. Exhibits L, C, N, R, H, and Q show that in suits of 1890, 1892, 1894, 1903, 1904 and 1910 arising in the district the women's right to succeed in accordance with Muhammadan Law was not contested. Exhibit G relates to a suit of 1893 in which the custom was pleaded and negatived by the lower Courts, whose judgments were upheld in second appeal as, on the other hand, Exhibit B and Exhibit B-1 relate to a suit of 1901 in which the District Judge held that the evidence went to show that the parties who were Labbais had adhered to the Hindu Law in this respect, but had hesitated to plead such adherence expressly for fear of being considered not to be good Muhammadans, and had set up instead a family custom under which women were excluded from the succession as regards immoveable property and were given cash and jewels in lieu of their share. He accordingly upheld the decree of the District Munsif, disallowing the custom on the ground that it was not pleaded that the parties had adhered to the rule of Hindu Law and that the family custom derogatory to Muhammadan Law had not been proved. Exhibit 18 relates to a suit of 1893 in which it was expressly pleaded on behalf of the minor plaintiff by his mother as his next friend that according to well-established custom, the widow and daughter of the deceased Labbai do not take any share in the inheritance, and the razinama decree, Exhibit XVII; proceeded on this view. Exhibit 3 again is a judgment of the District Judge, now Mr. Justice Oldfield in a suit of 1904 which upheld the custom in that case, and Exhibit XVI is a judgment of a later District Judge in another suit to the same effect. The general result would, therefore, seem to be that in more recent years, whenever the custom has been set up, it has been established, and the number of instances in which it has not been set up would appear, as was observed by Mr. Brodie in Exhibit B-1, to be due to the growing disinclination of members of the community to adhere to a usage which is not in accordance with a strict observance of the Koran. Looked at as a whole the evidence, in my opinion, goes far to show that the Labbais of this part of India at the date of their conversion preferred to retain the Hindu rule excluding women, as it was not unnatural they should; and I should infer that the usage was general until some time before 1877 when we first hear of the question coming before the Courts, as any difference on the point must probably before long have given rise to litigation. But it also seems to me perfectly natural that, as the evidence shows, there should be of late years a growing tendency to depart from the usage and conform in this matter to the precepts of their sacred law. Now assuming that the special usage among Labbais of this part of the country has been proved, and that it would be open to individual families to abandon it and conform to the ordinary law governing their co-religionists, as to which see the observations of their Lordships in Rajkishen Singh v. Ramjoy Surma Mozoomdar (2), it would be a question of fact whether they had in fact abandoned it, and such abandonment would have to be proved. It is unnecessary to consider this question further, because so far as the parties to the suit are concerned, I think that the evidence, oral and documentary, of their transactions is amply sufficient to show that they adhere to the Hindu rule, even if we put aside the various judgments concerning other persons coming from the same part of the country which support this conclusion. Exhibit 10 would seem to show that there had been a partition between the plaintiff and his brothers in which the claims of the sisters were ignored, and the document itself is a release by the plaintiff and one of his brothers in favour of another brother of their share in the estate of a deceased brother in which again, nothing is allotted to the female members. The 1st plaintiff who was a party to the deed has not ventured to go into the box, which goes very far to prove the custom in the family. Exhibit J on which the plaintiffs, rely relates to the share which a deceased brother of the defendants' family had in partnership with two Hindus. It expressly states that the brothers of the deceased were his heirs, though it also states that with them the 1st plaintiff and his brothers as sister's sons of the deceased had received his share. The signatures of the sister's sons who were adults were, I think, obtained to protect the surviving partners from any possible claim by them, although the document does not include them as among heirs of the deceased, just as there is an indemnity inserted lower down against any claim by the minor daughter of the deceased partner then aged nine. This daughter, according to D. W. No. 8, has since married the 1st plaintiff himself and it is not suggested that any claim has ever been made on her behalf. The general effect of the document is to assert that the brothers of the deceased were his heirs, though for the security of the Hindu partners of the deceased, it provides against possible claims against them by his sister's sons and his minor daughter. D. W. No. 7, who is related to the defendants by marriage, proves that in his family their properties were divided by Exhibit 5 without any share being given to the daughters. D. W. No. 8, who is related to the plaintiff's and defendants' families, also speaks to the custom, as does D. W. No. 10 who is related by marriage to the plaintiffs. D. W. No. 13 speaks to the fact that women get no shares in the defendants' family and proves Exhibit 10 which, as I have already said, amply bears him out. I think the evidence oral and documentary is sufficient to show that the defendants' family have adhered with perhaps most of the other Labbais of the neighbourhood to the Hindu rule excluding the succession of females. As observed in Kunhambi v. Kalanathar (3) it is under the provisions of the Civil Courts

Act a question of fact in each case as to the usage followed by the family, and in the present case, I think, the usage is sufficiently proved. As regards the point taken as to res judicata, I agree with the judgment of my learned brother and with the order proposed by him.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—The principal question for decision in this case is as to the devolution of the property of a Muhammadan named Hussain Rowther who died, it is said, about the end of the year 1904. He left him surviving three sons, defendants Nos. 1 to 3, a widow, the 4th defendant, and two daughters, Ponnuthayee and Sulaihab. There was another son who is now dead, but whether he left any heirs other than the parties to the suit does not appear. The two daughters are dead. The first plaintiff is the husband of Ponnuthayee and the 2nd plaintiff is her daughter. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are the children of the other daughter Sulaihab.

Plaintiffs sue to recover their share, under the Muhammadan Law, of the share of Ponnuthayee in the estate of her father, Muhammad Hussain Rowther. Muhammad Hussain Rowther and the parties to the suit are Labbais. The claim is opposed by defendants Nos. 1 to 4, who plead that, according to the custom prevailing among Labbai Muhammadans of the Coimbatore District and alternatively, according to the custom prevailing among the parties and their relations, the property of a deceased Labbai devolves on the sons to the exclusion of the daughters, as under the Hindu Law; they also state that unmarried daughters are maintained out of the paternal estate and stridhanam given to them at the time of marriage, as in Hindu families. Custom in its legal sense means a rule exceptional to the general rule of law. In countries like England where there is a uniform territorial law binding on all persons, a custom in derogation of that law, when allowed, requires very strict proof. But in India, where there are innumerable sects each following its own usages which constitute its law, in many cases it is impossible to say that any particular usage which is pleaded is in derogation of a general law. For instance, the Nambudris and Nairs of the

IBRAHIM ROWTHER v. MUHAMAD IBRAHIM ROWTHER.

West Coast are Hindus, but they are mostly governed by their usages. In the case of many of the aboriginal tribes who come in under the general designation of Hindus, the presumption that they are governed by the Hindu Law of the Smriti writers and their commentators, is so slight that very little evidence suffices to displace this presumption. Among the Nattukottai Chetties of Southern India who are orthodox Hindus, there are usages relating to adoption which are entirely at variance with the rules of Hindu Law. The Moplahs of North Malabar, who are Muhammadan converts from Hinduism, generally follow the Marumakkattayam system, modified in some matters by rules of Muhammadan Law, as in the case of succession to self-acquired property. The Khojas and Memon Cutchis of Bombay who are Muhammadans by religion follow the Hindu Law of succession. Again, a family domiciled in Southern India is presumed to be governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law, but if it is proved that they emigrated from the northern or Maharatta country, this presumption is rebutted, and the family is presumed to retain the law of the place from which it emigrated. In many cases the inquiry is as to what is the law, and not as to what is the usage at variance with law [Hirbai v. Gorbai (4), Rarichan v. Perachi (5), Kunhi Raman v. Kunhi Parwathi (6).] The Judicial Committee in dealing with a family custom forbidding adoption said: "Looking at the origin and history of the family, it appears to their Lordships that the question is not whether the general Hindu Law is modified by a family custom forbidding adoption, but whether with respect to inheritance the family is governed by Hindu Law, or by customs which do not allow an adopted son to inherit". [Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rageswar Das (7).] Standard of proof which is required in any particular case may, therefore, vary.

The parties to this suit being Muhammadans by religion they are presumably governed by their religious law i.e., the Muhammadan Law, in matters of succession. There is, however, the fact that the Labbais are a mixed class of Muhammadans consisting partly of compulsory converts to Islam made by the early Muhammadan invaders and Tippu Sultan. (See Madras Census Report of 1891.) They generally speak Tamil in their houses. Their marriage ceremony is said to closely resemble that of the low Hindu castes. (See Thurston on Castes and Tribes, Volume IV, page 200) It is, therefore, probable that many of the Labbais being recent converts from Hinduism retained the mode of devolution of property according to Hindu usages even after their conversion, though, in course of time, they would try to give up such usages and adopt rules of devolution of property prescribed by their religious law. An examination of the evidence in this case presents these features.

In 1878 this custom was pleaded in a suit in the original side of this Court, and Mr. Justice Innes, after a careful consideration of the large mass of evidence, both oral and documentary, placed before him, came to the conclusion that "in the District of Coimbatore there are peculiar customs in regard to marriage and succession, and the most prominent feature in the rule observed as regards succession is that, on the death of a man leaving sons and unmarried daughters and a widow, the sons take to the exclusion of the females who are simply maintained, and that married daughters are regarded as entitled, as among Hindus, to no provisions whatsoever". Exhibit XII. It is noticeable that the evidence in this case consisted mostly of witnesses from the village of Pallipatti in which and in the neighbouring villages the defendants and their relations mostly live. This decision was appealed against but the appeal was compromised.

This custom was again set up in a case, Mirabiri v. Vellayanna (1). That was a case of Labbai Muhammadans residing at Palghat. Both the first Court and the first Appellate Court held the custom proved. But the High Court interfered in second appeal holding that the evidence was not sufficient to prove the custom. The learned Judges were able to find satisfactory explanation in the evidence in that case as regards the various instances proved in that case of devolution in accordance with the principles of Hindu Law.

The next occasion when the matter was the subject of controversy was in the year 1901. (Exhibits B and B1⁹) Exhibit B is the judgment of Mr. Sadasiva Aiyar (now Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar) as District Munsif of Coimbatore and Exhibit B-1 is the judgment of Mr. Brodie, the District Judge, on appeal. A careful perusal of the two judgments leads to only one conclusion, namely that at that time, that is so late as 1901, it was the practice of the Labbais Muhammadans of Coimbatore District to follow Hindu usages in matters of succession. In paragraph 6 of the appeal judgment, Exhibit B-1, Mr. Brodie observes that "though no doubt the customary law of the Labbais in this district has upto date been more in accordance with Hindu than Muhammadan Law as is only natural, I observe a tendency on the part of the defendants in such cases as the present to resort to any defence to defeat such claims amongst themselves rather than plead that they are governed in anything by Hindu Law, as this lays them open to the reproach of not being strict observers of Muhammadan practices". The actual decision was in favour of the claim of a female to a share, but this was based on the absence of the plea that the parties were governed by Hindu Law in matters of succession.

Again in 1906 the District Judge of Coimbatore held the custom proved in Exhibit III.

This matter came up for adjudication again in 1910 and it was held that among the Labbais of Pallappatti the custom of exclusion of females was prevalent: Exhibits IX and XVI.

There is only one other judgment to which I need make reference, i.e., Exhibit G. What is printed in the records is merely the decree the second appeal, but our attention was drawn to the judgments in the lower Courts. It appears that, in a previous litigation between the parties, this custom was set up, but was found against for want of evidence. In the present litigation the question was disposed of on the plea of res judicata. This decision is not of use either way. The respondent relied on several judgments in partition suits in which the right of females to shares was not disputed. They are Exhibits L and M in 1890, Exhibit C in 1892, Exhibit N in 1894, Exhibit R in 1903, Exhibit H in 1904, and Exhibit Q in 1910.

In Exhibit XVIII, a plaint in a suit of 1893, the custom was expressly pleaded by a mother suing as next friend of her minor son; the suit was compromised, but the compromise-decree, Exhibit XVII, proceeded on this view. The documents referred to above prove, in my opinion, the general prevalence among the Labbais of the Coimbatore District of this custom of excluding females from participating in the property of their deceased ancestors at the time of partition, and also that in recent times the custom was not set up in some cases owing to the disinclination of members of this community to follow usages at variance with their religious law.

There is evidence in this case which establishes that the family of the parties follow this custom. Defence 7th witness, a relation of the parties, speaks to this custom and proves a partition in his own family, where the father's properties were divided amongst the sons without any share being given to the daughters: Exhibit V. The property divided was considerable. He says, no doubt, in his examination-in-chief, that he does not remember what the brothers did for the daughters; but that does not imply that anything was given to the daughters on account of their shares. The statement may refer to the practice of giving stridhanam. Defence 8th witness, another relation, speaks to a partition in his own family in which the daughters were not given any shares. Defence 10th witness, also a relation, proves Exhibit VIII, a deed of partition which shows that the sons alone divided the properties of their father. The mother who was alive was not given a share, but Rs. 200 was set apart for her maintenance as in the case of a division among the members of a Hindu family. I attach considerable importance to this circumstance. Defence 13th witness speaks to this custom and proves Exhibit X. It is a release executed to the 1st plaintiff by two of his brothers releasing all their rights to the property of a deceased brother, the executants receiving Rs. 900 from the 1st plaintiff in satisfaction of their claims. The 1st plaintiff and his two brothers considered themselves solely entitled to the property of their deceased brother, though their sisters were alive at the time. The document also recites an oral partition among the brothers which again makes no reference whatsoever to the sisters. This document is important as proving an instance of exclusion of females in the plaintiffs' own family. The 1st plaintiff has not chosen to go into the box to explain this transaction. General evidence is given by the other witnesses for the defendants in proof of the custom, but I do not attach much value to that evidence. There is no evidence on the plaintiffs' side except general statements of witnesses, to which again I am unable to attach any weight. The learned Pleader for the respondents relied on Exhibit J as affording an instance in which the Muhammadan Law was assumed by the family to be the law by which they were governed. After carefully considering this document I am unable to come to any such conclusion; on the other, hand I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that it is against the plaintiffs. The evidence above set out taken along with the evidence of the general prevalence of the practice is, I think, sufficient to prove the family custom set up.

It is remarkable that the 4th defendant, the widow, who, if the Muhammadan Law applied, would be entitled to a $\frac{1}{8}$ th share in the properties of her husband which are of considerable value, disputes the claims of the plaintiffs along with her sons, defendants Nos. 1 to 3. No explanation is given for her disclaiming any interest in the valuable properties of her husband, nor is there any reason shown for her joining her sons as against her own daughter's children. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the conclusion of the lower Court on this point. On this ground the decree of the lower Court will have to be reversed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

The appellants contended that the plaintiffs are not entitled to institute this suit as they had already instituted Original Suit No. 16 of 1909 in respect of the same cause of action. I agree with the lower Court that the cause of action pleaded in Original Suit No. 16 of 1909 was quite different from the cause of action in the present suit, and disallow this contention.

The appellants also contended that the suit is barred by limitation in respect of the moveables. It is unnecessary to decide this question as we are dismissing the plaintiffs' suit on another ground.

Appeal allowed; Suit dismissed.

B sold his property, which he had contracted to sell to C, to a third person. C thereupon brought a suit for specific performance of the contract of sale. The suit was decreed and possession given to him. C took possession not only as a proprietor but also took actual cultivatory possession of the sir land, which had become the ex-proprietary tenancy of B and which was so recorded. In a suit for correction of papers, B alleged that C's name should be entered as sub-tenant:

Appeal from an order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 7th December 1912, reversing that of the Settlement Officer of Fatehpur District in the case of correction of papers.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S.M.—(July 25th, 1913.)—Respondent is recorded as the ex-proprietary tenant of the land in question. Appellant is the proprietor who got possession under a decree for specific performance of a sale on the 8th October 1909. He appears to have taken possession of the land now in question immediately on possession being ordered in his favour and has remained in possession since. Respondent's decree for ex-proprietary rights was given against a person who held (before the appellant got possession) under a second sale-deed executed by the respondent and whose possession was found to be wrongful. The decree does not bind the appellant in any way. In Selected Decision No. 6 of 1912, it was laid down that where a proprietor takes possession of a tenant's land by way of wrongful ejectment, section 34 cannot be considered to be applicable and the record of such a proprietor as the sub-tenant of his tenant is improper. These principles apply here. Respondent had a right of suit within six months after appellant took possession of his land. He has now lost that right and cannot re-gain possession nor can he, section 34 being held to be inapplicable, recover rent for this land. I think that this appeal must be allowed and the order of the Settlement Officer restored. As the Settlement Officer's order was not appealed, I cannot direct any more extensive alteration in appellant's favour. Appellant will get his costs.

Where a land-holder purchases from a ryot for consideration his kudivaram right in the land, the land-holder purchaser should treat the land as a "ryoti land" and there is not such a merger of rights as to extinguish the "ryoti" character of the land. [p. 812, col. 2.]

Land once "ryoti" continues to be such unless the landlord, by strong and unequivocal acts (not necessarily those referred to in the proviso to section 8 of the Madras Estates Land Act) shows that he is entitled on the evidence to an exceptional finding that he has converted the ryoti land into his private land. [p. 812, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 372 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Madanapalli, in Original Suit No. 333 of 1911.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Assuming that Exhibit B is a genuine document and also that Exhibit A has the legal effect of a transfer for valuable consideration of the kudivaram right in favour of the zemindar, section 8, clauses (1) and 3, of the Estates Land Act clearly enact that ryoti land cannot cease to be such owing to such merger of the melvaram and kudivaram rights and that the landholder purchaser shall continue to treat the land as ryoti land of which he is the landholder.

As Exhibit B of 1872 was relied on by the plaintiff from the beginning, as there is nothing in the records to show that the plaintiff land was treated as home-farm land before the date of Exhibit C and as the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court relied on the transfers under Exhibit B and Exhibit A and not on the ground that the land had even before the date of Exhibit B been home-farm lands, we cannot allow the appellant to set up such a new case for the first time in second appeal, a case evidently not set up in the lower Courts. The allegation in plaintiff, paragraph 1, that the lands are the khas lands of the 5th defendant cannot in the above circumstances be construed into an allegation that the lands have been, from time immemorial, the khas lands of the 5th defendant.

Section 8, clauses (1) and (3), of the Estates Land Act seem to prevent lands once ryoti from being converted into private lands on the ground of merger of the kudivaram rights into melvaram rights. Assuming that there might be cases in which such conversion can take place by any acts of the landlord after the merger (see proviso to section 165 of the Act), such acts, even though they need not come within the terms of the proviso and need not be confined to the acts mentioned in the proviso, must be of such strong and unequivocal character as to justify the Courts in giving an exceptional finding in favour of the conversion of ryoti into private land. We think that the finding of the Lower Courts in this case that Exhibits C, D, G and H are wholly insufficient to prove such conversion, was quite justified though their reliance on a passage in the judgment, Exhibit VI, (which only decided that home-farm lands are impartible like the other zemindari land) is palpably erroneous.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Ancestral business—Presumption—Managing member, power of—Liability of minor members—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 247.

In carrying on an ancestral trade, the infant member of an undivided Hindu family are bound by all acts of the adult member who is the manager, which are necessarily incident to, and flowing out of, the carrying on of that trade. [p. 814, col. 2.]

The power of a manager to carry on a family trade implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade and third parties in the ordinary course of bona fide trade dealings should not be held bound to investigate the status of the family represented by the manager whilst dealing with him on the credit of the family property. [p. 814, col. 2.]

In the case of a firm carried on by an adult member of a joint Hindu family consisting of an adult and a minor member, the presumption is that the minor member is also a partner in the firm but the presumption is rebuttable. [p. 815, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will cover the connected Appeal No. 280 of 1911. The defendants, Rattan Chand and Ladha Mal, are sons of the late Jiwan Shah, Bhabra. There is a firm trading under the name of Jiwan Shah-Rattan Chand. According to plaintiffs Rattan Chand is the managing partner, but the shop is an ancestral one, and the minor defendant Ladha Mal is also a partner. Five suits were brought against the defendants to recover moneys advanced to the firm and interest. One case was compromised, and decrees have been passed in four cases. The pleadings and evidence were the same in all four cases.

The defendants pleaded that Rattan Chand was the sole proprietor of the firm and was solely liable, also that the defendants, being Jainis by caste, were not governed by Hindu Law, also that they were not members of a joint Hindu family. The learned District Judge held that they were governed by Hindu Law, and also they were members of a joint Hindu family. On the question whether Ladha Mal was a partner in the firm, the District Judge came to no very decided finding, though he remarked that from the mere fact of the brothers being members of a joint Hindu family it did not necessarily follow that both were partners in the shop, and he stated that in his opinion it was not proved that Ladha Mal was a co-partner in the firm. But the District Judge went on to say that if Ladha Mal had any share in the firm that share would be liable, but that his person and other property would not be liable. So the District Judge passed decrees for the amounts claimed against the firm, absolving the person and other property of Ladha Mal. It may be noted that the District Judge found that the debts were not contracted for family purposes or household affairs, but that Rattan Chand has wasted the money in a foolish trade.

The plaintiffs in two of the four suits have appealed asking that both of the defendants should be made fully liable, and also asking for interest till date of realisation.

Interest is claimed at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ annas per Rs. 100 per mensem in this case and in the connected case at 6 annas per Rs. 100. These rates are very moderate, and we can see no reason why future interest should not be allowed in cases of this kind.

As regards personal liability of the minor Mr. Sukh Dial has stated that he does not press this matter, and we think he is well advised. The only remaining question, therefore, is whether the property of the minor should be held liable.

In the first place it may be noted that Mr. Shadi Lal, who appears for Ladha Mal, has stated that he does not contend that the defendants are not governed by Hindu Law, and he has also abandoned the plea that the defendants are not members of a joint Hindu family. His contentions are:—

(1) That the minor is not a partner in the firm and (2) that even if he is a partner, his property other than his share in the firm is not liable.

We will first proceed to discuss the question, whether if the minor defendant is a partner his property other than his share in the firm should be held liable. Mr. Shadi Lal contends that though in some cases the whole property of the family may have been earned by trading and that in such cases all the property of the family, including the shares of minor members, must be held liable for debts incurred to carry on the trade, there are other cases in which the bulk of the property is entirely distinct from a business carried on by the family, and that in such cases the liability of minors for trade debts must be limited to their share in the business. Mr. Shadi Lal quotes Lutchmanan Chetty v. Siva Prokasa Modeliar (1). Whatever effect this ruling may have on the decision of the question whether Ladha Mal is a partner in the shop, we fail to see how it helps Ladha Mal so far as the question which we are now considering, viz., the question whether, assuming him to be a partner in the shop, his liability should be limited to his share in the shop. The same may be said with regard to Vadilal v. Shah Khushal (2), which is also cited by Mr. Shadi Lal.

The ruling which really supports Mr. Shadi Lal's contention is Joykisto Cowar v. Nittyanund Nundy (3), in which the liability of the minor for trade debts is limited to his share in the business. In this ruling section 247, Contract Act, is quoted and the principle is applied, it being held, that "on principle there ought not to be any difference between the nature of the liability of an infant admitted by contract into a partnership business and that of one on whose behalf an ancestral trade is carried on by a manager." It is urged that this case is cited with approval in Sakrabhai v. Maganlal (4); it is certainly referred to on page 212, but no question of the extent of the liability of minor partners was then involved, and we cannot say that it was cited with approval. It is also urged on behalf of the minor respondent that the burden of proving that these debts were advanced for the genuine purposes of the firm lies on the plaintiffs and that they have failed to prove it, and that consequently the minor respondent is not liable. It is pointed out that Rattan Chand, defendant, himself says he lost the money in satta dealings.

The whole question is discussed in a ruling of this Court, viz., Mul Chand v. Sadhu Singh (5), which points out that the law of the partnership, as contained in the Contract Act, is in several respects more restrictive than the Hindu Law, and that in considering the affairs of an ancestral business exclusive attention cannot be paid to the Contract Act, although reference to that Act may be useful. The learned Judges refer to Johurra Bibee v. Sreegopal Misser (6) as the leading case on the subject and hold that though that ruling was given prior to the passing of the Contract Act it still holds good. They quote several paragraphs from the Calcutta rulings (vide page 265) to the effect that in carrying on an ancestral trade the infant members of the undivided family are bound by all acts of the adult member, who is the manager, which are necessarily incident to, and flowing out of, the carrying on of that trade, and that the power of a manager to carry on a family trade necessarily implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade, and that third parties in the ordinary course of bona fide trade dealings should not be held bound to investigate the status of the family represented by the manager whilst dealing with him on the credit of the family property. VEERAMMAL v. KAMU AMMAL.

in following this ruling in preference to the earlier Calcutta ruling.

Now, bearing in mind that we are for the present assuming that Ladha Mal is a partner in the firm, we think all this fully applies to the present case. There has never been any suggestion that Ladha Mal was admitted as a partner by his brother, so if Ladha Mal be a partner at all it can only be because the business is an ancestral one. Apart from the fact that the father's name is still preserved in the appellation of the firm, we know from the accounts in the present case (see page 2 of the paper-book) that the dealings of the firm go back at least as far as 30th Poh 1957, at which time Jiwan Shah was alive. The debts in dispute are to all appearance loans to (or deposits with) the firm in the ordinary course of banking or trading, and even if, as Rattan Chand himself alleges, he has lost the money in imprudent speculations, we fail to see how the right of the plaintiffs to make all the members of the firm fully liable can be diminished. Even if Rattan Chand was gambling it is not shown that the plaintiffs had any knowledge of this.

The ruling, Mul Chand v. Sadhu Singh (5), lays down that where money has been advanced to a firm in the ordinary course of business, subsequent dishonesty on the part of a member of the firm causing the loss of the money will not prevent the creditors from recovering their money from all the members of the firm, minors included.

There seems nothing in the present case, so far as we have been able to discover, to warrant a finding that the business was not an ancestral business or that the money was not advanced for ordinary purposes of the business, or that any distinction should be drawn between the assets of the firm and the other property of the family so far as the liability of the minor respondent is concerned.

But so far we have proceeded on the assumption that Ladha Mal is member of the firm. Starting with the fact that the family is a joint Hindu family we certainly think that the presumption is that the two brothers are both partners in the firm which is carried on by the adult brother. At the same time this presumption is rebuttable. We do not propose to examine the evidence at present with a view to deciding whether Ladha Mal is a member of the firm, for the reason that we think there must be a remand for further inquiry. The onus of proving that they were not members of a joint Hindu family was rightly placed on the defendants, and the onus of proving that they were not also partners in the firm should also have been placed on them, but unfortunately it was placed on the plaintiffs, and Mr. Shadi Lal on behalf of Ladha Mal urges that if the onus is to be changed his client should be allowed a further opportunity of producing evidence. We think this request must be acceded to.

We accordingly remand both these cases for further inquiry into the issue whether Ladha Mal is or is not a partner in the firm.

The onus will be on Ladha Mal; the plaintiffs will, of course, be allowed to produce evidence in rebuttal.

Return to be made in four months.

Case remanded.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 484 of 1912, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 54 of 1908.

FACTS.—The properties in suit originally belonged to a joint Hindu family consisting of one Narayanaswami and his son, Perianna. The former having relinquished his share of the joint family properties in favour of the latter by a duly registered deed of gift, the latter alone continued to enjoy the same and died in 1888 leaving him surviving his two widows a daughter by his first wife, a son born dumb and insane by his second wife and his father. Thereupon the junior widow got into possession of the properties and enjoyed them till 1898 when Narayanaswami died. The senior widow then trespassed upon the properties and disturbances ensued which were, however, put an end to by a settlement whereby the senior widow was allotted some portions of the property for her share, the junior widow taking the rest. The widows then alienated portions of the properties which fell to the share of each. In the meanwhile the daughter of Perianna, who had been a minor during the disputes attained majority, and sued for a declaration that she was entitled to inherit the properties of Perianna after the life-time of the two widows, that the son of Perianna had no interest in those properties as he was incapacitated from inheriting the same by reason of his having been born a dumb and insane person and that the alienations made by the widows were not binding on her. Both the lower Courts granted her a decree as prayed for. The junior widow and the son appealed to the High Court.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellants:—The relinquishment deed is invalid as the father did not accept any consideration, even a trifle, as required by the Hindu Law and as he was not able to support himself otherwise.

[SADASVA AIYAR, J.—Thangavelu Pillai v. Doraisami Pillai (1) is against such a position.]

I wish to argue the whole question. Acceptance of some trifling consideration is necessary to validate the relinquishment. See the observations of Bhashyam Iyengar J., in Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (2). Further, the person relinquishing must be able to maintain himself otherwise by his own exertions. Sacred Books of the East, Volume XXV, page 207 and Colebrook's Digest, Chapter II, page 277. Jagannadha's Digest cannot be taken as a binding authority. Again, the Courts below erred in granting a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to inherit the property after the death of the widows and that the 3rd defendant (the son) was not entitled to the same.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the 1st Respondent and Mr. A. K. Madhava Rau, for the 5th Respondent:—The texts quoted by the other side are merely directory and not mandatory, Thangavelu Pillai v. Doraisami Pillai (1). The decree in so far as it grants a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to inherit the properties after the life-time of the widows and that the 3rd defendant has no interest in the same cannot be supported.

JUDGMENT.—The only declaratory relief to which a contingent reversioner is ordinarily entitled when he disputes the alienation by qualified female heirs, is that those alienations are not binding beyond the life-time of the qualified female owner or owners. The other declarations given by the first Court decree (confirmed by the Appellate Court), namely, "that the plaintiff be declared entitled to inherit the property after the death of defendants Nos. 1 and 2" and "that 3rd defendant has no interest, etc.", were unnecessary and the discretion of the Courts as to declaratory reliefs was not exercised properly in granting those two declarations. The decrees will be modified by striking out the words relating to the above two declarations. The decrees are confirmed in other respects. As regards the contention that the release, Exhibit I, was invalid under Hindu Law, the only new argument brought forward by appellants' learned Vakil for re-considering our decision in Thangavelu Pillai v. Doraisami Pillai (1) was that the Hindu Law requires for the validity of a relinquishment by a co-partner of his interest in the joint family property, not only that he should accept a trifle but also that he should be in possession of ability to support himself otherwise by his own exertions. The texts of Manu and Yajnavalkya relied upon for this contention, when they speak of the relinquishment by an "able" co-parcener of his right, do not make his "ability" (to earn his living) the test of the validity of the relinquishment, but intend to indicate [to repeat the language used in Thangavelu Pillai v Doraisami Pillai (1)] that that will also afford "evidence of the deliberate and final character of the relinquishment."

As the second appeal has failed substantially, the 1st appellant will pay the 1st respondent's costs.

Mortgage—Foreclosure—Sale—Burden of proof—Pleas—Preliminary pleas—Court to insist on filing full pleas—Ground of appeal, appellant when can go out of.

A mortgagee who alleges that the mortgage has become a sale must prove that all the necessary legal requirements have been fulfilled, nothing can be presumed.

As a general rule at all events, Courts of original jurisdiction should call on defendants to put in their complete pleas in the first place. Pleading piecemeal should be avoided as far as possible.

A party can go outside his grounds of appeal with the leave of the Court.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiapur Division, dated the 12th February 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, second Class, Dharmasala, dated the 19th August 1913, dismissing the suit.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Hukam Chand for Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for redemption. The defendants put in pleas which are marked as preliminary pleas, to the effect that the deed was one of lai-bil-wafa and that foreclosure proceedings had taken place which had turned the mortgage into an out and out sale. Issues marked as preliminary issues were framed on this point. The first Court decided these issues in defendants' favour and dismissed the suit. Plaintiff appealed to the Divisional Judge, who held that it was not proved that all the requisite formalities necessary to complete foreclosure had been complied with. With this finding I quite agree. That all the necessary legal requirements have been fulfilled must be strictly proved by a mortgagee who alleges that the mortgage has become a sale, and nothing can be presumed. The burning of the Kangra record room may be unfortunate for the defendants in this case, but still we cannot make presumption as to service of notice on the mortgagors, etc.

But the Divisional Judge apparently overlooked the fact that only a preliminary plea had been put in, so instead of remanding the case to give defendants a chance of putting in their full pleas he gave plaintiffs a decree for redemption.

Defendants now (through Counsel) ask for a chance of putting in their full pleas. For respondents it is urged that defendants should have made this request in the Divisional Court. But did they know, when their case was before the Divisional Judge, that the Judge was going to give plaintiffs a decree off hand? Might they not well have thought that in case the Divisional Judge, disagreed with the first Court in its finding on the preliminary point he would remand the case for further pleading?

It is also urged that defendants are now going outside their grounds of appeal to this Court. But they can do so with leave of this Court.

I note that, as a general rule at all events, Courts of original jurisdiction should call on defendants to put in complete pleas in the first place. Pleading piecemeal should be avoided as far as possible.

I accept this appeal, and reversing the decree of the Divisional Judge, I return Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 110, 132—Mortgagor and mortgagee—Usufructuary mortgage—Lease by mortgagee to mortgagor—Interest charged on mortgaged property—Rent not paid—Suit for principal and interest on foot of mortgage—Interest, whether can be decreed.

On the 8th April 1896, the plaintiff obtained an usufructuary mortgage of items 1 to 9 of the suit properties and by a document of even date leased the same to the mortgagors. On 1st September 1903, he obtained an usufructuary mortgage of the same items 1 to 9 and a simple mortgage of items 10 to 19 in consideration of further advances, the mortgagors obtaining at the same time a fresh lease of items 1 to 9 from the mortgagee. This second document expressly made the mortgaged properties liable not only for re-payment of the principal but also for interest. In 1912 the mortgagee instituted the present suit on the foot of both the mortgages for sale of the mortgaged properties and for the realisation of the mortgage amount, including the interest due. The Subordinate Judge gave a decree for the principal and three years' rent:

Held, that the document of 1903 having made the payment of interest also a charge on the mortgaged properties, the claim for interest was governed by Article 132 and not Article 110, Limitation Act, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the interest under the terms of the mortgage-deed irrespective of the fact that a portion of the properties had been mortgaged usufructually and had been leased by the mortgagee to the defendants. [p. 819, col. 1; p. 820, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Palghat, in Original Suit No. 26 of 1912.

FACTS.—The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Messrs. C. A. Anantakrishna Iyer and T. Eroman Unni, for the Appellant:—The plaintiff is entitled to recover the full amount of interest claimed under the terms of the mortgage-deed, dated 1st September 1903. That document expressly charges the mortgaged property with the payment of interest also. The claim for interest is governed by Article 132 of the Limitation Act, and not by Article 110 as wrongly decided by the Subordinate Judge. The fact that some of the properties comprised in the mortgage had been leased out by the mortgagee to the mortgagor has no bearing upon the question. There is no reason why effect should not be given to the express provisions of the mortgage-deed. Further, the mortgagor himself having been in possession and not having paid the rent, it is very inequitable that he should be allowed to say that the mortgagee is to suffer owing to his (mortgagor's) non-fulfilment of his legal obligation. The mortgagor should not be allowed to profit by his own fraud. Juggeevundas Keeka Shah v. Ramdas Brijbookundas (1), Hughes v. Williams (2).

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents:—The decision of the Subordinate Judge is quite correct. The mortgage is usufructuary; only rent was payable and not interest Kutti Umma v. Madhava Menon (3). Consequently Article 110 applied and rent for more than three years is not recoverable. The plaintiff is responsible for the non-collection of the rent in time. He is accountable to the mortgagor for whatever rent he might have collected but for his negligence. See section 76 (6), Transfer of Property Act.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—On the 8th April 1896, under Exhibit A, the defendants mortgaged with possession nine items of property estimated to yield 1,000 paras of paddy which, after meeting the assessment and interest, left 126 paras to go in reduction of the principal. On the same day, by Exhibit B, the mortgagors leased back from the mortgagees the nine items on the terms that they were only to pay the mortgagees the 650 paras due for interest on the mortgage and retain 350 paras out of which they were to pay the assessment.

On the 1st September 1903 the mortgagors executed another mortgage in favour of the mortgagees, Exhibit C, for Rs. 3,300, of 19 items of property, of which items 1 to 9 were the subject of the mortgage with possession (Exhibit A).

The mortgage was expressly recited to be given as security for the principal sum of Rs. 3,300 and the interest thereon, and as to items 1 to 9 was with possession and as to the other items without possession. On the same day the mortgagors again took a lease of the nine items which were included in both mortgages at a rental of 1,000 paras of paddy. On these facts the Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff is not entitled to a charge on the mortgaged properties for the arrears of interest due on the mortgage, although the mortgage is expressly stated to secure the interest as well as the principal, by reason of the fact that the mortgagors took the nine items on lease under Exhibit D and that the rent due by them for more than three years is barred. He, accordingly, only allowed the amount of three years' rent. The Subordinate Judge says the interest on the mortgage Exhibit C had been agreed to be paid out of the usufruct of the nine items comprised in Exhibit A, but I do not find any such provision in Exhibit C and I can see no reason for refusing to give effect to the provisions of the Exhibit C that the whole 19 items mortgaged should be security for the interest as well as the principal. I would, therefore, modify the decree accordingly. The similar ground of appeal as to the interest in Exhibit A was not pressed, and the other objections are untenable. The decree will be modified accordingly. The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs of the appeal.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs. Time for redemption is extended to three months after the re-opening of the lower Court.

TYABJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the realisation of debts secured by two mortgages, for the sale of the properties mortgaged, and for a personal decree against the mortgagors. The mortgages are Exhibits A and C on the record, dated 8th April 1896 and 1st September 1903, for the sums of Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 3,300 respectively. It has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the mortgages were supported by consideration, that they were executed for tarwad purposes, that there was necessity for their execution and that they are, therefore, binding as against the properties themselves and the interests of all the members of the tarwad. These findings are based on a consideration of all the evidence, including the circumstances that all the adult members (for the time being) of the tarwad joined in the execution of the mortgages sued upon and that "reasonable inquiries" had been made into the necessities of the tarwad. It is unnecessary to say more in regard to these findings than that the evidence fully supports them.

The mortgages sued upon purport to be usufructuary. But on the very days on which they were executed, the parties entered into agreements (Exhibits B and D respectively, dated 8th April 1896 and 1st September 1903), by which the usufructuary mortgagee purported to let the mortgaged premises to the mortgagor; and the latter purported thenceforth to hold possession of the mortgaged properties as tenant of the mortgagee. Thus the mortgagor continued in possession of the properties usufructuarily mortgaged, but in effect attorned to the mortgagee.

The question then arises, whether what the plaintiff was entitled to claim over and above the repayment of the principal mortgage amount was rent or interest. If it was rent then he could claim it in the present suit only for three years (the rest being barred under Article 110 of the Limitation Act); whereas if it is to be considered as interest the payment of which was charged upon the properties mortgaged, then Article 132 of the Limitation Act would apply and the claim would not be barred for 12 years.

The appellant does not press his claims under Exhibit A but relies on Exhibit C, which is explicit that the mortgaged properties were to be "the security of these Rs. 3,300 and the interest therefor." Hence the interest is clearly a charge on the mortgaged properties and Article 132 applies—not Article 110; Kutti Umma v. Madhava Menon (3) is clearly distinguishable. The mortgagor can then disclaim liability for payment of any interest (or rent) on the properties, only on the basis that the mortgagee was in possession and he ought to have collected the rents, and that as he has failed to collect the rents and their collection (as rents) is barred by limitation, he ought to be made to account as though he had collected them.

This argument can be supported in India only on the basis of section 76 (6) of the Transfer of Property Act. I may say at once that it hardly lies in the mouth of the mortgagor or tenant (however he be styled) to say that the mortgagee must account to him on the basis of wilful default for not collecting the rent which he (the mortgagor) himself has failed to pay. If the reason of the rule is looked to, this prima facie view is strengthened. For the mortgagee in possession is made to account for what he ought to have (but has not) received, because, where the loss of the rents has to fall on either the mortgagor or the mortgagee and the mortgagee alone is responsible for the loss and had he used his best endeavours to collect the rents "they would have been collected and there would have been no loss on either the mortgagee or the mortgagor, in such cases it is but fair that the loss should fall on the mortgagee. I am speaking, of course, only with reference to the facts of this case and do not suggest that other aspects of the question are excluded. Now, here, in the first instance, by the non-collection of rents there has been no loss to the mortgagor: the mortgagor has in fact been so far saved the payments. In Juggeewundas Keeka Shah v. Ramdas Brijbookundas (1), where under similar circumstances the mortgagee permitted the mortgagor to receive the rents instead of collecting them himself, he was held not to have forfeited his rights. Secondly, as I have already said, the mortgagor cannot be heard to say: "True, I did not pay the rent that I was bound to pay. But it is the mortgagee who is at fault. He ought to have compelled me to fulfil my legal obligations." This kind of virtuous indignation is out of place in the circumstances. Thus in Hughes v. Williams (2), the Lord Chancellor (Lord Erskine) said:

"Another circumstance that weighs with me is, that the mortgagor, if he knows the estate is under-let, ought to give notice to the mortgagee, and to afford his advice and aid, for the purpose of making the estate as productive as possible. If he communicated to the mortgagee plans of improvement in his contemplation, which were disappointed by the embarrassment of his affairs, the Court might take a stricter view of the mortgagee's conduct. In this instance, not only such notice was not given, but during this whole period of 16 years, while the mortgagor was out of possession, he never stated that the estate was not managed as it might be. Can the mortgagor lie by, not giving notice, that a greater rent may be made, and come afterwards, by way of penal inquiry, to charge the mortgagee with the effect of his own negligence? I agree to the principle that has been stated by the Solicitor-General that it would be dangerous to say, the mortgagee is not answerable except for fraud, and would contradict many decrees. If such gross negligence can be shown as comes up to the description of wilful default, he ought to be answerable for it."

Similar considerations tell against the mortgagor's contention in the present case, though the facts are not on all fours.

Finally, if the case must be decided with reference to abstract reasoning, it may well be urged that the mortgagee was only constructively in possession, if at all, and that for the period during which the mortgagee has not collected rents owing to the refusal of the mortgagor to pay the rents, there can hardly be said to have been any possession even constructive on the part of the mortgagee as between him and the person who was in actual possession without recognizing the rights of the mortgagee as landlord: Juggeewundas Keeka Shah v. Ramdas Brijbookundas (1).

For these reasons, I agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

A judgment in a previous suit not inter partes is inadmissible as evidence of an admission said to have been made by a party in the course of the previous suit.

The proper mode of proving any admission made by a defendant in a previous suit is by producing a certified copy of his written statement or if the admission was made orally, by producing a copy of the defendant's deposition or by putting in the witness-box some one who actually heard what the defendant said.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Alipur dated the 13th June 1912. The appellant is defendant No. 1. The plaintiff sued for the recovery of the share which the plaintiff claims in a certain property in the appellant's possession. The plaintiff's case is that he and defendant No. 1 are co-sharers and that he is entitled to a one-anna six-gandas share in the land in suit. The Courts below have decided in his favour.

In this appeal it is contended that the learned Subordinate Judge in the lower Appellate Court has wrongly admitted a judgment in a previous suit not inter partes as evidence of an admission said to have been made by the defendant apparently incidentally in the course of that suit. That suit was brought by another person against the present defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge relies upon a certain passage in the judgment as proving an admission made by the defendant. I am of opinion that the judgment was inadmissible in evidence for the purpose for which it was used. It is not suggested that the learned Subordinate Judge who wrote the judgment is dead, or that the judgment is admissible under section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. What is suggested is that the judgment is admissible under section 13 of that Act. It seems to me, however, the judgment has not been used as evidence of a transaction in which the right now claimed by the plaintiff was admitted or recognized. So far as I can see the transaction to which the judgment relates does not involve or include any such admission or recognition. The admission is not part and parcel of that transaction. The judgment has been used solely for the purpose of proving the alleged admission. It is very doubtful whether the admission made has the effect attributed to it by the learned Subordinate Judge. But apart from that it seems to me that the proper mode of proving any admission made by the defendant in the previous suit was by producing a certified copy of the defendant's written statement or if the admission was made orally, by producing a copy of the defendant's deposition or by putting in the witness-box some one who actually heard what the defendant said. The statement in the judgment does not purport to be a quotation of the precise words used by the defendant either in his written statement or in his deposition. It is certainly not clear how or why the admission came to be made for the purpose in view; the judgment seems to me to be no better than any other hearsay evidence of the admission.

The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has established his title mainly on the strength of the admission to which I have referred. The error, therefore, which he has committed in using the judgment for a purpose for which it cannot be legitimately used vitiates his decree. The result is that, in my opinion, the judgment and decree appealed from should be set aside and the case should be remanded to the lower Appellate Court in order that the appeal to that Court, so far as relates to plots Nos. 2, 3, 4, 9, 12 and 19, may be re-heard with reference to these observations. As regards plot No. 1 this appeal is dismissed with proportionate costs. The balance of the costs

RESPONDENT.

Hindu temple—Dedication to public—Character of temple, inference as to, from particular acts and circumstances.

ONE S, the paternal uncle of the defendant's husband, built a temple in 1830 and dedicated it to Sri Venkateswaraswami. Idols were installed. Servants such as Archakas, Vedaparayanam and Adhyapakam office holders and others usually employed in public temples were appointed. There was no difference between this temple and other public temples so far as the performance of pūja and other services was concerned. Ever since it was built the temple was under the management of the defendant and her predecessors-in-title as dharmakartas. The public were freely allowed to worship therein and perform vows, and there was nothing to show that the public had to obtain the permission of the dharmakarta therefor. It also appeared that when the temple lands had to be enfranchised, inam pūttals were issued in the name of the idol. Some lands were also given to the temple by a stranger to the family. There was also a Will in which the defendant's husband was described as a dharmakarta.

Held, that the above facts clearly established that the suit temple was dedicated for public worship. [p. 823, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the fact that the food cooked in the temple and offered to the idol was used by the defendant, that the temple servants rendered services to her also, that the Will contained elaborate provisions regarding the management of the temple, and that no accounts had been maintained by the defendant or her predecessors-in-title of the management of the temple properties, did not in any way derogate from the public character of the temple and were quite insufficient to prove that it was the private property of the defendant. [p. 823, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 7 of 1913.

FACTS.—The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Messrs. M. O. Parthasarathi Iyengar and V. Ramesam, for the Appellants:—The temple in question was no doubt originally built by the paternal uncle of the defendant's husband, but it was being managed by him all along only as dharmakarta. Ever since it was built the outside public had the right of worship therein and were making offerings and performing vows; no permission had ever been obtained for the same. Even in the matter of pūja and services there was absolutely no difference between a public temple and the suit temple. Exhibit IV clearly recites that the defendant's husband was only a dharmakarta. The lands belonging to the temple had been enfranchised in the idol's name. These facts clearly show a dedication to the public.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Respondent:—The temple is purely a private institution. The public had only been permitted to worship therein. The food cooked in the temple and offered to the idol is taken by the defendant. The servants of the temple are only her private servants, who in addition to their other work are working in the temple. Exhibit IV itself shows that the temple cannot be a public one, as it contains elaborate provisions for management which are ultra vires of the trustee. The most important and conclusive fact is the non-maintenance of accounts by the defendant and her predecessors-in-title regarding the management of the temple. This could never be if the suit temple had been a public one.

JUDGMENT.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the suit temple is a private temple or a public temple. The temple was built in 1830 by one Singarachary, the paternal uncle of the defendant's husband, in the village of Bhyripuram. The temple was dedicated to Sri Venkateswaraswami. The defendant and her predecessors are styled dharmakartas of the temple (Exhibits I, III and IV).

A fixed stone idol was installed in the temple and also, copper idol to be taken out in processions. Archakas or priests were appointed to make the pūja or worship as also reciters of Veda and Tamil prabandhams and other servants usually employed in public temples. In fact the pūja and other services in the temple in no way differ from those in a public temple. It is admitted that the general public, ever since the construction of the temple and the consecration of the idols, have been worshipping in the temple. It is said that they do so with the permission of the dharmakarta for the time being. There is, however, no evidence that any such permission was ever asked for. The witnesses for the plaintiffs say that all caste Hindus have a right to worship in the temple, and the evidence for the defendant materially corroborates this. Defence witness No. 1 says in his cross examination that "Vaishnavas have a right to worship god in the temple. Brahmins, Kshatriyas and Komatis have a right to get worship done through the Archakas. People of all castes may make offerings to god. Such offerings were never refused. Even defendant's enemies worship at the temple." Defence witness 3 says "that all the three castes have a right to make worship and give offerings at the suit temple. As defendant is trustee she has the right to allow or refuse admittance to the temple without assigning reasons. She never to my knowledge refused admittance." Her fourth witness says in his examination-in-chief "that the temple is under the dharmakartaship of the defendant. It belongs to god. Venkateswaraswami," and in cross-examination "the defendant cannot appropriate the lands to her use, nor alienate them. All people can worship and offer bhoyams at the suit temple only through archakas. Defendant has never hitherto refused permission to worship." It is also clear from the evidence, especially paragraphs 13 and 14 of Exhibit IV, that the general public have been making offerings, and fulfilling vows in the temple. Another important circumstance is that the lands belonging to the temple were enfranchised and inam puttahs issued in the name of the idol. Exhibit C shows that a person who was a stranger to the defendant's family gave some lands to the temple. Further, the Will, Exhibit IV, shows that with respect to the temple and its endowments the defendant's husband was merely a dharmakarta or trustee. The evidence above set out clearly establishes that the suit temple was dedicated for public worship.

The defendant, however, relies on the following facts to prove that the temple is her private temple viz., that the food cooked in the temple and offered to the idol is used by the defendant; that the temple servants also render service to her; that the Will, Exhibit IV, contains elaborate provisions for the management of the temple which ordinarily a trustee of a public temple would have no power to make; and that no accounts were kept by the defendant or her predecessors of the management of the temple properties. It appears that the bulk of the property of the temple was given by the defendant's husband and his uncle, they were also the hereditary trustees; and it is, therefore, not unlikely that they, sometimes, arrogated to themselves powers which they did not possess. They are quite insufficient to prove that the temple is a private temple. It is very unusual for a Hindu in Southern India to construct a temple outside his dwelling house for private worship. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the learned District Judge on this point.

The District Judge finds that no misconduct or negligence has been proved against the defendant in the management of the temple or its properties, and I agree with him. As I find that the temple is a public temple, the defendant is bound to maintain accounts of her management of the temple and its endowments.

The respondent contends that the sanction of the Collector, Exhibit A, is vague and also that the plaintiffs, who are only two out of the large number of persons to whom sanction was given, are not entitled to sue under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. But as the two plaintiffs have obtained the sanction of the District Court under the Religious Endowments Act, it is unnecessary to decide this point. I would reverse the decree of the District Judge and declare that the suit temple is a public temple and direct the defendant to maintain accounts of her management of the temple and its endowments.

As regards the costs, in the circumstances of this case I would direct each party to bear his own costs throughout.

WALLIS, C. J.—I agree. Having regard to the ideas prevailing among Hindus in this part of India, I think there is sufficient evidence of an intention to dedicate these properties for public charitable purposes, that is that the remedy of the decree-holder was, either to have the decree vacated, the suit restored, the executrices brought on the record and a new decree made against them, or, to institute a suit on the judgment and to obtain a decree thereon against the executrices. [p. 825, col. 2.]

On the 16th September 1911 A instituted a suit against M for the recovery of a large sum of money. During the pendency of the suit M died on the 27th November 1911. On the application of A, the three sons of the deceased, who were ostensibly his heirs and representatives, were brought on the record in his place. They did not object to the adoption of this course. The case was tried on the merits and on the 8th May 1912, a decree was made, with the usual direction that the judgment-debt be realised out of the estate of the deceased in the hands of the substituted defendants. On the 9th June 1913, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, and notices were duly issued. Thereupon the wives of the three sons of the deceased intervened and stated that execution could not proceed as M had made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 18th May 1911, whereby they had been appointed executrices.

Held, that the decree as it stood could not be executed against the estate in the hands of the executrices; [p 825, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the decree-holders against an order in execution proceedings, and illustrates, what has been often stated before, that the difficulties of a litigant begin when he has obtained his decree. On the 16th September 1911 the appellants instituted a suit against one Mahim Chandra Chakrabarti for recovery of a large sum of money. During the pendency of the suit, the defendant died on the 27th November 1911. On the application of the plaintiffs, the three sons of the deceased, who were ostensibly his heirs and representatives, were brought on the record in his place. They did not object to the adoption of this course. The case was tried on the merits, and on the 8th May 1912 a decree was made against the persons supposed to be the heirs and representatives of the original debtor. The decree directed as usual that the judgment-debt be realised out of the estate of the deceased in the hands of the substituted defendants. On the 9th June 1913, the decree-holders applied for execution of their decree, and notices were duly issued. Thereupon the wives of the three sons of the deceased intervened and stated that execution could not proceed as Mohim Chandra, their father-in-law, had made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 1st May 1911, whereby they had been appointed executrices. They alleged that the Will had been duly proved in 1913, but that the Probate had not been actually issued as the question of valuation of estate was still under investigation by the Collector. The Court held that the decree had been obtained against persons who were not the true representatives of the deceased debtor and could not be executed against the estate in the hands of the executrices. The application for execution was consequently dismissed. The decree-holders appealed to the District Judge, but the appeal has been dismissed as incompetent. The decree-holders have now appealed to this Court and have contended that the appeal should have been heard on the merits by the District Judge and execution allowed against the estate in the hands of the executrices. It is plain that the answer to the question whether the order of the primary Court was appealable or not, depends upon the question, whether the decree is capable of execution against the estate in the hands of the executrices; if the latter are representatives of the parties to the suit, the order falls within the scope of section 47 of the Code and is appealable as a decree; if they cannot be deemed such representatives, the order is not covered by that section and cannot be challenged by way of appeal.

We may at the outset deal with a narrow ground assigned by the respondents in support of the view that the executrices are not representatives of the parties to the suit; they have argued that they are the representatives of the original debtor but are in no sense representatives of the sons of the debtor, who were brought on the record of the suit as his successors-in-interest. This contention is based on a limited view of the meaning of the term 'representative.' The sons of the deceased defendant were brought on the record as his representatives-in-interest; they were unquestionably his representatives to all appearances; the Will had not been proved at that time, nor were the plaintiffs ever aware of its existence. Consequently, they were the only persons who could be brought on the record as successors-in-interest of the deceased. Since then the Will has been proved, and the Probate, by a legal fiction, takes effect retrospectively from the date of the death of the testator. Consequently the estate which was then ostensibly represented by the sons and heirs of the deceased, is now represented by the executrices. Without undue stretch of language, the view may, in these circumstances, be maintained that the executrices are representatives of the parties to the suit who were themselves before the Court in a representative character. Reference may in this connection be made to the decision in Premmoyi v. Preonath Dhur (1), where an analogous question arose for consideration. There a Hindu widow had instituted a suit as representative of the estate of her husband; on her death during the pendency of the suit, the reversionary heirs were brought on the record. It was contended that they were not her representatives as they derived title not from her, but from her husband. This contention was negatived, and it was ruled that as the widow and the reversioners successively represented the same interest, the reversioners might be treated as representatives of the widow. We are, therefore, not prepared to hold that the order of the primary Court is beyond the scope of section 47, merely because the executrices cannot, in popular language, be called representatives of the deceased debtor. Whether they can be deemed representatives of parties to the suit or not, depends, in our opinion, upon the answer to a more fundamental question.

It was explained by a Full Bench of the Court in Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (2) that the term representative includes not merely a legal representative such as heir, executor or administrator, but also a representative-in-interest, that is, a representative of the decree-holder or judgment-debtor who, so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree: Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (3). We are thus brought back to what must be deemed the root of the matter in this case, namely are the executrices bound by the decree? We are of opinion that the decree as it stands cannot be executed against the estate in their hands and that the remedy of the decree-holders is, either, to have the decree vacated, the suit restored, the executrices brought on the record and a new decree made against them, or, to institute a suit on the judgment and to obtain a decree thereon against the executrices. This is clear from the decision in Ashi Bhushan Dasi v. Pelaram Mandal (4). There a decree had been obtained for mesne profits against an alleged adopted minor son as the representative of the wrong-doer. The adoption was subsequently declared invalid, whereupon the decree-holder sought to proceed in execution against the real representative. It was ruled that the decree-holder could not proceed against the judgment-debtor on the record as he had not received any assets of the wrong-doer; nor could he ask the Court to substitute the name of the real representative in the decree, because the result would be really a new decree in his favour against such representative. At the same time, it is clear that a suit can be brought against the executrices on the basis of the judgment already obtained.

Reference may be made to the decision of Markby, J., in Prosunno Chunder Bhattacharjee v. Kristo Chytunno Pal (5), where, under circumstances somewhat similar to those of the present case, it was held that if the decree could not be executed against the estate in the hands of the executor, it was at any rate sufficient to enable the plaintiff to bring a suit against the executor to have the decree satisfied. We are not now concerned with the question of the binding character of orders made or sales held in execution of a decree obtained against persons who, as subsequent events show, are either not the proper representatives of the deceased defendant or constitute only some of his representatives. There has been some divergence of judicial opinion upon this matter, as is clear from an examination of the decisions in General Manager of the Raj Durbhanga v. Ramaput Singh (6); Assamatthem Nessa Bibee v. Lutchempeet Singh (7); Chuni Lal v. Osmond Beeby (8); Baswantapa Shidapa v. Ranu (9); Janaki v. Dhanu Lal (10); Chathakelan v. Govinda Karumiar (11); Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar (12) and Ramasawmi Chettiar v. Oppilamani Chetti (13) on the one hand, and Sitanath Das v. Roy Luchmiput Singh (14); Harish Chunder Biswas v. Puri Das Das (15) and Lal Behary v. Nagendra Nath (16) on other hand. These decisions do not directly touch the question in controversy now before us, viz., whether the decree obtained against the ostensible representatives should be allowed to be executed against the estate in the hands of the executrices though objection is taken before execution has been issued, or whether the decree-holders should be limited to their remedy by way of a decree against the executrices, either by re-opening the suit or by instituting a fresh suit on the judgment previously obtained. The decision in Rameshwar Singh v. Janeshwari Babooshin (17), which bears on the subject, is clearly distinguishable, in view of the special circumstances under which the decree in the first suit was obtained. There cannot, we think, be a reasonable doubt that a suit would lie on the judgment; this, indeed, is to some extent borne out by Article 122 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, which shows that the Legislature contemplated the possibility of suits upon judgments obtained in British India, though we are not unmindful that the Limitation Act cannot give rise to a cause of action where none exists independently of the provisions thereof; as Sir Richard Couch observed in Hari Nath v. Mothuramohan (18), the intention of the law of limitation is not to give a right where there is not one, but to interpose a bar after a certain period to a suit to enforce an existing right: Khunni Lal v. Kunwar Gobind Krishna Narain (19). It is not necessary, for our present purpose, to enter upon a discussion of the circumstances under which a suit lies upon a judgment in British India. An examination of the cases, specially those of Sandes v. Jomir Shaikh (20); Attermoney Dossee v. Hurry Doss Dutt (21); Golam Arab v. Curreembux Shaikjee (22); *Bhavanishankar v. PARVATHI AMMAL v. GOVINDASAMI PILLAI.

Periasami Mudaliar v. Seetharama Chettiar (28), shows that there is considerable divergence of judicial opinion upon the subject, and that the Courts are by no means agreed as to the circumstances under which a suit may be instituted in this country on what may be called a domestic as distinguished from a foreign judgment. It is well known that in England there has been divergence of judicial opinion on the subject [Freeman on Judgments, Chapter XVII; Black or Judgments, Chapter XXIV], and it is only in recent years that the principle has been adopted that although an action lies on judgment which finally establishes a debt, whether the judgment be English or foreign, it is an abuse of the process of the Court to bring an action upon an English judgment if it can be enforced in some other way: Pritchett v. English and Colonial Syndicate (29); Grant v. Easton (30); Nourion v. Freeman (31); Pemberton v. Hughes (32); Hodsoll v. Baxter (33). The principle on which an action is allowed to be maintained on a judgment was concisely explained by Baron Parke in Williams v. Jones (34): "The principle... is, that, where a Court of competent jurisdiction has adjudicated a certain sum to be due from one person to another, a legal obligation arises to pay that sum, on which an action of debt to enforce the judgment may be maintained." No mischief can result from the acceptance of this principle, if it is adopted subject to the qualification recognised in modern English law, viz., that an action is permissible only where the judgment cannot be enforced in some other way; and beyond this, it is not necessary for our purpose to proceed.

We hold accordingly that the decree-holders are not entitled to execute their decree against the estate in the hands of the executrices. The appeal is consequently dismissed, but there will be no order for costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 93—
Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 315—Execution sale set aside—Purchaser, suit by, against decree-holder for poundage deducted from purchase-money as well as for interest on amount of purchase-money deposited, maintainability of—Poundage, what is.

A third party purchaser at an execution sale, which was subsequently set aside owing to the irregularities in the conduct thereof for which the decree-holder was responsible, is entitled to sue and recover from the decree-holder the amount of poundage which was deducted from the purchase-money deposited by him into Court as well as interest on such deposit. There is nothing in Order XXI, rule 93, Civil Procedure Code, which debars such a suit. [p. 830, col. 2.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 690 and 718 of 1912, respectively, both preferred against those of the Court of the District Munsif of Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 271 of 1911.

FACTS.—The facts of the case appear clearly from the judgment.

Mr. K. S. Ganapathi Iyer, for the Appellant in Second Appeal No. 1127 of 1914 and for the Respondent in Second Appeal No. 1147 of 1914:—No suit lies to recover poundage or interest. The remedy of the plaintiff was in execution proceedings. Section 315 of the Code of 1882 has been changed in this respect and Order XXI, rule 93, of the present Code of 1908 does not permit a suit. also Rule 157 of the Mofussil Rules of Practice, which provides that on setting aside the sale, the Court shall determine which of the parties is responsible therefor, etc. Further, the purchaser is not entitled to the return of the poundage under rule 157 (2) of the Rules of Practice (Mofussil). Again, the purchaser is either on the ground of estoppel or by res judicata debarred from claiming a refund of the poundage or interest inasmuch as he failed to ask for them in the proceedings to set aside the sale to which he was a party. Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (2). Lastly, there is no provision in the Code for the recovery of poundage.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondent in Second Appeal No. 1127 of 1914 and the Appellant in Second Appeal No. 1147 of 1914:—The suit is not for poundage, but for a portion of the purchase-money which has been withheld by the Court for poundage from the amount deposited by the purchaser. The case in Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed Meera Levvai (1) does not apply, as there the sale was set aside for want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor. Moreover, the right to recover the purchase-money, being a substantive right, cannot be affected by a change in procedure. The Court ought to assist the purchaser as he is an innocent third party. The right to recover the purchase-money in a case such as the present where the sale is avoided for fraud or carelessness on the part of the decree-holder is not a creation of Statute, but is an inherent right existing apart therefrom. Vide Powell v. Powell (3), Rawstorne v. Wilkinson (4), Tyson v. Paske (5) and 24 American Cyclopaedia of Law and Procedure, page 70. The plaintiff is clearly entitled to interest as he has been deprived of the use of his money. Raghubar Dayal v. Bank of Upper India Limited (6).

Mr. K. S. Ganapathi Iyer, in reply:—The decree-holder did not draw the money from the Court and as he had not the use of the money, which remained all along in Court, he is not liable to pay any interest.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are not in dispute. The defendant obtained a decree against certain persons. Immoveable properties were sold under that decree, and the plaintiff became the purchaser. At the instance of the judgment-debtors the sale was set aside on the ground of irregularities in the conduct of the sale. Plaintiff, the purchaser, sued to recover the amount of the poundage fee deducted from the purchase-money paid by him, and also interest. The claim for Vakils' fees, etc., has not been pressed before us. The District Munsif held that plaintiff was entitled to interest at 6 per cent. and that a separate suit does not lie to recover poundage. Both the parties appealed. The Subordinate Judge held that the claim for poundage was sustainable, but that interest should not have been decreed. Second Appeal No. 1127 of 1914 is by the defendant against the decree for poundage. Second Appeal No. 1147 of 1914 is by the plaintiff for the interest disallowed.

Before dealing with the question of law argued before us, we may state that we see no reason to differ from the conclusion of the Courts below that defendant is responsible for the irregularities in the conduct of the execution sale. In the order passed on the application of the judgment-debtor, the Subordinate Judge held "that the decree-holder was responsible for the material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale." (See paragraph 9 of the District Munsif's judgment.) The District Munsif in the present suit came to the same conclusion—apparently the liability of the defendant was not disputed in appeal. It is true the Court in ordering the sale of the property should have directed the amin to sell the property in different lots, but that would not absolve the defendant from his liability. The responsibility of the officer leaving execution in the mofussil is not that of the Sheriff in England. It is the duty of the decree-holder to put the Court in possession of the necessary information and to attend to the various requirements of the law in publishing and conducting the sale. The Court cannot be proceeded against for irregularity in execution, if it acted to the best of its information and without malice. The party who puts the Court in motion is liable to the purchaser who has been aggrieved. Even in Sheriff's sales, the purchaser is entitled to proceed against the decree-holder. In Dorab Ally Khan v. Executor of Khajah Moheooodeen (7), in which the Judicial Committee had to pronounce upon the liability of the Sheriff who executed a decree of the original side of the Calcutta High Court, it was pointed out that the Sheriff may render himself liable if he seized the property situated beyond his territorial jurisdiction, or if he exceeded the powers expressly conferred on him by the Statute. Their Lordships have also laid down that where the Sheriff acts under the advice and guidance of the execution creditor, the latter will be responsible to the purchaser. The present is an a fortiori case.

The main question argued related to the maintainability of the suit. Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar contended that the plaintiff should have sought redress in execution and that a separate suit does not lie. Section 315 of Act XIV of 1882 provided for two classes of cases: (1) where the sale has been set aside as provided for in the Code and (2) where it was found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. The present Code contains no provision regarding the right of the purchaser to obtain a refund of his purchase-money without applying to set aside the sale, when it is subsequently found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property. It may be, as suggested by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar for the respondent, that unless the purchaser seeks the aid of the Court to set aside the sale, he has no remedy against the decree-holder. It was laid down by the Judicial Committee in Dorab Ali Khan v. Executors of Khajah Moheooodeen (7) that there was no warranty of title in Court sales. See also Sundara Gopalan v. Venkatarada Ayyangar (8). The right of action to obtain a refund consequent on the want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor is not a right inhering in a purchaser, but is only the creature of a Statute and the right thus conferred can only be exercised within the limitations prescribed. Consequently, without getting the sale set aside through Court, the purchaser has no right of action. The general principle of caveat emptor would affect the purchaser unless he chooses to adopt the remedy given him by the Statute. But the right to recover from a party whose fraud or carelessness has led to the invalidity of the sale stands on a different footing. In such cases by neglecting the duty cast on him, he renders himself liable to compensate the injured party for the loss the latter has sustained. The right is not created for the first time by the Statute. The Code only recognised what has existed all along. As stated by Sir James Bacon (Vice-Chancellor) in Powell v. Powell (3), the purchaser is entitled under these circumstances to be discharged from his contract by reason of the invalidity of the proceedings which led up to the sale and is entitled to be placed in status quo ante. The same proposition is stated in 24 Cyclopaedia of Law and Procedure 70, thus:—

"It is generally held that when the proceedings are invalid, so that the purchaser loses the land, title to which he would have had but for the defects in the proceedings, he is entitled to recover back the purchase-money paid by him, and to be reimbursed for money expended by him for taxes and on repairs and improvements that have increased the value of the land."

The decision in Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mohamed Meera Levvai (1), on which the appellant relied strongly, does not touch the present question. Mr. Justice Napier held in that case that where the purchaser was deprived of the possession by reason of a decision in a subsequent suit, he is not entitled to sue for the return of the purchase-money. The omission from the Code of 1908 of the clause relating to the want of "saleable interest" in the judgment-debtor is relied on strongly by the learned Judge. In the present case the sale has not become abortive owing to the absence of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor. Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar contended that the words of section 315 of Act XIV of 1882 "that the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase-money" may confer a right of suit as held in numerous cases, but that the words "shall be entitled to an order for re-payment" in rule 93 indicates a deliberate policy to restrict the remedy to execution in all cases of sales being set aside. We are unable to see the distinction. There are no words in the present Code, as in the Code of 1882, enabling the purchaser to realise his money by way of execution. Further, he is no party to the suit or the decree. Unless, therefore, his right of action is taken away by express words, he is entitled to pursue his ordinary remedy by filing a suit.

Another contention of the appellant was that as poundage is taken by the Court, the decree-holder is not bound to pay it to the purchaser. This argument proceeds on a misconception of the nature of the poundage fees. As was pointed out by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar in his able argument, what the purchaser claims is really a portion of the purchase-money. It is from the payment made by him the Court makes a deduction for poundage and pays the balance to the decree-holder. Poundage is the fee which is levied in England by the Sheriff as remuneration for his services: In this country, as the officers of the Court conducting the sales are paid a fixed salary, a certain percentage of the purchase-money is taken for purchasing stamps. In effect the fee is a charge paid by the decree-holder for the services he obtains from the Court. In England as well as in this country, this fee is taken out of the sale-proceeds. See paragraph 71 in 14 Halsbury's Laws of England and rule 154 of the Civil Rules of Practice. There is, therefore, no warrant for the suggestion that in claiming the money retained as poundage fee, the purchaser does not ask for the return of the purchase-money. Nor do we see any reason to assent to the argument that the claim for the recovery of such fees should be disposed of in execution. The omission of the word "poundage" in rule 157, clause (2), was much relied on. This omission cannot affect the substantive right of suit which the purchaser has. It was held in Rawstorne v. Wilkinson (4), that the Sheriff has a right of action to recover poundage fees where the sale proves abortive. See also Tyson v. Paske (5). The auction-purchaser whose money has been paid by way of poundage to the Sheriff will stand in his shoes to recover it against the execution creditor. The fact that it is retained by the Court can make no difference in principle. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the suit is not obnoxious to the execution provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. We dismiss Second Appeal No. 1127 of 1914 with costs.

We are, however, unable to agree with the lower Appellate Court that the purchaser has lost his right to interest by any laches on his part. He is under no duty to see that the property is put up for sale in separate lots. He is not affected by any anterior mismanagement in the conduct of the sale. He has to take the property as advertised and sold. As he paid the money required by law, there is no reason for depriving him of the interest on his money. See Raghubar Dayal v. Bank of Upper India Limited (6). The rate of interest awarded by the Munsif is correct. We must reverse the decree in Second Appeal No. 1147 of 1914 with costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court and give a decree for Rs. 206 with interest at 6 per cent. from the date that the plaintiff deposited the money into Court.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sumdar Lal (with him Mr. S. M. Mir), for the Respondents, PEER MAHOMED ROWTHEN v. RARUTHAN AMBALAM.

JUDGMENT.—As the lower Appellate Court observed, the chief point to be decided is whether the plaintiff has proved delivery of possession in his favour. In support of the fact that he had received delivery of such possession he produced a duly certified copy of a dakhalnama. That copy was admitted and by order of the Court of first instance placed upon the record. Afterwards it was returned, but no reason appears upon the document as to why it should have been returned. The lower Appellate Court held that the copy of the dakhalnama was not admissible in evidence without proof of due execution. It accordingly refused to consider it. It further held that if it were admissible in evidence, the plaintiff had not succeeded in proving delivery of possession in his favour. The reason why it so held is that the dakhalnama contained only an admission of the plaintiff and no person is allowed to prove his own admission. As the plaintiff had not in the opinion of the lower Appellate Court succeeded in proving that delivery of possession was made in his favour on the 5th of March 1909 it dismissed the appeal with costs.

The plaintiff comes here in appeal and takes the plea that the dakhalnama is admissible in evidence and proves the plaintiff's allegation. In support of this contention reliance is placed upon the case of Muhammad Nasir v. Ram Karan Singh (1). In this case my brother Rafique held that as the dakhalnama is a public document, its copy is admissible in evidence without proof. I also am of the same opinion. The dakhalnama is a document forming record of the act of a public officer (executive), viz., the amin of the Court and that being so, a copy is admissible in evidence. As the lower Appellate Court has decided the appeal on a preliminary point, I reverse the decree upon this point. I direct that the appeal be returned to that Court with instructions to place it upon its file of pending appeals and to determine it according to law. The Court will receive in evidence the copy of the dakhalnama quantum valebat. This will not prevent the lower Appellate Court from exercising the discretion given it under Order XLI, rule 27. Costs will abide the event.

Appeal allowed; Cause remanded.

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in Execution Petition No. 78 of 1911 in Original Suit No. 2 of 1908 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Sub-Judge of Madura.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and R. Kappusawmy Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The view taken by the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported. The Subordinate Judge who heard the suit considered that the claim of the 5th plaintiff was barred by limitation and consequently did not pass any decree in his favour, therefore, the 5th plaintiff was not entitled to execute the decree as it stood at the time of the application. The Subordinate Judge to whom the application for execution was made considered that the 5th plaintiff must be regarded as the assignee of the decree, but the assignment to the 5th plaintiff was not of the decree but of rights prior to decree: and as pointed in Basroorvittil Bhandari v. Ramachandra (1), such an assignment will not give the 5th plaintiff any right to execute the decree subsequently obtained: the fact that in Basroorvittil Bhandari v. Ramachandra (1), the assignee did not apply to be made a party prior to decree can make no difference in the application of the principle enunciated in that decision. We must reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the application, without prejudice to his right to apply

The principle applicable to the calculation of the time of one month allowed by Order XLI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, is that it shall be taken to extend upto and including the day before the corresponding date of the next month and there is no authority for any special rule as regards February—

Therefore, a memorandum of objections presented

Mr. A. Viswanadham for Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Purushotham Naidu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point taken in this case is that as the appeal was out of time and thrown out by the Judge without trial, it was not competent for him to proceed to try the memorandum of cross-objections. It is quite unnecessary to decide that general question in this case, because what happened in this case was that in error the Court admitted the appeal as having been presented in time, and notice was given of it to the respondent and he filed the memorandum of cross-objections within thirty days of the service of the notice upon him. It was subsequently found out that this was a mistake; having been made, the respondent was entitled to take advantage of it, and he took it.
Therefore his memorandum which was filed within the time laid down by the Code of Civil Procedure must be heard. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Custom and general law—Mitakshara—Impartibility, custom of—Female's right to succession—Rule of primogeniture—Joint family—Separation.

Where a custom is proved to exist, it supersedes general law, which, however, still regulates all outside the custom. [p. 836, col. 2.]

There is no inconsistency between a custom of impartibility and the right of females to inherit, and, therefore, the general law must prevail unless it be proved that the custom extends to the exclusion of females. [p. 837, col. 1.]

Ram Nundun Singh v. Maharani Janki Kcer, 29 I. A. 178 at p. 194; 29 C. 528; 7 C. W. N. 57, approved.

The widow of the last holder of an impartible estate which descends by the rule of primogeniture is not excluded from the succession if her husband was in fact separated and died without issue male, and if no custom which would exclude her from succession is proved. [p. 836, col. 2.]

In a Mitakshara family an ancestral impartible estate, on the death of the sole holder thereof, devolved, according to the family custom of primogeniture, on the elder of his two sons, the younger becoming entitled to maintenance. Subsequently, the elder brother granted to the younger brother a mokarari pattah of a part of the estate for his and his descendants' maintenance. It was proved that thereafter the younger brother built a new house outside the family dwelling, removed his family there and lived there separately from his elder brother and his family, that the younger brother constructed a wall between his house and the family dwelling, that he established in his new house a separate thakurbari and tulsi pinda and raised money on the mortgage of property granted to him and spent it on the marriage of his son's daughter, and that after the younger brother's death his son stated on oath in a criminal case that he was separate from the elder brother's branch of the family:

Held, that at the time of the death of the elder brother's only son who succeeded to the said estate the younger brother and his only son were separate from the elder brother and his son, and that the elder brother's son having died without male issue his widow was entitled to succeed to the impartible estate in question in preference to the younger brother's son. [p. 838, col. 2.]

Consolidated appeals from a judgment and decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated January 7th, 1910, reversing those of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, dated January 22nd, 1909.

FACTS are as follows:—

The following pedigree will show the relationship of the parties:

The taluk of Telwa, an impartible estate, succession to which was governed by the rule of primogeniture descended on Bhairu Narain Singh who died in 1863 leaving two sons, Ranjit and Bhupat. The family was a joint and undivided one, governed by the Mitakshara School of the Hindu Law, but the succession to the estate was regulated by a custom of the family according to which the eldest son of the last holder succeeded to the gadi as sole owner, his other sons being entitled to receive khorphosh or maintenance. Ranjit accordingly succeeded to the gadi and Bhupat received maintenance. In 1879 Ranjit executed a mokarari pattah in favour of his brother, Bhupat, whereby he assigned to him two mouzahs and four bighas of kamat land in another mouzah as a khorphosh grant for his maintenance. By the terms of the said mokarari, it was not alienable by the grantee; but in breach thereof Bhupat did in fact execute mortgages from time to time to raise money for his needs. In 1897 Ranjit died, leaving a widow Gyan Kumari and an infant son Ram Narain him surviving. She was appointed guardian of her minor son, who succeeded to the gadi as Thakur according to the custom. In 1902

TARA KUMARI v. CHATURBHUJ NARAYAN SINGH.

Bhupat Narain died leaving a son, Chaturbhuj Narain, who had four sons, all of whom were respondents. In 1903 Ram Narain died while still a minor, leaving no issue, but only a widow, Tara Kumari. All the Revenue Courts refused to admit her claim and entered Chaturbhuj's name in the Revenue Registers as heir to the estate. In order to pay off the debts incurred by Ranjit Narain, Tara Kumari sold a half share of the Taluk Telwa to Maharaja Ravaneshwar Singh for Rs. 50,000 on September 16, 1906. The Maharaja paid off the debts. On August 19, 1907, Tara Kumari and the Maharaja instituted the suit against the respondents for the recovery of the estate from the respondents. The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the appellants, but on appeal to the High Court the judgment of the lower Court was reversed and her and the Maharaja's claims were disallowed. They thereupon obtained a certificate to appeal to His Majesty in Council in due course and subsequently both appeals were consolidated.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., M. P. (with him Mr. Lowndes), for the Appellants, contended that the Subordinate Judge had held on facts that Bhupat and Ranjit had separated in food and estate. Bhupat had built a house separate from the family house, had a different thakurbari and tulsi pinda and had removed his family from the family house. He had built a wall separating both houses and borrowed money for the marriage of his grand-daughter. He had further deposed in a criminal case that he was separate. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge was good and should be upheld. The defence was a series of denials. They had not proved that by custom a female was excluded from succession. The estate was never joint. It went by custom of primogeniture. This custom was inconsistent with the property being joint. What the opposite party said was that inasmuch as the property was impartible, there could be no partition.

[MR. AMER ALI: Does not the decision in Katama Natchiar v. Rajah of Shivagunga (1) cover the point you argue?]

In Tekaet Doorga Pershad Singh v. Tekaetnee Doorga Kooeree (2) it was held that from the (1) 9 M. L. A. 539 at p. 547; 2 W. R. 31 (P. C.); 1 Suth. P. C. J. 520; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 25; 19 E. R. 843. (2) 20 W. R. 155, fact of an estate being impartible, it did not follow as a necessary consequence that no division or separation could be effected with respect to it, and that an ancestral impartible estate might be held separately after separation from other members of the family.

[LORD HALDANE: When does a family cease to be joint is the whole point; a separate idol does not suggest that the family is divided.]

Reference was made to Chintaman Singh v. Nowlukho Kowari (3); Bejai Bahadur Singh v. Bhupindar Bahadur Singh (4); Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochindra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Singh (5); Kali Krishna v. Raghunath Deb (6); Raja Rup Singh v. Rani Baisni (7) and Ram Nundun Singh v. Maharani Janki Koer (8).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Dunne, for the Respondents, contended that the presumption of law was that the family was joint.

[SIR ROBERT FINLAY: The estate has never been joint. It goes by custom of primogeniture. The custom was inconsistent with the property being joint.]

There could be no partition where the estate was impartible and the question was, how far the ordinary rule of succession was modified. Appellants had to establish that separation had taken place. The onus rested on them. They had to prove when the estate which was joint became separate. The impartible estate could devolve according to custom. Food and worship were immaterial.

The property given to Bhupat was only for maintenance and not by way of partition. Mokarari was not alienation in this case. The plaint did not say that there was anything in the nature of separation.

[LORD HALDANE: It is one of the cases in which one has to determine whether there was any partition with reference to all the circumstances. Even a deed will not be sufficient.]

TARA KUMARI v. CHATURBHUJ NARAYAN SINGH.

It would be extraordinary if he was to treat himself as a separate entity.

[LORD HOLDANE: The only question is whether they came to an arrangement for partition, which is a question of circumstantial evidence. If you find arrangement of some kind and separation in worship, food, etc., the presumption is that separation has taken place. The whole thing is of inference to be inferred from the whole circumstances.]

There was no co-parcenary between the eldest and minor members of a raj family having an impartible estate. One might have a thakurbari of his own if he were to live away from the family house.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are consolidated appeals. That in which Thakurani Tara Kumari is the appellant has arisen in a suit which was brought by her on the 19th August 1907 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr against Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh and his minor sons. In that suit Maharajah Sir Ravaneswar Pershad Singh was a pro forma defendant. The other appeal, in which Maharaja Sir Ravaneswar Pershad Singh is the appellant, has arisen in a suit which was brought by him on the 19th August 1907 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr against Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh and his minor sons. In the latter suit Thakurani Tara Kumari and others were pro forma defendants. In each suit the Subordinate Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiff in the suit. From each decree Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh and his minor sons appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which, by its decree in each appeal, reversed the decree to which the appeal related and dismissed the suit. From those decrees of the High Court these consolidated appeals have been brought.

The Thakurani is the widow of Thakur Ram Narayan Singh, who was a son of Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh, who was the elder of the two sons of Thakur Bhairo Narayan Singh. Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh was the son of Bhupat Narayan Singh, who was the younger son of Thakur Bhairo Narayan Singh. Thakur Ram Narayan Singh died without issue male. The immoveable property to which the suits relate is known as Taluka Telwa, otherwise Telwa gadi, in the District of Monghyr. Taluka Telwa is an ancestral impartible estate which, in his life-time, was held as his estate by Thakur Ram Narayan Singh, and had previously been held by his father Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh, and before him by his father Thakur Bhairo Narayan Singh. By the kulachar or family custom Taluka Telwa descends by the rule of primogeniture. The appellants allege that Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh, on the 14th September 1879, granted to his brother Bhupat Narayan Singh a mokurari patta (perpetual lease) of a part of Taluka Telwa for the maintenance of Bhupat Narayan Singh and his descendants, and that Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh and his brother Bhupat Narayan Singh separated and ceased to constitute a joint Hindu family; except in so far as the family custom applies, the law of the Mitakshara governed Thakur Bhairo Narayan Singh and his descendants. The Thakurani claims that she, as the widow of Thakur Ram Narayan Singh, who left no issue, succeeded to the estate on his death for a Hindu widow's interest. It is proved that after her husband's death she, in order to discharge debts which had been contracted by Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh, sold a moiety of Taluka Telwa to the Maharaja. In her suit the Thakurani claimed possession of one moiety of Taluka Telwa, as the widow of Thakur Ram Narayan Singh. The Maharaja in his suit claimed possession of the other moiety of Taluka Telwa as the vendee from the Thakurani. Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh is in possession, and he and his minor sons deny that Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh and

TARA KUMARI v. CHATURBHUI NARAYAN SINGH.

Bhupat Narayan Singh separated.

The written statement of Chaturbhui Narayan Singh in the suit of the Thakurani is not before this Board, but his written statement in the suit of the Maharaja is, having regard to the evidence and to the findings of the Courts below, instructive. In his written statement in the Maharaja's suit Chaturbhui Narayan Singh alleged:—

"4. That the said family is governed by the Benares School of Hindu Law, save and except that according to family custom the said ancestral zemindari descends according to the rule of primogeniture on the eldest male member of the eldest line and the junior members are entitled to maintenance and that females are in no way entitled to succeed to the said zemindari. The junior members, even after kharposhi or maintenance grants are made to them out of the joint property, are entitled to obtain the expenses of marriage, sraddh and other similar ceremonies and all other necessary expenses from the income of the said property in the hands of the holder of the said estate for the time being.

"5. That with reference to paragraph 3 this defendant states that Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh succeeded to the said estate on the death of his father in accordance with the family custom aforesaid and that the mokurari settlement referred to in the said paragraph was also made in accordance with the said custom and not otherwise. This defendant craves leave to refer to the original of the said mokurari deed for the terms thereof. This defendant wholly denies that either before or after the said mokurari settlement Bhupat Narayan Singh became separate from the said Ranjit Narayan Singh or that he was at any time separate in food, worship or estate from the said Ranjit Narayan Singh or that he lived in a house separately built. This defendant asserts that he and his father, the said Bhupat Narayan Singh, during his life-time were joint in food, worship and estate with the said Ranjit Narayan Singh and after his death with Thakur Ram Narayan Singh and that they never ceased to reside in the family dwelling house. This defendant continued joint in food, worship and estate with the said Thakur Ram Narayan Singh until the latter's death and thereafter with the defendant No. 6, until shortly before the commencement of the registration proceedings, when disputes and disagreements arose. The allegations to the contrary in paragraph 3 of the plaint are wholly false.

"6. That assuming, though by no means admitting, that Bhupat Narayan Singh and this defendant became separate from Thakur Ranjit Singh in the year 1287 F. S., and since then he and this defendant were separate in mess and business and lived in a separate house, as has been falsely alleged in the plaint, this defendant submits that nevertheless the impartible estate Taluka Telwa, continued to remain joint family property as before, as it never was nor could be the subject of partition and the defendant No. 1, therefore, became solely entitled to it under the family custom on the death of Thakur Ram Narayan Singh, in preference to his widow."

The "defendant No. 1" mentioned in the written statement is Chaturbhui Narayan Singh, and the "defendant No. 6" is the Thakurani, who, as has been already stated, was a pro forma defendant in the suit of the Maharaja. So far as is now material, the defence of Chaturbhui Narayan Singh, as disclosed by his written statement, was that females were by the family custom excluded from a succession to the impartible estate and that the joint family had not separated.

No custom excluding the widow of a sonless and separated holder of the impartible estate of Taluka Telwa from the succession to the estate for a Hindu widow's interest has been proved, and it is well decided law that the widow of the last holder of an impartible estate which descends by the rule of primogeniture is not excluded from the succession if her husband was in fact separated and died without issue male, and if no custom which would exclude her from the succession is proved. It was held by this Board in Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beerchunder Thakoor (12) that where a custom is proved to exist it supersedes the general law, which, however, still regulates all outside the custom. In Ram Nundun Singh v. (12) 12 M. I. A. 523; 12 W. R. (P. C.) 21; 3 B. L. R. (P. C.) 13; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 243; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 543; 20 E. R. 436.

TARA KUMARI v. CHATURBHUJ NARAYAN SINGH.

Maharani Janki Koer (8), this Board held that:—

"There is no inconsistency between a custom of impartibility and the right of females to inherit, as may be illustrated by the well-known Katama Natchiar's case(1), and, therefore, the general law must prevail unless it be proved that the custom extends to the exclusion of females."

Consequently the only issue in these suits which is now material is one of fact, namely, the issue as to whether Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh and Bhupat Narayan Singh separated.

The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh, being displeased with his brother Bhupat Narayan Singh because the latter kept women, separated from him. It was found as a fact by the Subordinate Judge that Bhupat Narayan Singh built a pucca house about a russi (120 feet) to the westward of the family house, established a tulsi pinda there, and removed his family to his pucca house and lived there separately from Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh. As a fact Thakur Bhupat Narayan Singh built a wall between his pucca house and the family house of Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh and established a separate thakurbari in his house. The houses were quite separate houses, as was found by the Subordinate Judge on the evidence.

A daughter of Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh was married after Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh had in 1879 granted the mokurari pattah to Bhupat Narayan Singh. Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh attempted to prove that Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh defrayed the expenses of that marriage. The Subordinate Judge, however, found on incontestable evidence that the expenses of the marriage were defrayed by Bhupat Narayan Singh and not by Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh. As a matter of fact, Bhupat Narayan Singh borrowed Rs. 689-2-6 for the expenses of that marriage, and on the 27th June 1897 gave to Shir Lal Modi and Amir Modi a mortgage of lands which he held under the mokurari pattah to secure the repayment to them of, amongst other moneys, that sum of Rs. 689-2-6, which was stated in the mortgage-deed to have been borrowed by him from them for performing the marriage of my own granddaughter, i.e., the daughter of my son, Baba Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh."

On the 27th April 1905 Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh, on his examination in a criminal case which apparently related to the removal of some timber, stated, "I am separate from the Thakur of Telwa."

On a careful review of all the evidence the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that Bhupat Narayan Singh and his son Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh were separate from Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh and his son Thakur Ram Narayan Singh.

The learned Judges of the High Court, whilst accepting as correct the findings of facts of the Subordinate Judge on which he had come to the conclusion that there had been a complete separation between Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh and his brother Bhupat Narayan Singh, came to the conclusion that it was not proved that there was a separation in intention and in fact. As it is difficult to understand the reasoning of the learned Judges of the High Court it is better to give the following extracts from their joint judgment. They say:—

"It is the case common to both sides that Bhupat Narain was a man of licentious habits and that he made himself a nuisance to his brother Ranjit Narain and created a scandal by introducing his mistresses into the family dwelling house. It was in consequence of this that Ranjit Narain executed the maintenance grant in his favour in 1287 to enable him to start a separate establishment. There can be no doubt that, after receipt of the grant, Bhupat Narain built himself a new house outside the old family dwelling and that in course of time a thakurbari and a tulsi pinda were established in that house and that a wall of separation between his house and the family house was constructed. It seems to be also beyond doubt that after receipt of the grant Bhupat Narain raised money by mortgages on the property leased to him and spent it on the marriage of members of his family and on their maintenance. Still are not all these acts such as might have been expected on the part of a member of the family who had received a grant for his maintenance? Or must they be accepted as incontestable proof of an intention to separate from Ranjit Narain from the time of the grant and of a separation in fact from that time?

"It has not been contended before us, nor indeed could the contention be accepted as a sound one, that a separation in estate and from the joint family must follow as a necessary consequence from the receipt of a maintenance grant.

"The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted these facts coupled with the admitted separation in food as sufficient proof that from the date of the maintenance grant, Ranjit Narain and Bhupat separated and ceased to be members of a joint Hindu family. We have given our careful consideration to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and also to the evidence and the arguments of the learned Pleader and Counsel which have been advanced before us and even though we accept the findings of the Subordinate Judge, we are unable to agree in his conclusion that the plaintiffs have proved that there was a separation in intention or in fact.

"The fact that after the grant of the mokurari lease for maintenance Bhupat Narain lived in a separate house alongside his family homestead, that he and his branch of the family were afterwards separate in food and possibly in worship and that he paid the expenses of his family out of the profits of the property granted to him for maintenance, by borrowing money on mortgages on that property, do not appear to us in this case to be sufficient to prove that there was a complete separation between Bhupat Narain and Ranjit Narain, by which Bhupat sacrificed his expectancy to succeed to the family property on the failure of nearer male heirs of Ranjit Narain."

In the opinion of their Lordships, the evidence clearly proved that there had been complete separation between Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh and his brother Bhupat Narayan Singh in worship, in food and in estate, and they find that there had been complete separation.

Their Lordships infer from the extracts which they have quoted from the judgment of the learned Judges of the High Court that those Judges considered that there could have been no complete separation of the joint family, as the impartible estate of Taluka Telwa had not been partitioned between Thakur Ranjit Narain Singh and his brother Bhupat Narayan Singh. Those learned Judges overlooked the fact that Bhupat Narayan Singh and his son had no co-parcenary rights in the impartible estate, and no rights in that estate which entitled them or either of them to a partition of impartible estate. They could not have prevented Thakur Ranjit Narain Singh from alienating that impartible estate in such a way as to determine any contingent interest they had in it under the custom. Their contingent interest under the custom was liable to be defeated by an alienation of the estate by Thakur Ranjit Narayan Singh even if the family had remained joint, and as the family ceased to be a joint Hindu family the ordinary Hindu Law of the Mitakshara gave to the Thakurani her widow's interest in the impartible estate in priority to the contingent interest of Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh under the custom. The Thakurani sold a moiety of the impartible estate to the Maharaja, and as there was valid necessity for that sale she conveyed a good title to the Maharaja.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals should be allowed, that the decrees of the High Court should be set aside with costs and the decrees of the Subordinate Judge should be restored.

The respondents, Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh and his four minor sons, must pay the costs of the appeals.

JUDGMENT.—It is very difficult to gather from the order of the District Judge under what clause of the sub-section 2 of section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the appellant was convicted. The words "realizing his property and distributing the proceeds among his creditors" occurring in the District Judge's order seem to show that sub-section (1), and not sub-section (2), was in the mind of the District Judge.

As pointed out in Harihar Singh v. Moheshwar Prashad (1) (Jenkins, C. J., and N. A. Chatterjea, J.), proceedings under section 43 of the Insolvency Act are in the nature of criminal proceedings and hence there should be a definite charge, a finding and a conviction as a foundation for the sentence.

We set aside the District Judge's order and direct the District Court to re-hear the case to pass fresh orders after framing a definite charge using the words of section 43 in that charge, as far as possible and mentioning briefly the alleged facts on which the charge is based.

Order set aside.

Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—That the late Jawahar Singh gifted the land in dispute to Lal Singh alias Lal Din, his son—whether legitimate or illegitimate, matters not for present purposes, is a fact duly attested by the Naib Tahsildar on 22nd March 1914 and in pursuance of that attestation a mutation order ought to have been sanctioned at the time. Owing, however, to the machinations of a patwari no action was taken until Jawahar Singh died and the case was then brought up afresh as one involving a mutation of inheritance.

The action seriously prejudiced Lal Singh's position and has led to the discussion in the subsequent mutation proceedings of intricate questions of religion and Customary Law with which a mutation officer is not concerned. I see no reason why mutation should not now be effected in accordance with the gift, the actuality of which transaction is amply attested. The reversioners may sue in the Courts to have the gifts set aside as invalid, but until in such a suit they succeed in proving its invalidity the transaction must be treated by mutation officers as a valid one. I set aside the order of the Collector and restore that of M. Mangal Singh, Assistant Collector, in Lal Singh's favour, except that the mutation should be treated as one of gift and not of inheritance.

THE ASIATIC STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY OF CALCUTTA—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Common carrier—Action for non-delivery—Prayer for goods consigned or else their value—No allegation of possession of carrier—No suit for specific property lost—Suit for compensation for non-delivery—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 31, 49, 105—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 31—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 11.

Where in an action against a common carrier for non-delivery of a plank consigned to him for carriage, the prayer in the plaint asked for plank and damages for its detention or in the alternative its value together with interest thereon and there was no allegation in the plaint that the defendant was in possession of the plank in question:

Held, that the suit could not be treated as one for the return of specific moveable property lost, under section 11 of the Specific Relief Act, but only as one for compensation for non-delivery of goods. [p. 844, col. 1.]

Article 31 of the Limitation Act, 1908, applies to a claim by a consignor against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of goods consigned. [p. 844, col. 1.]

In order to entitle a person to obtain delivery of specific moveable property by suit and to enforce the decrees obtained by the stringent methods provided in Order XXI, rule 31, Civil Procedure Code, it is necessary that he should allege and prove facts which entitle him to compel the delivery of the specific moveable under the provisions of section 11 of the Specific Relief Act. [p. 844, col. 1.]

The effect of the amendment of Article 31 of the Limitation Act, 1877, is to make it applicable to a claim against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of goods irrespective of the question whether the suit was laid in contract or in tort. [p. 844, col. 2.]

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Tyabji, dated the 26th of March 1914, in Civil Revision Petition No. 568 of 1913, reported in 24 Ind. Cas. 676, presented against that of the Court of the principal District Munsif of Masulipatam in Small Cause Suit No. 1257 of 1912.

This appeal coming on for hearing the Court (Spencer and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.) made on 18th January 1915 the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

SPENCER, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver, but I regret that I have not been able to come to the same conclusion at which he has arrived.

It is contended that the suit having been brought for the delivery of specific moveable property, viz., a plank, or for its value, the plaintiff had three years within which to file his suit under Article 49 of the Limitation Act.

In support of this contention the decision in Murugesu Mudali v. Jotharam Davy (1) is cited.

That was a suit against purchasers at a Court auction to make them restore the goods purchased or their value as compensation.

The present is essentially a suit against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of goods, and it has been held in Haji Ajam Goolam Hoosein v. Bombay and Persia Steam Navigation Company (2) and in Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company v. Ganpat Rai (3) that the Article applicable to such suits is Article 31, or if the carrier loses or injures the goods, then Article 30 [Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company v. Raisett Chandmull (4)], the period of limitation under either of these

JALDU VENKATASUBBA RAO v. ASIATIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO.

Articles in the present Limitation Act being one year.

In British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Hajee Mahomed Esack and Company (5), it was thought that, while Article 30 would apply to suits for compensation for loss or damages to goods carried, Article 115 which allows three years' time for suing would apply to suits of breach of contracts to deliver, but that decision was prior to the enactment of Act X of 1899, section 3 of which inserted the words 'non-delivery of or' in Article 31. It is not now argued before us that Article 115 applies. In Danmull v. British India Steam Navigation Company (6) which was also prior to Act X of 1899 the defendants denied that the plaintiff had entrusted them with the missing goods. It was the case of neither party that the goods had been lost. Mohan Singh Chauhan v. Henry Conder (7) was another case of non-delivery of goods prior to the enactment of 1899.

It may be that, when the words 'non-delivery of or' were inserted in this Article, the grouping of the Articles under the heads of suits upon contracts and suits upon torts was not heeded for convenience' sake, seeing that non-delivery by a common carrier is first and foremost a tort as observed by Garth, C. J., in Moothora Kant Shaw v. India General Steam Navigation Company (8), though an action against a common carrier may be founded either on contract or on tort (vide Bullen and Leake on Pleading; 6th Edition, page 139). The division between suits on torts and suits on contracts is not strictly observed in the schedule, for Articles 48 and 49 include cases of tort, and they are after Article 36.

It seems to me that the Legislature intended to provide exceptionally for the case of carriers on account of the difficulty of investigating and settling claims preferred against them after a long lapse of time in respect of a few articles out of the quantity of goods that are constantly passing through their hands.

Now, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to extend the period of limitation by the dodge of demanding that the very goods themselves should be delivered to him, when the defendants have stated in a letter to him [see Exhibit A (1)] that, owing to the long delay caused by the plaintiff in not producing the invoice in support of his bill, they find it difficult to check the shortage and have on that account pleaded non-liability to account to him. The mere allegation in the plaint that there was non-delivery implies a breach of the contract to carry, although the facts may disclose a tort also on the part of the carrier, but the date within which the plaintiff must file his suit will not depend on the defence set up in written statement. So plaintiff cannot run the risk of waiting till he knows what the defence will be, but must come to Court within the period allowed by the Legislature for claims based on non-delivery.

It was pointed out in Murugesu Mudali v. Jotharam Davy (1) that the right to sue for the recovery of specific moveable property is governed by sections 10 and 11 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, and that an injustice would be likely to result from giving a decree for the recovery of the goods in specie, as such a decree might be enforced by attachment of the judgment-debtor's property and the imprisonment of his person while it might be impossible for him to obey the decree without the assistance of the persons in possession of the goods. The same remarks might be made as to carriers of goods who are unable to trace missing goods entrusted to them for delivery.

In the present case the only decree that the plaintiff could have obtained upon the pleadings, if he had sued in time, would have been a decree that the defendants should pay him compensation for non-delivery of the plank in question. Article 48 or 49 cannot be applied, since under column 3 of the Schedule time has not begun to run and thus there is no cause of action for a suit under either of these Articles.

I consider, therefore, that the learned Judge was right in holding that the suit fell under Article 31 of the Limitation Act and that this Letters Patent Appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I have come to a different conclusion. The facts are these;

JALDU VENKATASUBBA RAO v. ASIATIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO.

61 planks of teak wood were consigned at Moulmein in May 1909 through the defendant Company for delivery to the plaintiff at Masulipatam. The defendants delivered only 60 planks on the 28th August 1909. This suit is brought on the 16th June 1912 for the recovery of the one plank of wood undelivered (the Court was closed from the 5th May to the 16th June). The prayer in the plaint is in these terms:

(a) "directing the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff the plank worth Rs. 60-15-0, as per the copy of the bill filed herewith, as also Rs. 21-12-0 being the loss of interest,

(b) "or else directing the defendant to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 60-15-0, the value of the teak plank, Rs. 21-12-0 for interest, in all Rs. 82-11-0 together with subsequent interest." The defendants pleaded the bar of limitation.

The District Munsif held that Article 31 of the Limitation Act applied and that as the suit was brought more than a year after the date on which the plank should have been delivered, he decided that the claim was barred by limitation. Mr. Justice Tyabji on revision agreed with this view. This Letters Patent Appeal is against that decision.

Article 31 is among a group of Articles dealing with compensation. The word compensation used in Articles 17 and 18 has not the same meaning as in the subsequent Articles, but from Articles 19 to 31 the term is used to denote a claim for damages; and in almost all the cases the cause of action is in tort. As was pointed out by Garth, C. J., in Moothora Kant Shaw v. India General Steam Navigation Company (8) the ordinary liability of a common carrier is founded on custom, and "a common carrier is and always has been liable to be sued for any breach of this common law duty in an action of tort." This accounts for the inclusion of carriers in the category of cases relating to the award of compensation for torts. It was pointed out in British India Steam Navigation Company v. Hajee Mahomed Esack and Company (5) that the position of Article 31 suggests that it was intended to cover cases of malfeasance, misfeasance and non-feasance independent of contract. Garth, C. J., in Danmull v. British India Steam Navigation Company (6), points out that the shorter period of limitation provided by the Article will not govern breaches of contract. Wilson, J., takes the same view. The fact that other cases relating to compensation from tortious acts are provided with a period of two years' limitation in subsequent Articles only shows that in the cases of carriers and in the special cases referred to till Article 31 is reached, the Legislature wanted the grievances to be earlier dealt with. I was at first inclined to think that cases of compensation for breaches of contract would come under Article 31. On further consideration I think that the correct view is to hold that in order to affect Article 31 the claim must be founded only on tort. Article 36 is the residuary Article in cases of torts. Article 49 provides for cases of compensation arising from a breach of contract; and the residuary Article in regard to such matters is Article 115. Although it is not easy to give a logical explanation for the arrangement for the Articles in the Limitation Act, it seems clear from their grouping and from the position of the residuary Articles that compensation for torts is provided for separately from compensation for breaches of contract. I feel no hesitation, therefore, in holding that Article 31 does not relate to claims arising from contracts. It is true that the decisions to which I referred were passed before the Legislature amended Article 31 by inserting the words "or for non-delivery." But this amendment cannot enlarge its scope. The essential characteristic of the original Article which must attach to it even after the amendment is that it deals with a claim for damages arising from a tortious act. A claim against a common carrier is not always restricted to damages. A carrier may have the consigned article in his possession and yet refuse to deliver it. Such an article may have something more than a commercial value to the consignee. In such cases he is entitled to ask for its delivery. Article 31 cannot cover such cases. The carrier in addition to the common law liability pointed out by Garth, C. J., may incur contractual obligations. See observations in Moothora Kant Shaw v. India General Steam

JALDU VENKATASUBBA RAO V. ASIATIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO.

Navigation Company (8). The enforceability of such obligations will depend on considerations different from those relating to the award of damages. Although a decree for delivery of specific moveable property may by virtue of Order XX, rule 10, provide for the payment of its value in the alternative, the decree-holder can take steps for obtaining possession of the article itself. Mr. Chamier argued that as Article 31 is the only provision relating to carriers all cases against them are controlled by that Article. I am unable to agree with this contention. Suppose, (or instance, an honest carrier intimates to the consignee a year after the date fixed for its delivery that he is unable to trace it; Article 31 can give no relief in such cases. It would leave the consignee without any remedy. There are special provisions relating to the recovery of articles in specie; and unless the language of these Articles exclude claims against carriers, I see no reason for not applying them to the case of carriers as well. I am, therefore, of opinion that to the claim as laid Article 31 does not apply. In Haji Ajam Goolam Hoosein v. Bombay and Persia Steam Navigation Company (2) the suit was "for Rs. 750 as damages for the non-delivery of 35 out of 200 cases of oil." In Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company v. Ganpat Rai (3) also the claim was for damages. There was no relief for the delivery of the specific article in these cases and although to the Allahabad case, the latter portion of Article 49 seems applicable, the point does not seem to have been argued. I do not think these cases are decisive of the point we have to decide in this case.

I think the claim falls under Article 49. The language of the first part exactly covers this case. The view taken in Murugesu Mudali v. Jotharam Dary (1) is in accordance with this conclusion. If Article 49 does not apply, Article 115 will apply.

In Moothora Kant Shaw v. The India General Steam Navigation Company (8), already referred to by me, Garth, C. J., points out that "a carrier is liable to be sued in an action either of tort or contract, according to the convenience or advantage of the plaintiff," and he quotes Bullen and Leake in support of the position. In the forms of pleading given in that treatise, we have first of all statements of claims in contract; then come the statements of claims in tort; then follow forms for defence in actions of contract and afterwards similar forms for defence in actions in tort. These indicate that it is at the option of the consignee to sue in contract or in tort either for the specific article or for damages. In the present case the plaintiff has chosen to claim the article and he is entitled to choose that remedy.

By THE COURT.—Having regard to the importance of the question involved and to the difference of judicial opinion that exists, we think it is desirable that the question should be referred for the decision of a Full Bench upon the following points:—

(1) "Whether Article 31, 49 or 115 is applicable to a claim by a consignor against a carrier for the recovery of goods consigned to him or, in the alternative, their value and for interest upon the amount claimed as the value of the goods?"

(2) "Whether upon the pleadings, the suit should be treated as a suit for specific moveable property lost, or as a suit against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of goods?"

The appeal coming on for hearing as per above order, upon perusing the said Order of Reference and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. P. M. Srinivasa Aiyangar for Mr. P. Nagabhushanam for the Appellant and of Messrs. D. Chamier and K. Pandalai, instructed by Messrs. Partridge, Hignett and Sell, Attorneys, for the Respondent, the Court expressed the following OPINION.—Two questions have been referred to us; and it will be more convenient to deal with the second one first, "whether upon the pleadings this suit should be treated as a suit for specific moveable property lost, or as a suit against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of goods." If we look at the prayer of the plaint, which asks for the return of the plank and also for Rs. 21-12 being the loss of interest, it may be treated as a suit both for the return of the specific plank and for damages for its detention. But in order to entitle the plaintiff to obtain delivery of specific moveable property by suit and to enforce the decree so obtained by the stringent methods provided in Order XXI, rule 31, of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is necessary that he should allege and prove facts which entitle him to compel the delivery of the specific moveable under the provisions of section 11 of the Specific Relief Act, because unless he does so, he cannot have a decree for the return of the specific moveable property. There is no allegation in the plaint that the defendant is in possession of the plank in question and it is obvious from the correspondence that he is not. That being so, the case does not, in our opinion, come within clause (a) of section 11 of the Specific Relief Act; and it certainly does not come within clauses (b), (c) or (d). In so far then as the suit can be regarded as a suit for the return of the specific plank, the plaint discloses no cause of action, and the suit must be dismissed.

It may, however, as framed, be regarded as a suit for compensation for failure to deliver the plank in breach of the contract under the bill of lading. That brings us to the first question in the reference, "Whether Article 31, 49 or 115 is applicable to a claim by a consignor against a carrier for the recovery of goods consigned to him, or in the alternative their value, and for interest upon the amount claimed as the value of the goods." As the Limitation Act of 1877 originally stood, there was a good deal of authority for saying that Articles 30 and 31, which deal with suits against a carrier for compensation for losing or injuring goods and suits against a carrier for compensation for delay in delivering goods, did not apply. We need only refer to the decision of Sir Charles Turner, C. J., and another learned Judge in British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Hajee Mahomed Esack & Co. (5) and the other authorities cited in Dannull v. British India Steam Navigation Co. (6) and Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. v. Raisett Chandmull (4). This view proceeded largely upon the position of these Articles among a number of other Articles dealing with suits for damages for torts, and in his judgment in Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. v. Raisett

Chandmull (4) Mr. Justice Farran (as he then was) expressed the opinion that this was a rather fallacious test and that in these rulings the Courts had not given effect to the intention of the Legislature, but stated, having regard to the current of decisions, it was rather for the Legislature to make its meaning more clear if it had been misinterpreted than for the Court to run counter to the decisions of the other High Courts. This was in the year 1894 and acting as we cannot doubt on this suggestion, the Legislature in 1899 amended Article 31 by inserting the words "non-delivery of or," so as to make the Article run: "against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of, or delay in delivering goods." It seems to us that by this amendment the Legislature clearly indicated its intention that Article 31 should apply to a claim against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of goods, irrespective of the question whether the suit was laid in contract or in tort. Even so it may be, as pointed out by one of the learned Judges who have referred the case, that Article 31 only deals with claims for compensation, and that Article 49 applies when in a proper case a claim is made against a carrier for the return of a specific moveable which, as already pointed out, is not this case. In so far, however, as Article 49 applies to suits for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same," it is in any case inapplicable to the facts here, and even if it were applicable, its operation would be excluded by the provisions of the special Article 31 as amended, on the principle 'generalia specialibus non derogant.'

Our answer to these questions is that the suit must be regarded as a suit for compensation and as such it comes under Article 31.

This Letters Patent Appeal coming on for hearing on 7th of August 1915, after the expression of the opinion of the Full Bench, the Court (Spencer and Seshagiri Aiyar, J.J.) delivered the following

KANWAN—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT
versus

NATHU SINGH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 5 (1) (a), 5 (2) —Presumption not rebutted, effect of.

Where the presumption given in clause 5 (2) of the Punjab Tenancy Act, has not been rebutted, the plaintiff is entitled to occupancy rights under section 5 (1) (a).

Petition forwarded by the Commissioner of Amballa on 6th March 1915 for orders of the Financial Commissioner, with the recommendation that plaintiff-petitioner's suit may be decreed.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are that Nathu Singh, landlord, got a notice of ejectment as regards 5 bighas 9 biswas issued against Kanwan, a tenant. The tenant brought a suit to contest the notice of ejectment, on the ground that he was an occupancy tenant under section 5 (1) (a) of the Tenancy Act and was not liable to ejectment, as he had been holding the land for more than two generations and for a period of more than 20 years.

The landlord met the suit by saying that the tenant was not a tenant at all, as he was not an heir of the last owner in possession.

The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the last holder was a widow of the male holder, etc., and on appeal the learned Collector upheld the finding of the first Court. On revision the learned Commissioner forwarded the case for orders to the Financial Commissioner, with the recommendation that the revision may be accepted and that as Kanwan has shown that he is a tenant under section 5 (1) (a) that he may be declared to be a tenant under that section.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Appellant.
Lala Durga Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Commissioner's order of reference clearly shows that the lower Courts erred in not applying section 5 (2) of the Tenancy Act to the facts of the case. The presumption given by that clause has not been rebutted so that the plaintiff Kanwan must be held entitled to occupancy rights under section 5 (1) (a) in the 5 bighas 9 biswas to which the ejectment notice relates. I set aside the orders of the lower Courts and cancel the notice of ejectment and I declare that the plaintiff is entitled to occupancy rights as above explained. I decree costs to plaintiff in all Courts.

RESPONDENT.Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, cl. V (a), (b), (c) and (e)—Plot of land with cocoanut trees, whether a "garden" within the meaning of cl. V (e)—Question of fact—Revision—Case open to appeal—High Court, power of, to interfere.

In ascertaining the value of a piece of land on which cocoanut trees have been planted for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of a Court, the question whether it came under clause V (c) or clause V (e) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act is a question of fact to be determined on the evidence as to whether having regard to the position of the land and the number of trees thereon the plot of land can be said to be a garden. [p. 846, col. 2; p. 847, col. 1.]

Assessment is not the criterion in determining the question whether a land is garden or not. Assessed or unassessed it will fall under clause V (e) if it can be defined as a "garden". [p. 847, col. 1.]

A few isolated trees on a piece of land will not make it a garden, but where a number of trees are planted on a particular piece of land which is well-defined and can be marked off from the rest of the land, that particular plot may be treated as a garden if the land is used for the cultivation of flowers, fruits or vegetables. [p. 847, col. 1.]

Audathodan Moidin v. Pullambath Mamally, 12 M. 301, explained.

While the High Court, will not generally interfere in revision where an equally efficacious remedy is open to the party by way of appeal it will do so where it would not be possible to put the parties in the same position in appeal as they would have been if the irregularities had been set right in the lower Court by timely interference. Tirupathur in Original Suit No. 94 of 1914, dated the 24th March 1915.

Mr. N. S. Narasimhachari, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. R. Subramania Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition filed under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and section 15 of the Charter Act to revise the order of the District Munsif of Tirupathur, dated the 24th April 1915, wherein he held that the property in dispute fell under section 7, clause V (b), of the Court Fees Act (Act VII of 1870) and that the suit was rightly valued and was within the pecuniary limits of his jurisdiction.

The plaintiff, claiming to be the purchaser of the properties mentioned in the plaint for Rs. 7,000, sued for a declaration of title, for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with his enjoyment of the plaint properties and for possession of the properties if the Court was of opinion that the plaintiff was not in possession. The plaintiff valued the suit at Rs. 1,000, the details of the valuation being Rs. 5 for the injunction asked for, Rs. 364-11-0 for possession, Rs. 115 value of three wells, Rs. 500 value of cocoanut trees and Rs. 27 value of plantain trees. The defendants objected to the valuation and inter alia stated that the value of the cocoanut tope was Rs. 4,500. The contention for the defendants, so far as it is material for the purpose of this petition, is that part of the property claimed is a cocoanut garden on which there are several cocoanut trees (plaintiff admitting at least 500) and that the case falls under section 7, clause V (e), which provides that where the subject-matter is a house or garden the fee is payable on its market value. The District Munsif was of opinion that, even assuming there was a cocoanut garden on the property, it did not fall within the definition of a "garden" in section 7, clause V (e), but that it should be treated as assessed land.

Under the Suits Valuation Act, VII of 1887, the value for purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fees is the same, and the point for determination is whether clause V (c) of section 7 is to be applied or clause V (e) of the Court Fees Act. The District Munsif seems to treat the question as a dry question of law, but I think that this is a question of fact to be determined on the evidence in each case. A garden has been defined in Murray's Dictionary as "an enclosed piece of ground devoted to the cultivation of flowers, fruits or vegetables" and there can be little doubt that cocoanuts are edible fruits and that they are largely used for culinary purposes in this country. If the trees stand on a well-defined portion of the property which is marked off from the rest, I do not see why the land on which the trees stand should not be a cocoanut garden. The District Munsif was of opinion that the Full Bench decision of this Court in Audathodan Moidin v. Pullambath Mamally (1) decided that the word "garden" is to be taken as meaning ornamental, pleasure or vegetable garden: but I do not think that the District Munsif is right in his view. The question in the above case related to the valuation of a paramba on which there were cocoanut trees. The land (being in Malabar) was not assessed and all that their Lordships decided was that the case fell either under clause V (c) or clause V (e) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act, according as the paramba was of a description that would come under the definition of a garden or not. The following observations of their Lordships at page 304 make this clear: "In fact in Malabar a tree tax is substituted for the land assessment, and whether or not a paramba is assessed depends on the nature of the trees grown therein. It is, therefore, evident that parambas should either be classed as lands paying no revenue or as gardens. The word 'garden' is nowhere defined in Act VII of 1870 but from its occurring in connection with the word 'houses', we are of opinion that the term refers primarily to a garden in the English sense,—ornamental or pleasure or vegetable, and that parambas do not ordinarily come under that category. We do not, however, wish it to be understood that in no case should a paramba be treated as a garden for the purpose of the Court Fees Act. Whether or not the paramba sued for is to be regarded as a garden or as land which pays no revenue, is a question of fact which must be decided in each case." I think the proper course that the District Munsif should have taken was to have called for evidence as to whether, having regard to the position of the land on which stand the stand and the number of trees thereon, the plot of land can be said to be a 'garden' or not. A few isolated trees on a piece of land will not make it a garden: but where a number of trees are planted on a particular piece of land which is well defined and can be marked off from the rest of the land, it is difficult to see why that particular plot should not be treated as a garden if the land is used for the cultivation of flowers, fruits or vegetables.

It has been argued by the respondent's Vakil that, if the case falls under clause V (a), (b) or (c), the market value is no test for determining the Court fees payable even though the property may fall under the definition of "garden" and that clause V (e) applies only where clause V (a) (b) and (c) cannot apply. I am unable to follow this argument, for a garden must be situated on some land or other and all land must be assessed or unassessed. If, therefore, assessment was the criterion, clause V (e) is perfectly unnecessary. In my opinion the proper construction of the section is that whether the land is assessed or unassessed it will fall under clause V (e) if it can be defined as a "garden".

There is very little authority directly in point. The only case in point, Bhug Bhari v. Jawahir Singh (2), is in favour of the view I have taken.

A preliminary objection was taken that no revision lay, as the petitioner would have the right of appeal against the decree if it went against him. Cases have been quoted on both sides in some of which the High Court declined to interfere with interlocutory orders and in some of which the High Court did so. For the petitioner reference has been made to Veerabadran Chetty v. Nataraja Desikar (3), Somasundaram Chettiar v. Manicka Vasaka Desika Anana Sammanda Pandara Sannidi (4), Nagaraja Pillai v. Vythinatha Iyer (5), Subbrumana Pattar v. Narayana Pattar (6), Venkatachallam Pattar v. Parasu

Pattar (7) and Yatindra Nath v. Hari Charan (8).

For the respondents reference has been made to In re Nizam of Hyderabad (9), Ramamurthi v. Kunchuvorthy Venkata Sita Ramachandra Row Garu (10), Venkata Subbiah v. Seshachalam (11), Chidambaram Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty (12), Jagannatha Mudaliar v. Vathiyar Appasawmy (13), Rudrappa v. Narsing Rao (14) and A. Gaeble v. Ramayi Animal (15).

It is difficult to reconcile all the observations made by the learned Judges who took part in the cases above referred to. In case of discretionary powers vested in Court, I do not think any hard and fast rule can be laid down so as to fetter that discretion in advance in all cases that may arise in future. The observation of Jenkins, C. J., in Hume v. Poresch Chunder Ghose (16), that discretion given in the widest terms by the Legislature ought not to be crystallised or restricted by a series of cases but should remain "free and untrammelled, to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case" may well be borne in mind. It seems to me that the power of superintendence and the powers given by section 115 were intended to give the High Court jurisdiction to see that the proceedings before the lower Courts were properly conducted, and I see no reason why the High Court should refuse to set right matters if by doing so it would save unnecessary expense or delay or a multiplicity of proceedings. The correct rule, in my opinion, seems to be that while Courts will not generally interfere in revision where an equally efficacious remedy is open to the party by way of appeal, it will do so where it would not be possible to put the parties in the same position in appeal as they would have been if the irregularities had been set right in the lower Court by timely interference.

Having regard to the provisions of the Suits Valuation Act, it seems to me that the relief which the petitioner will get in appeal would not be co-extensive with the relief which he will get now. There can be little doubt that a party is entitled, as a matter of right, to have a suit tried before a Court which has got pecuniary jurisdiction to try it and that, where a Court on an erroneous view of the law proceeds to exercise a jurisdiction which it does not possess, there is nothing to prevent the party from immediately taking such steps as the law allows to set aside the order of the lower Court. If, however, he chooses to wait until the trial is over and to take the chance of a decision in his favour, section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act steps in to prevent him from getting the proceedings of the lower Court set aside simply on the ground of error as to jurisdiction, unless he can show that he is prejudicially affected in the disposal of the suit on its merits. The fact that a restricted right is given to the party after judgment had been pronounced is no reason for depriving him of his right to take immediate steps and have his suit tried by a Court which, in law, has pecuniary jurisdiction.

The plaintiff admits in his plaint that he purchased the property for Rs. 7,000 and he values the relief at Rs. 1,000. The District Munsif, without taking any evidence on the objections of the defendants and without determining whether the suit is one which would fall within his jurisdiction, has, in my opinion, erroneously treated the question as a dry question of law and held that he has jurisdiction over the subject-matter in dispute.

Under these circumstances I think that this is a fit case for the High Court to interfere in revision and to direct at the early stage of the suit that the provisions of law as to jurisdiction are satisfied. I set aside the order of the lower Court and direct the District Munsif to dispose of the objections of the defendants as to jurisdiction according to law in the light of the observations above made. Costs of this petition will abide and follow the result.

Punjab Tenancy (Act XVI of 1887), ss. 70, 70 (2), 74, 84 (5)—Notice of ejectment—Landlord and tenant—Compensation for improvement—Court-fee for the amount claimed—Revision.

Courts have no power to ask a tenant to pay Court-fee for improvements claimed by him, but are bound to determine the amount in a suit to contest a notice of ejectment.

A finding on merits cannot be disturbed in revision.

It is a material irregularity justifying revision not to determine the question of compensation in pursuance of section 70 (2) of the Punjab Tenancy Act.

Petition from the order of the Commissioner, Multan, dated 3rd December 1913, upholding that of the Collector, Muzafargarh, ejecting the plaintiff.

Mr. Akbur Umar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Nehal Chand Mehra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I see no reason for interference by way of revision as regards the findings on the merits, but it is a material irregularity justifying revision not to determine the question of compensation in pursuance of section 70 (2) of the Tenancy Act. The first Court has evaded its obligations in this matter on the ground that the tenant failed to pay an enhanced Court-fee calculated on the amount which he claimed as compensation. I know of no provision of law requiring a Court-fee to be paid in respect of compensation so claimed, and the Court was wrong in evading the issue on that ground. Accordingly under section 84 (5) of the Tenancy Act I now direct that the Assistant Collector shall now under section 70 or 74, Tenancy Act, as the case may be, determine the amount of compensation due from defendants to plaintiff.

Decree, suit to set aside, maintainability of—Jurisdiction, method of exercise of, challenge of—Denial of jurisdiction—Fraud.

It is not open to suitors, who have exhausted the remedies competent to them, and after final decree has been obtained against them, to institute a fresh suit, or series of suits, the object of which is to declare that a decree, competently and with adequate jurisdiction obtained therein, is not applicable to them, although they are named in that decree. [p. 852, col. 1.]

A challenge of the method of the exercise of the jurisdiction of a Court can never in law justify a denial of the existence of such jurisdiction. [p. 852, col. 2.]

A suit for the rescission and destruction of a former decree of a competent Court can be obtained on the ground of fraud "practised on the Courts," but where fraud has been eliminated, the suit is a mere colour for a fresh suit on matters already competently settled by law. Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Allahabad High Court, dated February 23rd, 1911, reversing those of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur, dated August 17th, 1909.

FACTS.—One Prag Dat Pande and his two sons, Rajwant and Bhagwant, and their sons constituted a joint Hindu family. Prag Dat was the manager of the property and in 1884 executed a deed of mortgage over the joint property in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the respondents. In 1897 the mortgagee instituted a suit against all the members of the joint family. This suit was heard ex parte and a decree was given against all on April 30, 1897 and was affirmed by the High Court in 1900. Prag Dat applied under section 108 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 to have the decree set aside, but his application was rejected and the High Court upheld the rejection. Prag Dat then brought a suit to set aside the decree of April 1897 on the ground of fraud, but he lost the day both in the lower Court as well as in the High Court. In 1901 Bhagwant and his two sons made an application under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 to have the decree of April 30, 1897, set aside. This application was granted. Prag Dat applied to the Court for permission to defend the suit on his own behalf, but this was not granted to him and the High Court upheld the order of the lower Court. The case proceeded against Bhagwant and his sons only and on September 22, 1902, a decree was passed against them and others as well as against the mortgaged property under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. This was affirmed by the High Court in 1905. In 1906 an application was made for an order to make the decree of September 1902 absolute. To this Prag Dat, Rajwant and his sons objected on the ground that the decree was made against them while they were not parties to the suit. The Subordinate Judge having disallowed their objection an appeal was unsuccessfully preferred to the High Court. They then brought a fresh suit in 1909 to have the decree of September 1902 set aside. The Subordinate Judge decided in their favour, but on appeal to the High Court his decision was reversed. An appeal was then preferred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in due course.

Mr. Loundes, for the Appellants, contended that neither Prag Dat nor the appellants were parties to the re-trial of the mortgage suit and the Court by which the same was heard had no jurisdiction upon such re-trial to pass any decree against them. The decree of 1897 was never set aside and in consequence the decree of 1902, a second decree for the same cause of action, could not stand. There could not be two decrees in respect of the same cause of action against the same person. A binding decree was passed against Prag Dat and the appellants on April 30, 1897, an order absolute for sale of the mortgage property was made on September 22, 1900, and, therefore, it was not competent to any Court to pass a second decree against them in respect of the same subject-matter. Though the second decree was for a larger sum than the first decree there could be no question of merger. How could the decrees merge into each other when they related to different sums and to different parties? Besides the decree of September 1902 was a preliminary decree, the appellants could take no steps till 1906. They never had any chance of appealing nor did they know of it till 1906. In September 1902 they were no party to the suit. Having regard to this fact there could be no execution against them. As the decree was according to judgment, the Court had to order execution of the decree which it could not amend, being according to judgment but what would be the effect of execution was a different matter. It really ought to have refused execution but it did not. The appellants could not appeal as they were not a party to the suit. Bringing a fresh suit was the only remedy.

[MR. AMEER ALI: The respondents say as you did not appeal you have no right to bring a suit to set aside judgment. The contention is that you ought to have appealed to the Privy Council and as you did not you could not bring an action to have it set aside.]

[SIR GEORGE FARWELL: Why did you not apply for leave to appeal?]

The point was whether the issue on which the decree was passed and in which the appellants were not parties would be binding upon them. They first asked to amend the decree and then not to execute it. The Court said that as the decree stood against them, it must be executed. They then brought a suit to set aside the judgment.

[SIR GEORGE FARWELL: A judgment, however erroneous, is an error of the Court and must be set aside by appeal only.]

It was out of time and they had to come here and throw themselves at the clemency of the Crown and apply for leave to appeal. No appeal had ever been allowed here from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

[MR. AMEER ALI: There has been appeal from the Court of Deputy Commissioner, but that is different.]

Sham Krishen (2), sections 109, 110 and 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and Dube, for the Respondents, contended that the decree was against all parties. If it was wrongly made against some, others who were party to it had no right to appeal now.

[MR. AMEER ALI: If they do not proceed by appeal they have no right to proceed.]

There was an appeal from the decree but the High Court dismissed it in 1905. The decree passed in 1902 was not disputed till 1905. It was held that there was fraud. This was the stage when the precise point raised now ought to have been raised. The case was re-opened and the decree was against all the members of the joint family. The appellants could not now re-open the order by a subsequent suit. It ought to have been done by appeal and by appeal only. It would be inequitable if such a procedure were allowed by any Court.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree of the 23rd February 1911 of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces (Allahabad), which reversed a decree dated the 17th August 1909 of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur. The Court of first instance allowed the plaintiffs' claim. On appeal the claim was dismissed.

The object of the present suit is, by its terms, declared to be three-fold. But upon examination the substantial and only object is for a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants to the effect that the plaintiffs are no party to a certain order which was passed ex facie against them on the 22nd September 1902. Further declarations are asked that the decree is ineffectual, and null and void against them, and so forth. In substance, as has been said, the object of the present suit is for a declaration that a decree pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction on the 22nd September 1902, and bearing to apply to the present appellants, does not in fact apply to them.

The circumstances of the case are these. In 1884 Prag Dat Pande executed a mortgage over certain family property, of which he was himself manager, in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the respondents. He had two sons, Rajwant Prasad and Bhagwant Prasad. In 1897 a suit for sale under the mortgage, and directed against, inter alios, these three persons, was instituted. It was heard ex parte, and on 30th April 1897 a decree was made allowing the plaintiffs' claim. An order absolute was made on the 22nd September 1900.

In 1901, however, (to put aside altogether the proceedings at the instance of Prag Dat, and to keep to the actual relevant challenges made in the course of these litigations), Bhagwant and his two sons obtained an order under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, to have the decree of the 30th April 1897 set aside, on the ground that there had been insufficient service upon them. It was found that the objection taken on the point of service was sound. The Court in India was accordingly confronted with this situation, that in regard to a mortgage over a joint property a suit had been instituted and decree had been taken against all of the joint family, but that one member thereof had been properly served with the suit and another had not. A certain embarrassment arose in consequence, and these proceedings, so protracted, ensued.

So far as Rajwant, the present appellant, was concerned, the original suit was found to have been properly initiated, and the summons properly served. The Courts below adopted the view that the decree obtained in those circumstances was a decree practically final as regards Rajwant, and that with regard to the subsequent stages therein occasioned by Bhagwant's application, Rajwant had no right of compeering. Their Lordships are of opinion, however, that such questions, confusing as they appear, have no relation whatsoever to the point which is to be considered in this appeal.

On the 22nd September 1902 the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment, and he made another decree. Notwithstanding the decree which had already, as has been stated, been pronounced in April 1897, he granted a complete decree to the respondents in this appeal, against all the members of the joint family. The situation that thus arose was that in September 1902 a decree was comprehensively directed against all the joint family of which Rajwant, the appellant, was one member, Rajwant, however, being already bound by the decree which was passed in April 1897.

It would have been clear to the Board that there must have been, and could have been, no intention upon the part of the plaintiffs to put in operation the earlier decree of 1897; but the Board is surprised to observe that on the 23rd June 1903, namely, after the second and comprehensive decree had been obtained, an application was actually made for execution of the decree—not the second and comprehensive one of 1902—but the original decree of 1897. Their Lordships think it right to record that in that application this statement was made:—

"In the beginning the name of Bhagwant Parshad also is entered as a defendant, but on his application this decree was set aside against him, and consequently his name was not entered in the column of judgment-debtors. Another decree has been passed as against him. It will be executed separately."

Under those circumstances their Lordships are not surprised to find that in the year 1906, when an order was asked to make the decree of September 1902 absolute as against all the members of the joint family, the appellants took steps to have the situation cleared up. Accordingly, on the 7th July 1906, that application having been made, Rajwant preferred objections to it. Those objections, however, were disallowed, and the decree was made absolute by the Subordinate

RAJWANT PRASAD PANDE V. RAM RATAN GIR.

Judge on the 3rd November 1906. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that in that suit each and all of the points stated upon this appeal were, or ought to have been, brought before the Court below. But if any doubt existed in their Lordships' minds on that topic it would be removed by a perusal of the terms of the judgments of the Subordinate Judge and of the High Court; because after the Subordinate Judge had made his order on the 3rd November 1906 the objectors, the present appellants, appealed to the High Court, and did so upon the same arguments as they now propound in support of the present appeal to this Board. The grounds of judgment of the High Court make it clear beyond all question that the very points which are now urged were points then taken. The objections were disallowed.

It is contended before their Lordships, however, that this matter cannot be dealt with as res judicata; that it is open to suitors in India, who have exhausted the remedies competent to them, and after final decree has been obtained against them, to institute a fresh suit, or series of suits, the object of which is to declare that a decree, competently and with adequate jurisdiction obtained therein, is not applicable to them, although they are named in that decree. Their Lordships have no sympathy with this procedure. It is radically incompetent.

The objections can be stated seriatim. The objections that are now taken are, first, that the decree of 1897 has never been set aside, and that, accordingly, the later decree of 1902 cannot stand. The answer made is that the former has been impliedly set aside by the latter. The second objection is practically to the same effect. The matter of the second decree was res judicata, and, therefore, they are two decrees against the same Indian subject. The answer made to that, in the view of the High Court, is that there is a merger by the second decree of the first. The third objection is that the latter decree is for a definite sum of money; larger than the sum of money contained in the former. The answer is that the interest accounts for the difference, and, secondly, that the doctrine of merger also applies.

Their Lordships are of opinion that upon none of those points ought they to make a pronouncement in this case. The judgment of the Court below has been particularly canvassed on the doctrine of merger, as there treated. Their Lordships desire to make it clear that in the judgment now given no affirmance is given of the doctrine or application in the High Court of merger, either in a general sense or in the sense of a vox signata. The decree of the 26th February 1908 sufficiently covers each and all of the points which have just been enumerated. The case under which these objections were brought forward was competently before the Court; it had jurisdiction to entertain them.

It is said that the Court below decided the objections wrongly, and that the decree was erroneous. Their Lordships think it is very trite and very familiar that a challenge of the method of the exercise of the jurisdiction of a Court can never in law justify a denial of the existence of such jurisdiction. The former has reference to the merits of the case, and the merits of this case have been in all points directly and substantially determined between the same parties as are now in contention at their Lordships' Bar. The familiar principle is laid down in a series of cases, of which the judgment of Lord Hobhouse in Malkarjun v. Narhari (5) is not a very remote example. Their Lordships cannot countenance the laying aside of all that has happened in previous litigations, the allowing of a process to become final, and the institution of a fresh suit, the object of which is to declare that, although in terms it was applicable to a particular subject of the King who was a party to the proceedings, still, upon a new application to Courts of Justice, a different result should be reached, and it should be decided that the proceedings and decree did not apply to him.

This suit, in their Lordships' judgment, is equivalent to a suit for the rescission and destruction of a former decree of a competent Court. That rescission and destruction could be obtained on the ground of fraud "practised on the Courts below;" but fraud has been eliminated from this case. And accordingly these proceedings are, in their Lordships' judgment, a mere colour for a fresh suit on matters already competently settled by law.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Widow's power to alienate husband's properties in order to pay off his debts—Motive—Alienee, when can claim value of improvements—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 51.

A Hindu widow can validly sell her husband's properties in order to discharge her husband's debts, but she cannot take advantage of the existence of a few debts to sell away her husband's properties for less than their value in order to get ready money into her own hands. [p. 854, col. 2.]

Where a widow alienates her husband's properties with the improper motive of preferring one creditor over another, that creditor is not entitled to profit by such fraud. [p. 855, col. 1.]

A person who cannot in good faith believe that he is absolutely entitled to the properties alienated to him is not a bona fide transferee within the meaning of section 51, Transfer of Property Act, and is not entitled to claim the value of improvements effected by him. [p. 855, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court of North Arcot, in Appeal Suits Nos. 424 and 425 of 1913, preferred against those of the Court of the District Munsif of Madanapalli, in Original Suits Nos. 538 and 539 of 1907.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs, the reversioners of the husband of a Hindu widow, sued to recover properties alienated by her, on the ground that there was no real necessity for such sale. The alienees contended that the sale was valid because the widow is entitled to discharge her husband's debts by an alienation of his properties. The District Munsif found the sale to have been for consideration, but held under the circumstances that it was not for legal necessity. He decreed the plaintiffs' claim but allowed the defendants the value of improvements effected by them to the lands.

On appeal the District Judge of North Arcot confirmed the finding of the District Munsif with regard to necessity and disallowed the defendants' claim for improvements also. The present appeal is against that decree.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and A. Swaminatha Aiyar, for the Appellants, contended (1) that apart from any necessity for the sale, a Hindu widow was competent to alienate her husband's property for the discharge of her husband's debts. (2) When she could alienate her property for the purpose of discharging the barred debts of her husband and for other religious ceremonial purposes, her right to alienate to discharge debts even when there is no legal necessity must be upheld. (3) As to improvements the Privy Council case Kidar Nath v. Mathu Mal (1) was decisive on the point that the alienee was entitled to the value of improvements.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents, contended that the question was one of fact and that it was not a case for interference in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants are the appellants in these two connected second appeals. The suit was brought by the reversioners after the death of a Hindu widow for possession of properties improperly alienated by her to the appellants. The alienations are evidenced by the documents Exhibits XII, XIII and XIV, dated 5th February 1876.

The lower Appellate Court came to the following findings of fact:—

(a) Of the Rs. 1,600, the total purchase-money mentioned in these three documents, about Rs. 1,300 went towards the discharge of debts which had been incurred by the last male owner. (See Exhibits I, II series, IV series, VII, VIII and XVI.)

(b) Rupees 115 was due under a document, Exhibit XI, executed by the widow herself and Rs. 175 was paid in cash.

Out of the Rs. 1,300 which went towards the discharge of the husband's debts, Rs. 1,200 was due under two usufructuary mortgage-bonds and a conditional sale-deed (see Exhibits I, II and IV), which had been executed for a total principal sum of Rs. 2,100. This sum of Rs. 2,100 had become reduced to Rs. 1,200 owing to the very favourable terms contained in the two usufructuary mortgage-deeds, namely, that the usufruct of the land should go wholly in satisfaction of the principal amounts without any liability on the mortgagor's part to pay interest unless he obstructed the enjoyment of the lands by the mortgagees.

The lower Courts found that there was no necessity for selling the lands (which had been mortgaged for a sum of Rs. 1,900) for the low price of Rs. 1,000 in order to discharge debts, which were being gradually wiped out from the usufruct, that the widow's real object was not to discharge her husband's debts but to get some ready cash into her own hands, as was shown by her conduct throughout during the space of about eight years after her husband's death (such conduct including the sale even of her husband's dwelling houses), that the defendants could not be treated as bona fide alienees, that is, alienees who were ignorant of the widow's real object and that, therefore, the alienations were invalid against the reversioners. The learned District Judge further disallowed the defendants' claim for compensation for the improvements made by them on the lands sold to them,

I do not think that the appellants are entitled to question in second appeal the finding of fact by both the Courts that there was no necessity for the sales made by the widow and that the defendants knew that there was no necessity.
